Pacific Coast Marine

At a meeting of the Pilot Commissioners to be held at San Francisco the first Monday in June, a pilot is to be appointed to replace the late Captain Charles Korts.

The contract for repairs to the motor-ship "Santa Flavia" has been let to the Winslow Marine Railway and Shipbuilding Company at Seattle. The "Santa Flavia" was slightly damaged recently when she went aground off the coast of Peru.

After many trials and tribulations while confined through legal moorings in the harbor of Honolulu, the schooner "Zampa" has departed the island port, bound for San Francisco. Last February the schooner put into Honolulu leaking. Several attempts were made to get to sea after minor repairs and the vessel each time was forced to return. Finally the crew libeled the vessel for wages and she was sold at public auction.

Laden with a cargo of merchandise from the Atlantic Coast, the steamship "Arizonian," Williams, Dimond & Co., arrived at San Francisco from Boston and New York. After unloading a portion of her freight, the ship proceeded to Seattle and Portland, thence to Honolulu. The "Arizonian's" crew, having been signed on the Atlantic Coast, she will not be affected by the strike until her return to New York. The "Texan," operated by the same company, is due here May 25.

The United States Hydrographic Office has advised marine circles that the master of the steamer "Admiral Schley" reported sighting two small masts standing upright, one ten feet and the other fifteen feet, out of water with rigging attached, in latitude 45:37, longitude 124:44. It is believed that the masts protrude from a submerged vessel, possibly the wreck of some schooner.

Bringing a full list of passengers from the Antipodes, the Oceanic Steamship Company's liner "Sonoma" arrived in San Francisco last week. Among her passengers were many notables from Australia, en route to England on annual tour. Captain Trask, skipper of the liner, reported an uneventful voyage, with excellent weather prevailing throughout. Deck games and sports enlivened the voyage for the passengers, while many social functions were held in the salon in the evenings.

Secretary of Commerce Hoover has ordered the customs officials at San Francisco to secure full and complete information from the Marine Exchange relative to all American vessels, arriving, sailing or tied up at San Francisco harbor. It was stated that the data was needed to permit the cabinet officer an opportunity to make an official survey of the marine situation in his desire to determine what effect the maritime tie-up is having on American commerce and trade.

The truth of the adage that "It's an ill wind that blows nobody good," still holds good. One of the luckiest accidents that ever happened to any steamship company, according to Richard Prosser, assistant coast manager of The Williams Line, was recent labor trouble aboard the steamers "Willhilo" and "Willpolo," which occurred before the big marine strike. Because of this early mix-up with the crews, the Williams Line officials found it necessary to sign new articles, which at that date were at the old rate, and by this manuever their steamers will ply from this coast to the Atlantic and return before the crews will leave the vessels.

The Danish motor-ship "Fionia" arrived at San Francisco from Copenhagen recently with a cargo of European goods, among which was a large quantity of window glass from Antwerp. Much speculation was caused along the waterfront as to the disposal of fifty cases of champagne, another item on her manifest. The total cargo was two thousand tons. The "Fionia" will be followed in a few weeks by another motor-ship, the "Panama," also sailing from Copenhagen, and one of the more recently built vessels operated by the company. The "Fionia" is comparatively an old-timer, having been here four years ago. The local agents are the East Asiatic Company.

Foreign steamship companies operating out of Coast ports to the Orient who have been restricted from carrying passengers or freight from the mainland to Hawaii or Honolulu to American ports because of United States regulations, are being granted this privilege by special permit, due to the tourist congestion at Honolulu and the marine strike. This lifting of the ban is believed, in local shipping circles, to be only temporary, and the maritime law of Uncle Sam, giving favor to American vessels, it is believed, will be re-established as soon as the situation warrants. The lines affected are the Japanese T. K. K. Line and the China Mail Steamship Company.

Charter rates from Portland to the United Kingdom range from 58 shillings, 9 pence to 65 shillings. The low-water mark in grain charters for the week is reported for an unnamed steamer, which has been fixed to take ten thousand tons of wheat or flour from the north Pacific to the United Kingdom for May loading. Charter rates for other steamers previously listed for Portland loading are as follows: "Benlidi," 62 shillings, 3 pence; "Alkkmaar" (Dutch), 62 shillings, 6 pence; "Formosa," 60 shillings. The highest charter rate is 70 shillings for an unnamed steamer of eleven thousand tons deadweight capacity for May loading of a wheat cargo from the Columbia river to the United Kingdom.

Charles E. Ware, Jr., president of the North Atlantic and Western Steamship Company, has issued the following statement: "There have been persistent rumors on contemplated combination of steamship companies engaged in the intercoastal trade to the effect that the North Atlantic and Western Steamship Company would consolidate in a new company with two other lines at present operating in this trade. It is not the intention of the Nawsco Lines to enter any such combine. The North Atlantic and Western Steamship Company was the first intercoastal line organized since the war to operate solely between Boston and Philadelphia and the principal cities of the Pacific Coast, and has had twenty-five sailings from the two Atlantic ports since February 28, 1920. Our company is giving a dependable, reliable service between the communities which it serves and this service will be increased from time to time as conditions warrant. The company is sure that it can best serve the shipping public of both coasts by retaining its own identity and continuing its independence."

A new record is transpacific service was established when the Pacific Mail steamer "Golden State" entered San Francisco bay thirteen days, seven hours and forty-eight minutes after leaving Yokohama, exclusive of the time spent at Honolulu. Her average speed during the return run was 16.62 knots per hour, the ship's officers stating that consumption of oil was under that generally required for such speed. The fastest run in proportion to the distance between ports was made from Yokohama to Honolulu, the total time being eight days, nine hours and thirty-seven minutes, with an average speed of 17.7 knots. Her steaming time from Honolulu was four days and twenty-two hours, a record equalled only by that of the Great Northern, which completed the voyage in eighteen hours under the time of the "Golden State."

Approximately six million feet of lumber recently cleared from Aberdeen and Hoaquim mills in three big carriers. They are the steamers "Colin H. Livingstone," "Willpolo" and "Artigas." All will go to the East coast. All are of the 3800?ton class. The "Artigas" loaded at the Anderson and Middleton dock, while the other two vessels took on their cargo at the National mill. None of the ships are affected by the marine strike, as they shipped their crews for a round trip before leaving the East coast.

Ten per cent reductions in all Puget Sound towing rates except for harbor work are provided in an application filed with the State Department of Public Works by the Northwestern Towboat Owners' Association. The reductions will cover all log towing on the Sound and will go into effect June 1 if necessary permission is granted by the State Department. The new tariff, it is said, will virtually restore the Puget Sound towing business to a pre-war basis. Members of the association say it was adopted as a means of helping to stimulate the logging and lumber milling industries.

Despite the slump in world trade during the past year, San Francisco's harbor has maintained an even keel, surpassing any other port in the United States proportionately in business and leading by far any Pacific Coast port, according to a survey just completed. Much credit for this generous share of world trade into San Francisco harbor is given by shipping interests to members of the State Harbor Commission, who have instituted many port facilities encouraging "shipment via San Francisco." According to tables prepared by harbor experts just made public, foreign tonnage at this port for 1920 between the two leading coast ports is as follows: San Francisco, 3,505,680; Seattle, 1,410,415. For the three months of 1921 the tabulation gives these figures: San Francisco, 602,569; Seattle, 194,722. The total yearly tonnage at San Francisco port, domestic and foreign, for 1920, was 9,158,369, or nearly 4,000,000 tons greater than that which patronized Seattle. John H. McCallum, president of the board, and his two colleagues, Harry H. Cosgriff and Frederick S. Moody, declared that San Francisco harbor, possessing forty modern piers, with its belt railroad connections, sheltered anchorage and rail terminals, has potential possibilities for future expansion and are busy arranging their plans accordingly.

MORE THAN FIFTEEN PER CENT

It has been the general custom for seamen to ship under signed or tentative agreements with the shipowners; they have dealt with their employes collectively, and the right to so bargain, of late years, has not been questioned except by a few anti-labor employers.

The operation of this system has been of great benefit to vessel operators, due to the fact that their ships have never suffered delay; they have not been subject to demands of man hunters, and they have invariably had their vessels manned by willing and competent crews.

During the war period, when shipyards became a refuge for ex-pugilists, ex-bartenders, ball players and others from non-essential activities; and while thousands from higher social stratas were swarming governmental offices at Washington, D. C., and other places; the seamen were actively engaged in their calling. The extra hazard of mines and submarine, added to those regularly encountered, were taken as a matter of course.

As the war progressed and the cry was raised for ships, and more ships, the steel combine, shipbuilding firms and other like industries extracted of our Government in its extremity exorbitant and criminal profits.

Many shipyard workers, employed through influence, received wages based on a cost plus plan, which gave at least temporary prosperity.

These were also the halcyon days for shipowners, and rates were boosted for all the traffic would bear, while the value of ocean tonnage increased by leaps and bounds. Shipping interests waxed fat beyond the dreams of avarice, on the necessity of the times.

In striking contrast to the conscienceless profiteering of ship magnates, the seamen continued in performance of their duties, accepting the slightest wage increase and most moderate revision in conditions.

Americans sought the sea in answer to the Nation's necessity and attraction of fair conditions, thereby filling a longfelt want and adding a source of strength to our maritime force, until the percentage of Americans in our Merchant Marine has passed the eighty mark (according to the latest figures made public by the Shipping Board).

Now that the emergency has ceased to exist and readjustment is under way, the seamen, who sought and received least from unusual conditions, are subjected to the most heartless aggression and unfair treatment.

In the most autocratic and arbitrary manner their earnings are cut in the aggregate of 40 per cent; their hours of labor lengthened from eight to twelve per day; their right to bargain collectively denied; their constitutional rights as citizens usurped, and every protective feature of laws pertaining to their welfare violated or ignored. To be exact, they face complete degradation to the status of a slave.

The fact that such conditions will never be accepted by Americans, who will be driven from the sea, and our Merchant Marine eventually destroyed, is no deterrent to unscrupulous employers.

Their plans are far-reaching and have been long in formation. By clever manipulation they have inveigled into their combination the United States Shipping Board, which is induced to bear the brunt of attack upon the American Merchant Marine personnel. The Emergency Fleet Corporation has become members of the American Steamship Owners' Mutual Protection and Indemnity Association, Inc., which insures its members against losses not covered in ordinary insurance.

Controlling approximately four-sevenths of the tonnage, the Emergency Fleet Corporation will be required to foot four-sevenths of any expenses incurred in fighting labor organizations or emasculating laws in the courts.

Therefore, the most important consideration for a ruthless attack upon American seamen is provided by a bureau supported from the taxation of the whole people. Some of the pennies mulcted through the agency of tax upon children's cornucopias are available for degradation of our Nation's merchant seamen.

The ultimatium delivered to the seamen is brutal in its nature, eliminating everything gained by struggle and sacrifice during the last twenty-five years.

Although Admiral Benson and associated shipowners have endeavored to make the public believe that the issue rests on a 15 per cent cut in wages, they know the falsity of their contentions; but inasmuch as they control all the avenues of publicity and medium of propaganda, backed by influence of the Government, the seamen are helpless to combat such unfair misrepresentation of the case.

To say that seamen enjoy any actual regulated day's work at sea is technically wrong, inasmuch as they are subject to call at any and all hours of the twenty-four in case of emergency, therefore their whole time is given to the vessel.

The three-watch system, however, gives more time for sleep, cleanliness or recreation, and means eight hours' work at ship's duties or labor in every twenty-four.

The employers propose to substitute the two-watch system where the three-watch now operates, making actual working time a twelve-hour day instead of eight at sea, and a nine-hour day in port. They propose to eliminate pay for overtime without discontinuing the overtime work.

Elimination of overtime pay alone will cut earnings of seamen from 15 to 40 per cent, according to the type of vessel, class of trade and nature of run. Several holidays are also to be erased from the list of days off.

It has been possible for ambitious seamen, desirous of advancement or maintaining a home, to make an average of $120 to $150 per month in certain classes of trade, where considerable overtime is worked at convenience of the vessels. Elimination of overtime pay would cut their earnings to $72.50 per month, while the proposed arbitrary lengthening of hours would mean that they must perform the same amount of work for the ship.

In addition, it is proposed to deny to seamen the right of organization or to permit them to receive a union member as a visitor aboard ship.

The claim that the seafarers' unions are resisting a mere 15 per cent cut in wages is rankest subterfuge and intended to impress the public with a belief that the seamen are obstinate or unreasonable.

The employers' propositions are brutal and degrading; impossible of acceptance by any free or self-respecting individual, and it is for failure to submit to such conditions that members of the seafarers' unions are locked out, the American Merchant Marine given a serious setback and industry hampered throughout the land.

In justice to a few fair-minded vessel operators, it must be understood that all do not agree with these ruthless efforts to saddle such degrading conditions on American seafarers. There is also good reason for belief that some employers might have been coerced by tactics of the American Steamship Owners or the despotic acts of Admiral Benson.

"SHIPPING REGISTER'S" VENOM

In efforts to degrade seamen, employers sometimes stoop very low, and often resort to the use of filthy tools.

A publication in San Francisco, known as the Shipping Register and claiming to be devoted to maritime interests, has been in eruption, editorially, for the past month, and the vile effusions leave no doubt as to the source from which they emanate.

The issue of April 30 contained scurrilous attacks upon the character of all longshoremen. The seafarers' lock-out provided opening for an attack on seamen the following week. The editor, having already settled the controversy by compromise, elaborated on how much further the pay was to be cut with dire threats. May 14 brought forth insults hurled at the licensed officers, and the current issue surpasses all others as an odious example of those things which disgrace American journalism. No effort is spared in the tirade of abuse hurled at the men who go down to the sea in ships.

Lickspittle cringing to financial interests, and venomous defamation of seamen pregnates the filth that exudes from the vicious sheet. Commenting on the fact that the port of San Francisco is hardest hit by the lock-out, the effusion continues:

"Captain Robert Dollar was wise when he put most of his ships under an alien flag. He pays his deck and fire room crew $10 Mex. per month. On his ships there are members of the crew—coolies—who have not set foot ashore for five years. They work conscientiously enough for say, ten years. During that time they have given better service than the average alleged white man in the same position. Then they 'retire' from the sea, buy a farm in China from their savings and become land barons. If not that, they are promoted to be comprador and wax fat on cumshaw."

We were always cognizant of the intense desire for coolie labor on American ships, and it has been manifested by the shipowning fraternity on all occasions; but how the policy can harmonize with the Shipping Board's hypocritical bombast about an American personnel in American vessels is hard of understanding.

We were always suspicious—owing to the manner in which the graft buzzards hovered around—that there was considerable cumshaw in connection with Chinese crews on American ships and have patiently waited till now for the confession. The idea of white crews is so repugnant to the writer that he elaborates further:

"If we are forced to have foreigners of un-washed procilivities to man our ships on deck, at least let us not be overawed by them. Would it not be possible to arrange so that the Sailors' Union has not so much power in Washington? Just as long as more than 50 per cent of deck men on American ships are aliens, why not fix the laws so that ships can be manned at a rate of pay which will enable owners to compete with other countries?

"And to get down to the underneath bilge layer of truth. What chance has an American boy in the forecastle? We know, as everybody knows who has had anything to do with ships—nil. From the frozen North, whence most of our Pacific Coast sailors come, there is brought an innate mental Bolshevism—an essence of 'I don't wash, it is true, but I am just as good as anybody on the bridge,' that disrupts ship discipline."

Imbued with inordinate desire to assassinate the character of seamen, the editor seems to disregard figures recently released from the Shipping Board showing American personnel of the Merchant Marine 81 per cent.

The article closes with a final attack on the Seamen's Act and the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association.

It has been stated that certain attributes of animals can be noted in individuals; the odorous editorial of the Shipping Register suggests an unpopular one around that particular publishing office.

It is noticeable that persons who lend themselves to slander find difficulty in tracing their ancestors back one generation. Like Topsy, they "just grow" until someone picks them up for use.

They are fed filthy lucre and spew out poison.

Such intellectual wantons seem to be at all times available, they give the service for which they are paid; therefore, space is wasted by extensive notice of such journalistic nondescripts.

REAL RUSSIAN RECOGNITION

Those misguided individuals who suffer agony at the thought of American recognition of Soviet Russia will not receive any great amount of comfort from the following late press dispatch from London:

"The initial judicial decision affected by the British government's tacit recognition of the Soviet government as the de facto government of Russia was rendered when the Court of Appeals reversed a previous finding of the high court in the disputed ownership of a quantity of veneer and other wood material shipped from Russia under a contract made by Leonid Krassin, the Soviet Trade Commissary.

"The goods concerned had been confiscated by the Soviet government in 1919 and were sold to a firm of British importers last August. The British courts found the original owners entitled to the goods, as the Soviet government had not been recognized by the British government and consequently had not the right of confiscation.

"The Court of Appeals found, however, that since the Soviet government had been recognized as the de facto government of Russia, it was not within the jurisdiction of the British courts to consider the justice or morality of the confiscatory order."

Due to the fact that the particular commercial circle which worships the "divine rights of kings" or property is closely interlocked with British financial interests, they will have bitter medicine to swallow. They now find themselves in the position of a man on a fence, with the bull on one side and the dog on the other. However, the far-sighted and liberal Americans have long since seen the justice of Russia's claim for recognition, therefore the troubles of reactionaries are their own.

As reward for tenacity and encouragement toward further efforts, the Fourteenth Annual Convention of the P. C. D., I. L. A., in session at Tacoma, Wash., determined to give support to the longshoremen of San Francisco. The following resolution was adopted by the convention:

Whereas, Local 38-33, Riggers and Stevedores, of San Francisco, have been locked out since October, 1919; and

Whereas, The members of that Local have carried on the fight against the employers of that port, who have used every means within their power to disrupt Local 38-33 by organizing a "blue book" organization, dictated to by the San Francisco Waterfront Employers' Association; and

Whereas, Not only is this persecution affecting our membership in that port, but this intolerable situation must of necessity reflect itself in the various ports on the Coast; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Fourteenth Annual Convention assembled, express its appreciation of the splendid fight against said organized forces and instructs the District Secretary to write the International President demanding that he take action with a view to assisting that Local, and that the incoming Executive Board be instructed to use all the means at the command of the District to assist Local 38-33 in their fight for their existence.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

"OLD SUMMERTIME"

We've sailed the seas together, mate,
Old-timers, you and I,
Unmindful of the weather we Endured to live or die.

We crossed the Western ocean wild,
A tyrant in command,
And our fingers bled till the sails were red,
On the banks of Newfoun'land.

We slanted through the brimming Trades,
Where storm clouds seldom frown,
We raged the Roaring Forties through,
And Run the Easting down.

We sunk the Pole star 'neath the rim,
And raised the Southern Cross,
Where fitful Jack o' lanterns glow,
Nor did we count it loss.

And off the pitch of the dreary Horn,
Where blinding hailstones fell,
We still were pards on the groaning yards,
And the sea birds heard our yell.

I'll not recount how deeds were done,
When we were in our prime,
But I think of you, as I do of few,
My dear "Old Summertime."

And I tell the world this careless tale,
Because I love you well,
Your voice is vast as a trumpet blast,
But clear as a silver bell.

And when I grasp your hardened hand,
Old comrade it is bliss.
Your grasp is strong as an iron thong,
But true as a Maiden's Kiss.

Where shall I find a stauncher friend,
A spirit more sublime.
My last and only sou-markee,
For you, "Old Summertime."

Fraternally,

J. H. W.

THE SEAMEN'S CASE

The present controversy with the organized shipowners, including the United States Shipping Board, is in its material aspects, in the number of men and the magnitude of the interests concerned, and the far-reaching and disturbing character of the issues involved, the most serious and complex outbreak of its kind that has ever occurred in American maritime history.

The case for the owners has been repeatedly set forth, but the point of view of the organized seamen has been but vaguely understood, even by the best informed citizens. The seamen maintain that the present lock-out has been forced upon them by the organized shipowners as a matter of opportunity, not from any existing necessity. For the past four months great merchant fleets have been tied up and placed out of commission owing to general business and commercial stagnation. As a consequence approximately 40,000 American seamen have been beached and left without employment or means of subsistence. We believe that if all American ships were in commission at the present freight rates there would be no question of a reduction in wages. We, therefore, submit that the shipowners' attitude is inspired by selfish motives, and to that extent unjustifiable.

The American shipowners insist that the only way to meet foreign competition is to reduce seamen's wages approximately to the level of European standards. But against this fallacious proposition we contend that no matter how low the wages of American seamen are reduced, the European and Asiatic shipowners can, and will, press them still lower. This is possible because, under the La Follette Act, American seamen are free citizens, while the seamen of all other nations are serfs. Moreover, continuance of a policy of lowering wages would very soon drive all American seamen from our merchant marine, leaving our ships to be manned entirely by foreign elements, as was the case prior to the enactment of the La Follette law in 1915. Thus our merchant fleet would revert to control of the nations which manned it, and the American flag would again be driven from the seas.

The organized seamen further submit that the only way to offset unfair competition from foreign ships is to reduce expenses, not by cutting wages, which constitute but 7 or 8 per cent of all operating costs, but by economizing in the use of supplies, such as fuel, provisions, paints, etc., by abolishing extravagance and graft, by laying off official deadheads and otherwise reducing overhead charges, and finally by insisting on the strict enforcement of the La Follette Seamen's Act so far as it applies to foreign ships making use of our ports.

It has been reckless disregard of the La Follette law that has enabled foreign shipowners to secure competitive advantages complained of now by American owners. It has been the disregard of the language clause contained in Section 13 of the La Follette law that has tied the American ship Martha Washington up at her dock in far-off Buenos Aires during the past six weeks, and it was the same trouble that involved the same ship in difficulties with her firemen at Montevideo six months ago, and culminated in a criminal action in New York, when thirty-nine Spanish firemen were prosecuted for mutiny, only two of whom understood any English whatever.

The American merchant marine cannot succeed and remain American without full protection of the La Follette law. But the law itself cannot be enforced without the loyal support and earnest co-operation of those most vitally concerned, namely the American shipowners and their employes.

If the associated Shipowners of the United States and the Shipping Board will pledge their aid and sincere co-operation in enforcing the maritime laws of our own country, for the protection of our commerce and seamen alike, all other matters in dispute can be amicably adjusted by mutual concession and the lockout will terminate within twenty-four hours.

Otherwise the struggle must go on until justice is achieved by the organized seamen.

JAMES H. WILLIAMS.

TRUTH AND WARNING

In order that the general public may be informed of the cause of the lock-out that has befallen the Merchant Marine from coast to coast, the local representatives of the Seamen's Unions beg to draw attention to, and explain the facts of the controversy, which will in time affect the price of commodities, and if the employers should win out, affect every workingman and his family throughout the country.

Unfortunately, the public has up to the time of the war, never paid much attention to our Merchant Marine. Although the United States was one upon a time quite a sea power in the Merchant Marine field, foreign shipowners and foreign nations, by cheap labor and unfair competition, caused the owners of the old world renown shipping firms to sell out and so gradually only a small percentage of the coastwise craft remained under the American Flag.

The world war changed all this. Ships, ships and more ships was the cry, and ships were built, some excellent craft, and the majority useless hulks that are now laying in some back harbors rotting away. We do not intend to discuss this matter here, however.

The costly experience of the war has taught us all that we need a Merchant Marine under our own flag, so that we may be able to bring our own merchandise to the ends of the world and return with whatever we need here.

Admiral Mahan says in his "Seapower": "Seapower is in the seamen, the ships are their tools." So the public can readily see that we need not only ships, but also sailors, and we need American sailors and American officers in American ships.

That is just what the Seamen's Unions have strived to do, to get American sailors, and in order to make sailoring a vocation and offer an inducement to the bright boy to man these ships the union has tried to obtain a living wage and decent conditions.

Only a very few years ago the wages of a sailor were $30 per month, the working hours from fourteen to eighteen a day and the living conditions absolutely unfit for any son of an American mother to live under.

Eight to sixteen men were crowded into a small, unventilated, dark room, called the forecastle, and compelled to sleep in bunks three tiers high.

The food was scant, coarse and ill-cooked. The discipline of the ships was far more strict than in any army or navy, and the sailors were never their own masters, either afloat or ashore.

Organization and tremendous efforts have changed all this. The enactment of the Seamen's Act has made life safer and more comfortable for the sailor. Wages are $95 per month and the working hours in port, at least, are the same as ashore in any decent employ, namely, eight hours per day.

Now, the Shipping Board, as a branch of the Government, and the Shipowners' Association are trying to bring back the conditions of years ago. The wages are to be about $65 per month. No overtime, and the working hours at sea twelve hours and in port ten hours. A set of "working rules" has been drawn up by them which makes the seamen practically slaves again. Under these new conditions, can we ask our boys to go to sea? To make sea life a vocation, can we ask them to keep the flag on the oceans? Can they marry and support a family on $65 per month? Will there be any time left for them to study, to improve their education? Will there be any time left for them to play? Would you, mothers or fathers, send your sons to sea to face the storms and the dangers of the deep? Would you encourage your neighbor's son to become a seaman?

If the Shipping Board and the shipowners have their way, the foreigners will again sail and lord over the sea. We will become a dependent nation. Take warning, you people of America; take warning, you liberty-loving men and women, another war may come and find us without seamen for our merchant ships, and the blame will lay upon the shoulders of a few old men, who are now trying to blind your point of view. The end of the American Merchant Marine will be near, very near, and you will have to depend on foreign ships to bring you your needs and perhaps to bring your boys back, who knows from where.

We plead with you, men and women, not only for ourselves, but also for the future of this our beloved country. Give us your moral support and a square deal.

CHARLES MARTELL, 829,
Providence, R. I.

HAITI SPEAKS

No graver indictment of an American Administration has ever been made than is contained in the temperately written thirty-thousand-word Memoir of the Delegates to the United States of the Haitian Patriotic Union outlining the history of the American Occupation in Haiti which was presented to the Department of State and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week. Despite its moderation, it more than confirms every charge made in The Nation in the last year. The first official pronouncement from the Haitians themselves—for a rigid military censorship sealed their lips for five years—it establishes that our conquest of Haiti was neither justified under any principle of international law nor sanctioned by any conceivable necessity. It should finally put an end to all the excuses alleged in our defense—such as the protection of American interests, restoration of order, suppression of banditry, bad Haitian finances, etc. The report again makes plain that the local revolutionary disturbances of July 28, 1915, merely furnished a long-sought pretext for intervention, that our interests were in no wise imperiled, that far from there being disorder when the marines landed it was their brutalities which created and then perpetuated the previously non-existent "Caco-ism," a banditry not of crime, but of revolt against the alien invasion. The state of the Haitian finances is lucidly set forth—they were by no means in a tangle; the external and internal debt of the country had always been fully paid until the American Occupation inaugurated an era of mismanagement (to put it charitably) quite unprecedented under Haitian control. The appended list of atrocities it is difficult for an American to read without shame and horror. It does not purport to be a complete record. On the contrary, it is limited to the comparatively few cases called, in writing, to the attention of the Naval Court of Inquiry sent to Haiti last fall by Secretary Daniels to offset Senator Harding's campaign attack, and published, upon the refusal of the Court to consider them, in the newspapers of Port-au-Prince. Murder of women and children, wholesale killing of prisoners, torture with red-hot irons, the "water cure," arson, robbery, violence of every kind—they constitute an everlasting stain on American honor.

If this report does not arouse the American people then its conscience is indeed dead. The Nation cannot believe that it is and that all our professions of good faith, decency, fair play, all our great and honorable traditions upheld for nearly a century and a half, can thus be lightly cast on the scrap-heap. Here is a small and inoffensive country, next to our own the oldest republic in this hemisphere, self-governing for 111 years, a republic which achieved one sort of freedom fifty years before our own (for it abolished slavery when it became independent), made the victim of wholly wanton, brutal, militaristic conquest. These are facts that cannot be whitewashed, propagandized, or lied away. It matters little what President Harding said at the foot of the statue of Bolivar, or what fine phrases President Wilson uttered. What really counts—the acid test—is what we have done and what we shall do to little Haiti, the one country which, by a curious irony, made a really substantial contribution to the cause of Bolivar and South American freedom while we stood aloof.—The Nation.

SAFE BIND, SAFE FIND

Commercial houses in England are much concerned over the epidemic of pilfering which is prevalent at the present time. A recent issue of the Huddersfield Chamber of Commerce "Journal" contains an article on pilferage and packing, in which attention is drawn to the systematic thieving in connection with goods in transit, and the question is raised as to what extent packers are responsible:

"It is safe to say that if all goods, at all times, were as much at the mercy of thieves as are 'goods in transit' the business world would have to put up its shutters, because it could not carry on." While losses are directly due to thieves, it is suggested that it is nevertheless a fact that very often "the sight of means to do ill deeds makes ill deeds done," and one fault of present-day shipping practice is that it affords many opportunities to "make a thief." The object of packing is not merely for protection against damage, but for security against theft, and the important bearing of bad packing not only upon the loss of goods by theft, but also upon the settlement of claims for such losses is largely overlooked.

While there are many examples of faulty packing that help the thief and free the various authorities from responsibility, they are roughly divided, the Journal states, into a few leading types:

"One of the most common faults in packing is the use of second-hand cases, which are, of course, comparatively easy to open without detection. The result is that, as officers can not judge by appearance as to whether goods have been taken out before the cases reached the ship, they are obliged to give a 'repacked' receipt, which means that no claim will be paid by the ship for loss or damage by thieves.

"Another common fault is the use of new cases with weak lids, protected, it may be, by extra battens around the edge, but the nails of which are driven straight down without clinching, with the result that the top boards drop and the nails 'draw.'

"Cases otherwise satisfactory but not bound with hoop-iron are also frequently used, and are often quite unable to meet the ordinary inside and outside strains. The nails become sprung with the few handlings on train and wharf, and the goods are exposed by their own weight. For these cases, which offer a distinct temptation to the pilferer, the ship will only sign an 'insufficiently packed' receipt, which prevents any claim for theft.

"Other cases are bound with soft hoop-iron, which actually breaks in handling on and off the freight cars and before the ship is reached. Cases with openings similar to crates in which hooks can easily be inserted, and cases so frail as to be unfit for ordinary handling, are other familiar examples of packing which not only throws the loss but most of the blame for pilferage upon the shippers themselves."

The "Journal" offers several practical suggestions for remedying the evil:

"1. Don't use second-hand cases unless they are strong and good and unless they contain articles not likely to attract thieves.

"2. See that all cases have good ends and that all nails are properly clinched.

"3. Bind all cases with strong hoop-iron at ends and also around middle.

"4. Don't use frail cases.

"5. Use only hoop-iron that will stand the strain of ordinary rough handling. 'Scrap' all soft hoop-iron."

WHAT NEXT?

Serious experiments as to the utility of alcohol as fuel are being carried on in British Guiana. This alcohol, extracted from sugar cane, would normally be made into rum, but the present state of the foreign market for this product has caused a large surplus to accumulate. While the results of the experiments have not yet been made public in detail, available information indicates very favorable returns. The possible production of commercial alcohol from this source has been estimated at from four million to five million gallons.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd.)

Seamen Are Solid

Three hundred pickets of the International Seamen's Union of America and of the National Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association are under arrest in Atlantic and Gulf ports, at the end of the second week of the maritime strike. A large number of others have been taken into court and have either been fined or released. Injunctions are out against the pickets in Baltimore and New Orleans. The men now under arrest are showing a disposition to stay in jail in order that the strike funds shall not be depleted by the payment of fines. Pacific Coast shipowners have appealed to the President to declare a "national emergency" and take over from them the job of furnishing strikebreakers for their vessels.

These are some of the high lights of the seamen's dispute with the shipowners and the United States Shipping Board, as reported by Andrew Furuseth for the Seamen and by William S. Brown for the Marine Engineers. As presidents of these two organizations, respectively, Furuseth and Brown are in continual communication with the strikers in all the ports. They are optimistic as to the outcome. Every ship on the Pacific Coast is reported strike-bound, except the three liners of the China Mail which have been signed up by the unions at the old rate of wages. On the Atlantic the few ships that have been sent out from New York and Baltimore have gone short-handed, with unskilled men, and several of them are already in the repair docks, very much the worse for the experience.

Benson's Un-American Acts

Admiral Benson, who will surrender the chairmanship of the Shipping Board on July 1 to Jas. H. Farrell, president of the United States Steel Corporation, has dropped his pretense of sympathy with the unions and has seized six ships which the United Transport Company of New York was operating with union crews at the old rate of wages. He declares that he will take away from the operators all ships owned by the Board, where the operators make terms with the union that do not provide for the 15 per cent cut in wages which he has ordered.

As almost every steamship company in the United States is now operating one or more ships to which the Board holds title, this order by Benson is an ultimatum to shipping companies to join the fight to smash the unions or get out of the business.

Many tricks to alienate public sympathy from the strikers have already been attempted. For example, the Seattle Chamber of Commerce has appealed to the Navy Department to furnish engineers to man ships to save Alaska from a food shortage. The unions promptly offered to furnish the entire crew for a ship for such a relief expedition, provided the private owners would furnish the ship on the same terms.

Benson announces that "all negotiations with the leaders of the personnel of the merchant marine have definitely terminated." He is now appealing to the strikers to go back at lower pay, as a matter of patriotic obedience to his judgment. Thus far they have not taken the suggestion seriously. Instead, every incoming ship is adding to the number of striking engineers, firemen, seamen, cooks, stewards and radio operators.

A Serious Question

What will be the outcome of the manning of vessels with strikebreakers of unknown skill or industrial views is a puzzle yet to be answered. Hitherto the companies have feared the "anarchists" and the "wobblies" who were supposed to swarm in the chief seaports, waiting their chance to destroy the delicate machinery of the passenger and freight ships. Experienced and settled men, such as made up the membership of the recognized unions, were trusted to protect the owners' property from damage. The other element was suspected of a taste for sabotage. Now the unknown element is the only one which can be induced to take a vessel out. It will be months before the cost to the shipowner involved in this change of personnel—where a change is possible—will be known.

Viewed broadly, there can be no doubt that the American merchant marine has lost its one great chance to come back into power upon the seas. Tens of thousands of Americans, driven ashore by the wage slashing and the hostile attitude of the Harding administration, are going inland from the ports. They will not soon return. The skilled seamanship built up in five years is melting away in as many months. Billions of dollars, invested by the Government in new ships, will have been rendered worthless when Admiral Benson and President Harding have logically carried out their policy.

Policy of Reaction

Nor is the outlook any more favorable with reference to other industrial issues with which the administration is dealing. All moves are reactionary; none are progressive.

Take, for example, the announcement made after the cabinet meeting, this week, that the Census Bureau is to take over, for the rest of the year, the collection and issuance of figures on retail and wholesale prices, and on the cost of living. These figures, compiled and issued under the law by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, in the Department of Labor, are the measuring-stick by which all rates of wages are adjusted. They are recognized as accurate and up-to-date, and they have proved the most formidable weapon of defense of the unions in all the disputes over proposed reductions in pay in this country during the present year.

Secretary Hoover and his Census Bureau are now to control the making of this yard-stick of wages, at least for a few months, when wage scales are being hammered down. The pretext given out by the White House is that Congress has "failed to provide funds" for the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which alone has the equipment to gather figures that can be relied upon. The Census Bureau, which has no experience in this work, has miraculously been supplied by Congress with abundant funds!

We are told, by men close in the secrets of the White House, that the Railroad Labor Board is about to order a 20 per cent reduction in wages for all railroad employes in the classified service. We are also informed that coal miners' wages and the wages of all building trades workers are going to be brought down. As the United Mine Workers' wage agreement in the bituminous fields runs until next spring, the question arises as to how the operators are going to frame an excuse for violation of that agreement.

A Doubtful Visitor

Labor officials have been much interested in the possible errand of J. H. Thomas, general secretary of the British railwaymen's union, in this country. Thomas is scheduled to attend the Denver convention of the A. F. of L. next month as a fraternal delegate, but that does not explain his arrival a month ahead of time. His own union has taken the occasion of his absence to solidify its opposition to his policies, and to begin the rebuilding of the Triple Alliance, with whose recent dissolution he is largely credited. Thomas was given a hostile reception when he landed in New York by the Irish-American Labor League, due to his refusal to stand by the victimized Irish railwaymen who had refused to handle military trains for the British in Ireland.

Whatever his purpose, Thomas is unlikely to intervene against the program of the American railroad labor unions at Denver, with reference to Government ownership and democratic operation of railroads. It is now definitely established that the United Mine Workers and other big delegations which voted the overwhelming endorsement of that program at the Montreal convention last June will repeat the performance at Denver. Moreover, they will emphasize it by placing one or two railroad men on the executive council.

The United Mine Workers will propose a general reorganization of the council, according to one of their chiefs. No details of the plan are given. It is possible that the council will be enlarged considerably.

Russia Fully Recognized

Decision of the British court of appeals that Britain has recognized the Russian government as a de facto government, and the hint from London that this means political recognition, indicate that the Russian question will come before the labor convention for action in behalf of Russian-American trade relations. Pacific Coast unions in particular, opposed to Japanese imperialism, are scheduled to demand that the blockade against Russian trade be lifted by the American Government. Debate on the Russian policy of the A. F. of L. will be postponed by the committee to the final hours, if possible, but the delegates will seek to bring it up on resolutions in the first week.

Following the departure of Wm. H. Johnston of the Machinists on a trip of investigation into Russia, Senator France of Maryland, who has been an advocate of Russian trade, announces his sailing for that country May 24 to personally get the facts for presentation to the State Department and the country.

A marine grass found extensively in Japanese waters yields a fiber which, when mixed with cotton, both strengthens and cheapens thread, usually made of the latter alone.

In the coming age of complete industrial organization international boundary lines will cease to be even imaginary.

STATISTICS ARE JUGGLED

Lower food costs is being capitalized by cheap wage employers to enforce a living standard below pre-war times.

These employers talk about wage increases of 80, 90, and 100 per cent over pre-war times, and would convey the impression that pre-war rates were ideal. Wage rates, based on pre-war standards, are valueless, because these rates did not assure living standards.

A family's food bill approximates 40 per cent of the bread winner's income, according to the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics.

This means that a worker who is paid $7 a day, for instance, spends 40 per cent, or $2.80, for food for his family.

If food costs are lowered 20 per cent, he "saves" one-fifth of this $2.80, or 56 cents a day.

This "saving," which is eaten up, and in some cases exceeded, by increased rents, fuel, light and other necessaries, is a pretext by employers to reduce wages 20 per cent, or to cut the rate of $7 a day to one-fifth of that amount—$1.40.

The worker now finds that he is paid $5.60 a day, with the few pennies that he saved through less food costs taken over by other profiteers.

The most superficial thinker must see that the worker is worse off than before, and that every wage cut extends the "buyers' strike," which cheap-wage advocates deplore.

Self-preservation is behind labor's fight against wage reduction.

The workers are not impressed by awesome contributions on frozen credits, stock dividends, liquidation or foreign markets as reason why they should accept lower wages.

They know their standards are being lowered, even below pre-war.

They know they have produced to excess and that the charge that they are slackers is an untruth, uttered by men who are either ignorant or dishonest.

The workers are not responsible for present conditions. They carried the burden of the war while the men who now talk of wage cuts were ignored.

No one paid any attention to these intellectual bankrupts and profiteers who reaped untold riches during the war, and who now emerge from their cyclone cellar, peep around to be assured of personal safety, and then insist on wage cuts.

Statistics are juggled to this end and every force at the command of greed is used to conceal waste, excessive charges, inordinate profits, and incompetent management.

EUROPE ADVANCES

Science and modern inventions are doing more to bring about a homogenity of European countries than all the intrigue of diplomats can possibly counteract.

Almost daily extension of passenger and mail service by air is rapidly making Europe a network of aerial transportation lines.

Negotiations are now nearing completion for an airway from Berlin via Riga to Moscow, and when this service is completed it will be possible to travel by air from London to Moscow—a distance of nearly two thousand miles.

Berlin is already connected with London by the Dutch service through Amsterdam. This Dutch branch also has inaugurated service between Paris and Amsterdam.

The existing London-Paris service connects at Paris with the airway to Warsaw, which goes by way of Strasbourg and Prague.

The Franco-Rumanian Air Service Company, which is responsible for this airway, has obtained concessions from the Austrian and Rumanian Governments, and hopes shortly to open an airway that will connect London, through Paris, with Constantinople.

In the same manner as networks of railroads and ocean travel has brought the nations of the world to a closer amity and better understanding, perfection of aerial transportation must inevitably result in weakening the boundaries which keep the people of Europe divided.

THE CHINESE DOLLAR

In reporting arrival at Vancouver, B. C., recently, of the new steamer "Robert Dollar," the press item stated:

"The vessel was formerly the German freighter 'Kurland,' and had not carried an ounce of freight before her new owner secured her. She will load cargo for a round-the-world passage. Like other vessels of the Dollar concern, she will be manned with Chinese. Her Chinese crew has been awaiting her here in the immigration shed for several days, and the white men now aboard the vessel will be sent to their homes."

Of course, the foregoing relates conditions as approved by the "Shipping Register," and apparently in line with the sentiments of those authorities entrusted with the enforcement of Section 13 of the Seamen's Act. If the Dollar policy was altogether universal the Island of Yap question would not remain unanswered for long.

LOYALTY IS FIRST NEED

Brantford, Ontario, April 30.—"The co-operative movement suffers far more from the disloyalty of its members than from the enmity of its opponents," says the Canadian Co-operator.

"The principal remedy is persistent and intensive education of the rank and file in the principles and advantages of co-operation. People frequently contribute share capital to retail societies and then foolishly neglect to give them substantial trade support. If co-operative stores could rely upon anything approaching 100 per cent loyalty, the volume of business would, from the commencement, justify a substantial saving in the cost of living and increase public confidence in the value and importance of the movement."

The end of the moment is not so much for the formation of new unions as for new members in those unions already formed.

The record of trade unionism shows that, after all, man was not made to mourn.

Labor News

Following a series of battles between union and non-union miners, in which several persons were killed, martial law was declared last week in Mingo County, West Virginia.

Building craftsmen and contractors of Kansas City, Missouri, have agreed to arbitrate wage differences.

The Restaurant Owners' Association, of South Chicago, has renewed last year's agreement with organized waitresses.

At New Orleans, La., bakers have secured a union-shop contract which calls for last year's wages and improved working conditions.

The United Mine Workers at Belleville, Ill., have stopped an attempt to establish physical examination of miners in this district as a condition of employment.

The Marathon Lumber Company, of Laural, Miss., forced its employes on strike when it cut wages from $2.50 a day to $1.50, and changed the eight-hour day to ten hours. Lumber barons in this section are attempting to establish the anti-union shop.

Latest statistics obtainable show that more than fifty thousand men and women employes of the United States Government are working for wages ranging from $50 to $83 per month, and that many of these employes are compelled to work at night in other jobs in order to eke out an existence.

Pressmen employed by the Curtis Publishing Company went on strike for the forty-four-hour week.

In a conference with company officials, employes of the Southern Pacific Maintenance of Way and Structures Department refused to accept a reduction in wages of approximately 20 per cent. Following the conference, which was one of a series called by the company to consider the 20 per cent reduction for all classes of employes, the company announced its intention of appealing to the Railroad Wage Labor Board.

Differences between the Machinists' Union and the San Francisco Labor Council, dating back to the Mooney trials has resulted in the withdrawal of the union from the council. The latest quarrel between the union and the council was over a recently published editorial in the "Labor Clarion" attacking Eugene Debs as a "strikebreaker" because he did not abide by the decisions of the majority when the Nation went to war. The union sought to have the council demand retraction, and, when the matter stayed "in committee" too long, a decision to withdrawal was reached.

The iron-moulding industry will continue to do business under the principle of the union shop and collective bargaining. At a recent conference in New York between representatives of the International Moulders' Union of North America and the Stove Founders' National Defense Association, a signed agreement providing for the continuance of the principles of the union shop and collective bargaining was negotiated. The union was represented by Joseph Valentine, president of the International Moulders' Union of North America, and John P. Frey, general executive board member of that organization. The employers were represented by George Mitchell, president of the Stove Founders' National Defense Association.

Domestic and Naval

Admiral B. H. Wilson, commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet, will be next superintendent of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis. Admiral Wilson will succeed Rear-Admiral A. H. Scales.

The white population of Alaska decreased 23.4 per cent between 1910 and 1920. Of a total population of 54,889 recorded last year, whites totalled 27,883 compared with 36,400 in 1910. Indians in Alaska, on the basis of the 1920 census, numbered 26,421; negroes, 128; Chinese, 56; Japanese, 312, and Filipinos, Hawaiians and Koreans, 99.

The "City of London," a ten-thousand-ton freight and passenger vessel, is due to sail from Liverpool for Montreal on June 5, according to an announcement by the International Mercantile Marine lines. The speed of the vessel will approximate fifteen knots, it is said, first and second-class accommodations only being provided.

Mare Island Navy Yard has saved the Government about $30,000 in the construction of gears by the machinery department. The estimate of $75,000 that was made by the yard when the contract was awarded, has been cut almost in half, and the work has been turned out for $40,500 and has been completed in six weeks less time than estimated. Manufacturing of the gears was something new to the navy yard, and the officers prepared their estimates to meet all emergencies. There were no emergencies, and instead of having the Government wait until June 30 for the gears, they are now completed and ready for delivery.

British shippers are awakening to the fact that American vessels are picking up trade commonly handled by English coasters and are carrying the cargoes at a rate under that quoted by the British, according to reports from Liverpool. The second instance of this kind to be noted by the English coastal traders was when the American steamer "Honolulu," sailing from New York to Dublin, took aboard at the latter port 1200 tons of maize, which she delivered at Cork. After discharging there she was laden with 2000 barrels of cured fish, proceeded to Castletown, another coast port, where she took aboard an additional three thousand barrels of fish before returning to New York. Here is a case in which an American steamer competes with the British in their own coastwise trade.

Here are a few brief facts about San Francisco Harbor prepared by Harry Cosgriff, member of the Harbor Commission: (1) The greatest land-locked harbor in the world, aording safe anchorage at all seasons for the largest vessel afloat. (2) Complete modern port facilities, including over forty lengthy piers occupying fifteen miles of berthing space with cargo area of more than five million square feet, permitting the accommodation of 1,200,000 tons of cargo per month and accommodation at one time of 250 vessels of average size. (3) Spur railroad tracks from State Belt Line railroad running out each concrete pier on both sides, permitting vessels to load or discharge cargo into rail cars and connection by this rail system with three transcontinental railroads, giving economy in transfer of freight and quick dispatch to all rail points in the United States, Canada and Mexico.

An amendment to the Navy appropriation bill, which would forbid any American naval vessel being employed for the enforcement of claims of American private interests in Mexico or in any foreign countries was offered by Senator La Follette, Republican, of Wisconsin.

The little fishing schooner "Louise," owned by the Union Fish Company, which recently returned to port in a distressed condition after encountering a severe gale off the northern coast and with her sails in ribbons, has departed again for Pirate Cove, Alaska. Captain Sea continues as master of the craft.

Print paper, which ordinarily moves to California ports on the coastal steamers, is being shipped from Terminal No 2 by rail on account of the tie-up of coastal steamers, due to the strike of the marine unions. California dailies have been running short of paper and have put in hurry-up orders for rail movement of the commodity.

The battleship "California" will have her full complement of 1345 men when she slips from the ways at Mare Island Navy Yard this August. Already there is a scramble throughout the personnel of the navy to get aboard the "Golden State's Own," Commander W. A. Smead, U. S. Navy, executive officer of the new ship, said today upon his return from San Pedro, where he was in conference with the commander-in-chief of the Pacific fleet.

Figures covering American shipping, and prepared from month to month, show an increase of 67,417 tons over the figures of March 1, 1921, when American tonnage exclusive of vessels owned by the Shipping Board was estimated at 12,916,009 tons or 3690 ships. Of these vessels, all of which are of five hundred gross tons or over, 1023 are privately owned. In spite of a depression in foreign trade, coastwise shipping seems to warrant the building of more vessels, thus preventing American tonnage from remaining stationary or decreasing.

The naval radio service has added another achievement to its pioneering work in the Pacific by opening up a circuit to Saigon, French Indo-China. With the extension of its aerial lines to the French colony on the other side of the Pacific, shipping interests will be greatly benefited as the navy will handle commercial work as well as official communications. By this amplified service the navy can handle business and maintain communication with Guam, Manila, (including all points in the Philippines), Tutuila (points in American Samoa), Suva, Apia, Tahiti and Saigon.

The United States faces a tidal wave of Europeans seeking to enter this country before the new restrictive immigration laws become effective. Commissioner Frederick A. [illegible], who made this statement, added that "it probably will be in effect a race between Congress and the immigrant." "Reports from Europe indicate that people who had planned to migrate to America at any time within the next year are now frantically abandoning everything and besieging the American representatives there to vise their passports at once," Wallis said. "This seems to be particularly true of Southeastern Europe, where our officials are already swamped by applications."

News from Abroad

Arabs led by Sheik Salam recently destroyed thirteen towns in French Syrian territory. Gravest anxiety for safety of the Christian population is felt, due to the fact that with the exception of a few Algerian Mohammedans, the French have withdrawn all troops from Ainbab.

Reports state that bands of highwaymen are giving serious trouble in the north of Brazil, especially in the State of Amazonas and the Acre Territory. So much robbery has been committed lately along the Amazon River that shippers are refusing to forward goods except at the risk of the consignee.

The arrival of a British military mission at Chita, capital of the Far Eastern Republic of Siberia, is reported in a Moscow dispatch to the Letvian Telegraph Agency, which adds that recognition of the Chita Government by the powers is imminent.

Consul Sholes, of Goteborg, states that on January 31, 1921, the Swedish Mercantile Marine comprised 2791 vessels, and of this number 1241 were steamers, 532 motor boats (mostly Diesel vessels), and 1018 were sailing vessels, comprising a total tonnage of 1,169,828 gross tons.

The Peninsular & Oriental liner "Benalla," from London to Sydney, Australia, with 1100 passengers and seamen, was beached near the Royal Sovereign lightship, close to the entrance to the Straits of Dover, after a collision with the British tank steamer "Patella." The collision occurred in a fog. A statement issued by the Peninsular & Oriental Company says no one was injured.

The coal strike in Great Britain, together with a general falling off in the shipping industry, has resulted in many vessels of all classes being tied up in the River Tyne, according to dispatches received from London. The number of the ships in the river and at the wharves has so increased, it is said, that laying-up berths are constantly being refused. As the strike of the ship stewards continues the congestion in all ports of Great Britain assumes alarming proportions.

Since the slump in the export trade the idle ships at Antwerp have increased from 111 on March 31, to 137 on April 30. The idle tonnage during April at Antwerp amounted to 1,032,167 as compared with 969,913 during March, and an increased number of ships left in ballast during April. The demand for outward tonnage is 25 per cent of the space available. The freight rate, however, remains unchanged. General unemployment still remains a serious problem, it being estimated that 179,000 are now idle.

William H. Robertsen, American consul general at Buenos Aires, commenting on dispatches from Washington that his refusal to aid five Chilean members of the crew of the American steamer "Martha Washington" to return to their country was the cause of the port workers' boycott of the "Martha Washington," declared the statements were based on a misconception of facts. He said the boycott began when the Munson Line refused to accede to the demands of the workers' union that the firemen on the "Martha Washington" be paid off, discharged and repatriated because of alleged ill-treatment.

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

FACTS AND FIGURES

International Shipping Conspiracy Suggested in Correspondence

All the evidences of conspiracy are contained in the present lockout of American maritime workers. Perhaps the ramifications and extent of interests responsible will never be entirely exposed, but even at this time there are certain striking features which reveal criminal intrigue and manipulation. That which is of most serious concern to Americans is the manner in which the United States Shipping Board appears to have been enmeshed in a web of foreign influence and maneuvered into a position where it has become the most potent weapon in the hands of predatory interests.

A powerful bureau, maintained at great expense to our people, for the purpose of building up our Merchant Marine and foreign trade, has been adroitly manipulated to a position where it reacts.

At a period when its operations should be most effective and beneficial, and when it ought to be of greatest assistance in keen world competition for trade, the Shipping Board has been effective only as a co-partner, with private and foreign-minded vessel operators, in garroting our overseas commerce. The fact that it is operated in conjunction with private shipowners, in ruthless aggression upon the living standards of American seamen, is but incidental.

A few of the salient features of the situation are revealed in the following correspondence:

May 13, 1921.

Hon. W. S. Benson,
Chairman United States Shipping Board,
Washington, D. C.
Dear Admiral:

Enclosed please find a pamphlet headed "Statement of Facts," concerning the present lockout in the Merchant Marine. Extracts from this pamphlet have been published and have been characterized as "malicious inventions" and as "reckless libel on a responsible department of the Government and of the American Merchant Marine."

It is because of these accusations and statements that I send the pamphlet to you. The pamphlet will, on these questions, speak for itself.

In your statement made to the meeting called by you on April 27, and published on page 32 of the aforementioned pamphlet, you will find on page 33 the following language used by you:

> "You will recall that in February last the Shipping Board with other shipowners invited representatives of the seafarers into conference to discuss a voluntary revision of wage scales in order to meet new economic conditions. The men made no concessions."

As appendix to the pamphlet, you will find under date of January 25, 1921, a letter addressed to Percy J. Pryor, Secretary Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, Inc., 67-69 Front street, New York City. In this letter there is no suggestion of a meeting or of a conference. On page 2 of the appendix you will find a letter addressed to the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, 67-69 Front street, New York City, signed by yourself, in which you associate yourself with the contents of the letter just mentioned. On page 5 of the appendix you will find a letter addressed to the American Steamship Owners' Association and signed by the Joint Grievance Committee of the maritime nations, in which you will find the following:

> "We respectfully suggest that a conference be called at the earliest possible date, to go into the whole subject matter with a view of such revisions as can be agreed upon and as will then be made the basis for an agreement to carry us through another year.
> "Again assuring you of our utmost concern and our willingness and desire to co-operate with you on the propositions which we both have in view, and awaiting an early reply, we beg to remain."

On the same day a copy of this letter was forwarded to you together with a covering letter, which you will find on page 5 of the appendix, from which please note the following:

> "As stated in the letter to the American Steamship Owners' Association, we stand ready—eagerly ready to co-operate for the upbuilding of a real American Merchant Marine and of a real sea-power for America. We hoped and still hope to have the co-operation of the shipowners. We felt sure and we still feel sure that we shall be permitted to co-operate with you and the American Government, even though we should not be permitted to co-operate with the American shipowners."

And on page 7, the following:

> "In the earnest hope and expectation that such co-operation may be arranged for, and that such meeting will be called for that purpose and that such meeting will be successful, we beg to remain."

No answers have been received to these letters from the Shipowners' Association, nor from you, except a bare acknowledgment from you of receipt of letter addressed to you, and no meeting was called until the 19th of April. As you know the agreement ended on the 30th of April.

On page 33 I quote from the statement handed to us by you at the meeting on the 27th:

> "It is in the effort to clear the situation that I have thought it best to ask you gentlemen to meet me."

On page 13 of the appendix I quote from a bill of complaint in equity, submitted to the United States Court at Baltimore, Md., Shipping Board and Shipowners' Association, as follows:

> "That heretofore, to-wit, on or about April 1, 1921, the United States Shipping Board passed an order requiring all of its operators to put into effect a lower scale of wages, and also taking away various other privileges hitherto enjoyed by the seamen on Shipping Board vessels, such as overtime, etc., said new scale of wages to take effect May 1, 1921."

Unless perjury were committed at Baltimore, the wages and conditions to be offered to the seamen had been finally determined upon by you prior to April 1, 1921.

There are many other important matters in this pamphlet. They are in fact, too numerous to be placed in this letter. I, therefore, beg of you to give your personal attention to this pamphlet.

In the Washington Post of today you are quoted as saying:

> "The Board has withdrawn six Government-owned ships from operation by the United States Transportation Company of New York, Chairman Benson said, because the company had disregarded the order of the Board for a 15 per cent wage cut and had signed men at the old scale."

The 15 per cent wage cut for the personnel needs some explanation. From the best authority, the wage cost of operation of vessels is 7.5 of the total cost, all other costs being 92.5. Fifteen per cent of 7.5 is 1.125. In other words, the reduction in the wage cost is one and a fraction of a cent on the dollar. In order to make it plain what it really means, let us assume that it costs $1000 a day to run a vessel. The reduction insisted upon by you will amount to $11.25 per day for that vessel. A reduction from $1000 to $988.75. The difference is so slight, so unimportant to the vessel that the difference in coal consumption between skilled and unskilled firemen will more than cover the difference in one watch of four hours during a run. These facts, taken together with what the pamphlet shows, furnish exceptionally good proof that the question of saving is not the main question.

You will kindly remember that prior to the New York meeting I stated to you in Washington, that "so far as the unlicensed seamen are concerned, wages and hours of labor is a secondary consideration, the building up of a skilled American personnel for an American Merchant Marine and a sea-power for America is primary." This statement was repeated in New York with your representative Darragh de Lancey present. It was repeated to you again in the meeting called by you in Washington. And it was because of the international ramifications and the fundamental national interests involved that we offered to submit the whole matter to the President of the United States without any conditions or qualifications whatsoever, declaring ourselves ready to abide by his decision.

Most respectfully yours,

ANDREW FURUSETH, President,
International Seamen's Union of America.

Enc.

Washington, D. C., May 13, 1921.

Hon. Wesley L. Jones,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator:

From the wage schedules submitted in the pamphlet and from the statement of Admiral Benson, as given in this pamphlet, you will see that there is an absolute insistence upon the 15 per cent reduction in the basic pay of the personnel on board of American vessels.

The wage cost of operating a vessel, according to the very best of authority, is 7.5 per cent of the total cost, the other cost being 92.5. Fifteen per cent of 7.5 is 1.125, which will be the total saving to the vessel. Assuming that it costs a vessel $1000 a day to run, the total saving will be $11.25 per day. The total cost must, therefore, be $988.75 in lieu of $1000. Unskilled firemen will waste more coal in one watch than the amount of savings herein shown.

Aside from all other things in the pamphlet, including the British charter of the International Shipping Federation, Ltd., this showing of the saving seems very good evidence that this struggle is not over 15 per cent reduction in the basic pay of men, but is for some other purpose.

Most respectfully yours,

ANDREW FURUSETH.

Washington, D. C., May 14, 1921.

Mr. Winthrop L. Marvin,
Vice-President and General Manager,
American S. S. Owners' Association,
2435 Whitehall Building, 17 Battery Place,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

The Washington Post of Friday, May 13 (yesterday), carried an Associated Press dispatch in which Mr. Raymond and yourself characterize statements made by me as "malicious invention" and "reckless libel on a responsible department of the Government and of the American Merchant Marine."

The dispatch does not contain any information to which particular statement of mine these expressions are applied. I presume that you and Mr. Raymond have reference to a pamphlet, in all about 52 pages, headed "Statement of Facts," concerning the present lockout in the Merchant Marine, and that more immediately it applies to statements made by me to the effect that the present upheaval, lockout, or strike, whatever you may call it, is a result of an international agreement, either specific and of record somewhere, or in the form of a gentlemen's agreement about what the shipowners of the world have agreed to do, with or without stating their specific and real purpose. In the pamphlet is a copy of the incorporation papers of the International Shipping Federation, Ltd., with headquarters in London, members of its Executive Board in the more important maritime nations of Europe, and agents everywhere. The incorporation papers contain the following:

> "(2) To consider all questions affecting the interests of the shipping trade and other trades connected therewith and to do all such things as may seem expedient with a view to the promotion of such interests.
> "(3) To procure the adoption, improvement, repeal, abrogation, or alteration of any laws, maritime contracts usage, and customs in relation to such trades which it may seem to the company desirable to adopt, improve, repeal, abrogate, or alter and to oppose delay and resist any enactments, rules, regulations, by-laws, customs, or wages which may seem adverse to the interests of such trade or any department thereof.
> "(4) To indemnify any persons and companies interested in the shipping trade or other trades connected therewith against losses, liabilities, and contingencies in relation to any such trade and generally to carry on any kind of guarantee and indemnity business other than employers' liability insurance.
> "(5) To establish and maintain in any parts of the world bureaus or registries for engaging the services whether in relation to navigation or management of ships or vessels or in loading or discharge of cargoes or any other operations, whether on land or sea of officers, managers, stewards, clerks, messengers, servants, seamen, firemen, laborers, and other persons employed in any such business and for collecting and supplying information to members of the company and others in relation to any of the said businesses and to supply such services and information accordingly, whether gratuitously or otherwise, as may be deemed expedient."

The basis of the international organization of shipowners is protection and indemnity, as will be seen under clause 4 of the charter. I have characterized the American Protective and Indemnity Association as a younger brother of the English association. The one is modeled upon the other, and the English charter of the International Shipping Federation, Ltd., specifically authorizes and insists upon co-operation with every shipowner organization throughout the world.

The attack upon the Seamen's Act by European shipowners is general, definite and substanially the same as the attacks and actions of your organization. The shipowners of Great Britain are hunting down and punishing British seamen who left their vessels in American ports under the terms of the Seamen's Act, wherever such seamen can be found returning to Great Britain. The Danish shipowners are doing the same, and this is shown in the pamphlet. Strong pressure has for several years been brought to bear upon our executive Government, either to have the law repealed or suspended.

It seems evident that some understanding was arrived at in Europe in the month of December, or in the early part of January, because the Dutch shipowners were not represented at the Brussels meeting, which had for its purpose to reduce the weekly hours of labor for sailors to fifty-six hours, and the weekly hours of labor for firemen to forty-eight hours per week. This meeting, however, agreed that a subcommittee should meet in London at a later date for the purpose of arranging the change so as to make it the least burdensome for the shipowners. When this meeting was called the shipowners of Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Holland failed to appear.

Between the 10th and 20th of January, this year, shipping companies on the Pacific gave notice of abrogation of the agreements which they have had with the seamen. When they (the companies) were asked if they would have a meeting to consider any new agreement, they answered, "No." The shipowners on the Atlantic notified the personnel on American vessels with whom they had arrangements through their organizations, that they desired a 25 to 30 per cent reduction in the wage rate, the subsistence rate and the abolition of all overtime pay. When they were asked to meet, letter being sent to them on the 31st of January, they refused even to answer. The Norwegian shipowners gave the two months' notice provided in their agreement with their sea personnel so that all the agreements under which they worked would end by April 1. The English shipowners submitted to the seamen, through the seamen's organization, a proposal for a reduction of £4—£10 per month for each rating on board of ship, the amount would be between 25 and 30 per cent of reduction. The reason given for these general proposals of reduction was competition.

When it was found that no arrangement was arrived at in America, the question between the English shipowners and the English seamen was laid over until the 22nd of April. In Norway it was laid over until the 15th of May. The Norwegian shipowners proposed a reduction of 25 per cent this spring and another 25 per cent in the fall. The American shipowners proposed a clause that would permit them to abrogate the agreement upon giving thirty days' notice, and when an endeavor was made to have them agree for a year's time, they informed the parties that they expected to put in force another reduction in the fall.

You, Sir, have conducted these negotiations, and, therefore, you are well aware of the facts. It would be altogether too remarkable a coincident that the shipowners of Europe and the shipowners of America should demand from the seamen substantially the same things and do it at the same time, unless there was some arrangement, such as is provided for in the incorporation papers of the International Shipping Federation, Ltd., part of which is quoted above.

But, Sir, this is not all. Students of maritime history know that no nation attains to sea-power unless its nationals are seeking the sea for a livelihood; no nation was ever able to retain sea-power after its nationals had left the sea. European shipowners and governments understand this, and some of the European nations base their national laws dealing with maritime affairs upon it. If the native American can be driven from the sea, there can be no doubt that America will ultimately have to sell those ships to those who know how to manage them and how to operate them, and the ships will have to be sold for such prices as the buyers are willing to pay.

This lockout, claimed to be over a paltry $11.25 in a thousand of the expenditures in operating ships, must, if you be victorious, result in driving from the sea again nearly all the 51 per cent of native Americans who now constitute the total operating force of seamen, not including officers, in our Merchant Marine.

This is substantially what is to be found in the pamphlet. I am repeating it in a letter to you, and I am publishing the letter, if I can get it published. I shall indeed be glad of the opportunity which any prosecution for criminal libel would give me.

Yours very truly.

(Signed) ANDREW FURUSETH.

Washington, D. C., May 16, 1921.

Hon. W. S. Benson,
Chairman U. S. Shipping Board,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Admiral:

You are informing the public that the vessels belonging to the Nation and bought by the people's savings in the form of Liberty Bonds cannot operate because of excessive wage-cost. You demand a 15 per cent reduction in the wages in order to be able to operate. This reduction in wage-cost demanded by you amounts to no more than $11.25 in each thousand of total operating cost.

You stated to the meeting on April 29, 1921 (prior to the lockout), that you were operating under a deficit of $15,000,000 per month. To the House Committee on Appropriations you submitted a report of deficiency for year ending June 30, 1921, $36,852,000. You estimate a deficit of $134,000,000, for the year ending June 30, 1922, equivalent to $11,166,666 per month. In a report, which you must have furnished to Senator Fletcher—Congressional Record, page 79, April 12, 1921, it is stated that in January, 1921, 1109 steel vessels were in operation. Giving to each of those vessels a crew (from master to boy) of 45 persons (a high average) these vessels would need 50,905 men, which at an average of $125 per month per man will amount to $7,890,275 per month including their food unprepared at $1 per day per man.

According to the same report 520 vessels—251 steel and 269 wood—were laid up. If these vessels were operating they would at forty persons per vessel (a very high average) require 20,800 men (master to boy) and their wages would, including their food, amount to $3,224,000. Total of all vessels, if in operation, $11,114,276. Allowing $885,725 per month as overtime pay (surely excessive under any reasonable rules) the grand total cost might be, but could not exceed, $12,000,000 per month. Taking the vessels in operation, the difference between the total crew cost and your estimated deficit is $3,276,391. Taking the total number of vessels 1629 as operating, your estimated deficiency would pay the wages and food of the entire fleet. In other words, in the first instance your deficiency would be $3,276,391, if the crews worked without wages and furnished their own food. If the total fleet were operating, and if the men worked without wages and food it would be about even. Your efficiency would be wiped out.

On May 11, 1921, Mr. Krutschnitt of the Southern Pacific (surely a respectable witness) testified before the Senate Investigating Committee on Railroad Revenues and Expenses as follows:

> "The balance sheet of the United States Shipping Board, as of January 1, 1921, evidenced expenditures aggregating $3,062,000,000; 1,667 vessels have been built and placed in commission, many in domestic coastwise service in most aggressive competition with the railroads. The practice of the Shipping Board is to turn these vessels over to agents to operate them at the expense of the Shipping Board, who receive for their services 5 per cent of the gross receipts. They are relieved of obligations to show any net return to pay overhead expenses or a return on the property investment, so that all incentives to conservative rate making and efficiency of management are absent. The agents' compensation is in no wise affected by rising costs, increased operating expenses, or losses; their whole aim is to increase gross earnings as thereby they increase their profits. Indeed the terms of the contract, as may be well understood, encourage extravagance and waste."

In view of the facts above stated and the testimony given by Mr. Krutschnitt, we respectfully suggest that you ought to give some detailed information to the public, or to Congress where it would be accessible to the public, about what becomes of the earnings of the vessels now in operation and that you withdraw the charges which you have made against the seamen.

Most respectfully yours.

(Signed) ANDREW FURUSETH,
President,
International Seamen's Union of America.

Dear Admiral:

On the 29th day of last month (April) in a meeting called by you I, on behalf of and instructed by representatives of the Seafarers' Unions, officially made a proposal that

> "Preference be given to American citizens for all ratings for which they are qualified, second preference to those who hold intention papers, and preference of such intention papers should be according to seniority of the papers."

You hesitated and qualified until the proposal became meaningless. The shipowners definitely

Cut Teachers' Pay

Public school teachers in Florida are facing a wage cut to provide an old age pension for them. The plan is being resisted by practically every teacher in the State. These teachers show that their wage does not provide a decent living.

It is proposed that sums deducted from the teachers be placed to the credit of a board appointed for that purpose. The funds shall be invested and any losses shall be charged to the fund, as will cost of wages for the board and its operating expenses.

The scheme is based on the assumption that the teachers need a guardian, so the politicians step in, create a few soft snaps for themselves and establish a fund out of the meager earnings of teachers with which to take "fliers" in the stock market.

Figures made public by the Department of Commerce show exports for April, $340,000,000, were less than any month before the war, and $46,000,000 less than for the month of March, which was the next lowest month in seven years. While the country is exporting less, there is a gradual increase in imports.

Have Ready Excuses

When the steel trust cut wages the Nation was told that conditions "are now stabilized" and prosperity will resume. The only thing that has been "stabilized" is a lower living standard for these wage earners and an argument for other cheap wage employers to use against workers who resist wage reductions.

The predicted prosperity has not appeared and this has forced the "molders of public opinion" to rearrange their alibis, and the public is now told that "important men" in the steel industry "are now quite frank" in saying that conditions will hardly change during the year.

Would Crush Labor

It is estimated that forty thousand men, women and children in the coal district of Alabama are without food. They are housed in tents furnished by the United Mine Workers of America. To relieve this situation, trade unionists are contributing funds and the State Federation of Labor has forwarded $500. The coal owners deny that starvation exists, while they force miners to make oath that they are not, and never will be, members of the United Mine Workers.

A State-wide blacklist is being conducted against the union miners, with the approval of Governor Kilby. The State executive acted as arbitrator in the recent mine strike and supported the coal owners in every point.

Governor Kilby also ruled that the coal owners are under no obligation to reemploy these miners. The Governor has been called upon to relieve the distress that his decision created, but refuses to act, and has publicly declared that he "sympathized with the miners." This statement has brought a withering reply from Van A. Bittner, representative of the United Mine Workers, who tells the official that "such hypocrisy makes men wonder." The trade unionist refers to a public statement by the Governor when the strike was on, wherein the people of Alabama were called upon to "run the agitators out of our State."

Hog Islander Yawps

At a convention of business men in Atlantic City, Peter O. Knight of Tampa, Fla., declared that the business men of the United States "must inform Samuel Gompers and the labor leaders that the people of the United States are not going to live under the constitution of the American Federation of Labor and the red flag of anarchy."

During the war Mr. Knight was vice-president and counsel for the corporation that operated the Hog Island Shipyard at Philadelphia. The jobbery at Hog Island was a subject of discussion on more than one occasion in the United States Senate, and one lawmaker declared that the island "was properly named."

Mr. Knight should be an authority on anarchy. During the recent strike of cigarmakers in his city a posse of respectable citizens ordered an organizer to leave that city. The trade unionist recalled the lynching of other trade unionists in the same city and obeyed the order.

Big Biz Opposes Profits Tax

The reason big business wants the excess profits tax removed was shown in a decision by the United States Supreme Court, which has rejected the claim of the La Belle Iron Works that increased valuation should be considered as invested capital, and is therefore not taxable.

In 1904 the company bought iron ore lands in Minnesota for $190,000. In 1917 this property increased in value to $10,000,000, which the company covered by a stock issue and carried it under invested capital.

The company resisted the Government's attempt to collect taxes on this increased value of $52 for every dollar originally invested, on the ground that the $10,000,000 stock issue represented invested capital.

In denying this claim the Court said that every line of the law "shows evidence of a legislative purpose to confine the account to such items as were paid for in stock or shares specifically issued for it and to their value 'at time of such payment.'"

Hundreds of millions of dollars in taxes are involved in the decision, as there are few partnerships or corporations which do not carry on their books an item showing substantial sums resulting from increased value of capital assets. According to the Supreme Court's decision, these valuations are not exempt from taxation.

While the decision shows the real reason why big business wants the excess profits law repealed, it also illustrates a major reason for high prices, which business places on its products to pay dividends

World's Workers

Employing bakers of Scotland have attempted to increase working hours from 44 to 48 per week. A ballot by the unions favors resistance to employers' demands by stoppage of work.

Members of Swedish trade unions unemployed at the end of March, 1921, approximate 25 per cent. Bricklayers and clothing workers, with approximately 40 per cent membership unemployed, are the chief sufferers, while tobacco workers, with less than 1 per cent idle, are the least affected.

According to the latest figures supplied to the Danish Statistical Department by trade unions and the Central Employment Exchange, which included a total of 303,593 workers, 23.2 per cent were unemployed on February 25, as compared with 19.7 per cent in January, and 9.6 per cent for the same period of last year.

The union spirit seems to have thoroughly infected natives of the South Sea Islands. Those Samoans who have been mandated to the control of British laws do not take to the change in kindly manner; unrest is rampant, strikes are of daily occurrence, and the authorities are experiencing great difficulty in driving the workers back to "normalcy."

Arsenal workers and employes of railway shops at Cairo, Egypt, have struck, and a general railway walkout is threatened. Field Marshal Viscount Allenby, British high commissioner in Egypt, issued a statement referring to the recent disorders in which he says he is loath to intervene in party politics, but that in the last resort the responsibility for law and order devolves upon him.

In accordance with program and with display of remarkable solidarity, the workers of Norway struck on May 26 in support of the maritime unions, which have been out in opposition to a cut in wages for several weeks. More than 120,000 workers responded to the call, causing a complete industrial paralysis throughout the country. Mobilization of the army and navy have been demanded by the employers.

Rome reports three persons dead, two dying, and many suffering from wounds as result of a pitched battle between Communists and Extreme Nationalists at Chiusi, Tuscany. A general strike has been declared in Civitavecchia, followed by a pitched battle between Fascisti and longshoremen, in which two persons were killed and ten wounded. Military forces occupied the city upon the calling of the strike. Eight persons were wounded in a conflict near Florence, while one person was killed and several wounded in a fight near Matua.

The British Premier, Lloyd George, [illegible] another attempt to end the coal stoppage, when he addressed a deputation of mine owners and the executive body of the Miners' Union, urging the necessity of an early resumption of work because of the country's alarming increase in unemployment and the general slowing down of all industries. The Premier repeated the Government's offer to grant £10,000,000 to tide the coal industry over the period during which a permanent settlement shall be negotiated, but warned the conference that there was no chance of increasing that amount.

Pacific Coast Marine

The United American Line's freighter "Texan" left last week for Atlantic ports with a large consignment of California fruits. Listed in the "Texan's" cargo are over two thousand tons of California canned fruits, fish, vegetables and over fifteen hundred tons of California dried fruit. The balance is made up of other local products.

A nice little sum in salvage will be received by officers and crew of the freighter "William H. Webb," which recently arrived at Honolulu from the Philippines and the Orient. The salvage is given because of the prompt action of the "Webb" when it pulled the United States Shipping Board freighter "Alloway" off the beach after the latter vessel had run aground in the Philippines.

Captain Charles J. Swanson, president of the Half Moon Bay Steam Navigation Company, has inaugurated a freight service between this port and Half Moon Bay with the departure each day from pier 23 of the gas schooner "Point Reyes." The little craft takes forty tons of freight and departs each morning at 5 o'clock, returning every afternoon at 3 o'clock. Swanson says the trade is good.

Rapid work was recently performed by the Crowley derrick barge No. 53 in transporting and placing three sixty-five-ton boilers in the holds of the British tank steamer "Achatina." The boilers were installed in two hours by members of the Union Construction Company's shipyards. The boilers were taken from the Moore shipyards in rapid order to the side of the "Achatina." The vessel is building for the Anglo-Saxon Petroleum Company and is of 8500 deaweight tons.

Shipyards around San Francisco bay are fairly active, despite the slowness of shipping and the maritime strike. The Moore shipyards at present are working on seven steamers. The boilers of the British tanker "Tachee" of the Standard Oil Company is at the Moore yards, being retubed, and the craft is also undergoing general overhauling. The tanker "S. C. T. Dodd," also of the same company, is being repaired. Five other vessels are in outfitting slips of the company.

For the purpose of seeking a permanent privilege to carry passengers both ways between Hawaii and San Francisco, efforts are now being made by the China Mail Steamship Company in Washington. In making its plea the company states that, while its stock is not 75 per cent American-owned, as provided by law, before it can engage in this traffic, it nevertheless is not a foreign company, as 51 per cent of the stock is American-owned. The company at present is forced to secure a permit every time one of its vessels wishes to engage in this trade.

Two Japanese freight steamers putting into North Pacific ports are being offered on the market for 57 shillings a ton for wheat from the Columbia river to the United Kingdom. This information has electrified local shipping circles and demonstrated the determination of Japan to break in upon American trade routes and secure cargoes at a figure lower than those heretofore quoted by vessels flying the United States flag. Recent rates have been quoted at sixty dollars a ton in the trade to the United Kingdom. Japan's offer, it is said, lowers the market price and places Japan on a keen competitive basis.

Due to the maritime strike and the tieup of hundreds of steamers when the engine room crews abandoned the vessels, the coastwise sailing craft, which had been relegated to history as an episode of a bygone era, are now reentering coast trade. Over 125 steam schooners which had been plying in the coastwise lumber trade are moored snugly in their harbors, because of the strike, but during the past week many charters were being offered for sailing craft. The rates for sail tonnage in coastwise trade which have not been quoted for many years are understood to be around $9.50 or $10, just about equalling the top notch reached for the same tonnage and the same trade during the rush of reconstruction materials to San Francisco following the fire of 1906.

Utilization of the Panama Canal to carry fruit from the Pacific Coast to the Atlantic has resulted in deliveries being made in three days' faster time than when the shipments were made via transcontinental rail and water route, according to the Panama Canal Record. Not only was there economy in time, but shippers saved 75 cents a box under the rate offered by the railroads by shipping their products on intercoastal steamers. In an effort to meet the express service of perishable freight recently placed in operation by two of the intercoastal lines, the railroads are proposing the inauguration of a twenty-day schedule to carry these perishables. Plans of steamship lines in the intercoastal service to devote two thousand tons of refrigerating space on their vessels for the carrying of fruits has resulted in the awakening of the rail carriers to the fact that their monopoly of the refrigerating transportation of this country is threatened.

Attention of all maritime interests is invited to the universal change in naval radio stations' working waves, wave settings and broadcasting schedules, effective at midnight, May 31, Greenwich time, and 4 o'clock in the afternoon, same date, Pacific Coast time. Radio station, S. F. (NPG)—1908 meters spark; 4650 meters arc. Radio station, Farallones (NPL)—1620 meters spark. Radio station, Eureka (NPW)—2650 meters spark. Following is the daily routine of broadcasting effective May 31 at 4 p. m.: 1:15 a. m., press, 1908 meters; 8 a. m., weather and hydrographic reports, 600 meters; 11:55 a. m., time, followed by weather and Alnavs on 1908 Meters spark, 4650 meters arc and weather and hydrographic reports on 600 meters spark; 4 p. m., weather and hydrographic reports on 600 meters spark; 9:55 p. m., time, followed by weather and Alnavs on 1908 meters spark and 4650 meters arc, and weather and hydrographic reports on 600 meters spark.

In making port recently, the Norwegian freighter "Pacifico," from Cardiff via Salina Cruz, gave considerable relief to her consignees. The craft was two days late on account of head winds, which caused apprehension to interested parties that the vessel would be too late in arriving to escape the added tariff on foreign sugar, which is provided for in the bill expected to be signed by President Harding at any moment. The "Pacifico" brought in three thousand tons of sugar and one thousand tons of coffee to C. Henry Smith. The present duty on sugar from foreign ports, other than the Philippines, and also the Hawaiian Islands, is $1.256 per hundred pounds. The new tariff passed by the Senate and awaiting the O. K. of President Harding will be $2 per hundred pounds. In reference to the importation of sugar from Cuba there is a differential of 20 per cent in the tariff as compared to other countries.

Two San Francisco steamship companies recently announced establishment of a monthly freight service between San Francisco and New Orleans. The companies are Norton Lilly and the Luckenbach steamship companies. Both concerns are at present operating a fleet of freighters in the intercoastal service. Plans have been made to maintain a monthly service between San Francisco, New Orleans and other Gulf ports. The first vessel of the company to operate on the run will be the freighter "Anniston," loading at New Orleans early in June. Other ports of the Pacific Coast included in the service are San Pedro, Portland and Seattle. The company was prepared to place as many vessels in this service as the freight service warranted. The Luckenbach line announces that it has placed two of its steamers in this service, the "Pleiades" and the "Hattie Luckenbach." The "Pleiades" was withdrawn from its intercoastal service and the "Hattie Luckenbach" has been running in the transatlantic service. Vessels of the company will also cross the bay from this side to Oakland to discharge and load cargo.

The American Shipbuilding Company intends entering the intercoastal freight service with a fleet of new vessels. All of the vessels are 3800 deadweight tons and were constructed on the Great Lakes. Plans have already been made by the owners to equip all ten steamers with refrigerating space. An agreement, according to reports, has been entered into with the California Fruit Growers' Association to handle the movement of fruits from the Pacific to the Atlantic. Recently the owners offered to sell the ten steamers to the California Fruit Growers' Association, but the latter decided that it would not be advisable to purchase them. Prior to the arrangements to place the vessels on the intercoastal service the owners were endeavoring to sell them to foreign buyers. Under the present arrangements an operating company will be formed to handle the service; the fruit growers on the Pacific Coast have promised to ship their citrus products by these American refrigerator ships. It is reported that the apple growers in the Yakima Valley have promised to ship two thousand carloads of apples this season, and that similar promises are expected from other fruit-growing districts. The entrance of this service into the intercoastal trade will make competition between the water carriers operating from the Pacific Coast to the Atlantic even more keen. At present it is generally believed that there is a surplus amount of intercoastal tonnage, but there is a scarcity of refrigerator ships. It has been found that by the forced system of ventilation oranges and lemons can be transported from here East on steamers without being damaged. More than 100,000 boxes of lemons and oranges have been shipped by the Panama Canal route.

U. C. STUDENT STRIKEBREAKERS

Once again the University of California compels recognition as a school and source of supply for strikebreakers, but this time there seems to be diverse opinion among the faculty of the institution regarding the right of students to act as strikebreakers. The fact that there is a difference of opinion on the subject at least is something for which to be thankful, inasmuch as it proves that all the collegians are not of one mind. As to the right, that is a matter of question and the point of view.

The constitutional inalienable right to pursuit of happiness should not be challenged at any time, but there is no moral right to scab. Therefore, if certain individual students in the University of California have discovered that their "pursuit of happiness" means submission of their bodies and intellects (?) to the whims of greedy and unscrupulous employers for degradation of our American seamen, the warped viewpoint might give semi-justification to such contemptible actions. The individual guilty of such mental perception, however, must be utterly devoid of noble attributes or the finer qualities which are considered necessary characteristics of real men.

If some of the unformed minds of young students are susceptible to the impressions of reactionary professors, who maintain the right to scab, they are unfortunate in the fact that they have not sufficient strength of character to offset their weakness of mind.

These are the weaklings who bring discredit upon their Alma Mater.

The act of strikebreaking by students is altogether inexcusable on any ground whatever. It is committed without honesty of purpose, without principle, and carries neither glamour nor romance. It can never be committed by a real patriot, notwithstanding the fact that patriotism is so frequently made the curtain behind which incompetents and scoundrels hide.

The patriot is he who loves and is devoted to his country, who strives for its welfare, who aims to bring happiness to his people; his heart is with his fellowmen and he rejoices in the happiness of little children. The strikebreaker, or scab, is the antithesis to the patriot; therefore, there is no weight to excuses on the grounds of patriotism.

The student who deliberately scabs does not do so under the spur of necessity, and he knows that he is only a very temporary makeshift. He does not intend to remain in the Merchant Marine service, and if he has the intelligence of a flea, must understand what a miserable instrument he becomes in the hands of ruthless operators.

If such facts are realized there must be other reasons which impel towards strikebreaking. Can it be a desire for adventure? If so, what adventure is there in accepting the protection of gunmen, sluggers and police, and in working as a seaman for the pittance of $72.50 per month? What thrill is there in being made the thing which is used to degrade and destroy living standards?

What notable glory is to be achieved by association on an equality with coolie beachcombers in the forecastles of non-union vessels? What is there romantic in the efforts of swabbing paintwork or mopping up the decks after seasick passengers? If it is for adventure—before the first passage is over they will have all of that kind they want.

Perhaps the student has a desire to emulate the worthy journalistic exploits of Jack London and is seeking local color for future use. If such is the case, the deluded victim is due for a sharp awakening. Unless he is very careful the only color he will absorb will be to his eyes, from some ship's officer, enraged by unmitigated snobbishness and incompetence.

If the student strikebreaker should happen to be one of those "pretty boys," always careful of personal charm or appearance, crease of the pants, parting of his hair, etc., who has been the recipient of the "glassy eye" and "cold shoulder" which our modern American girls have learned to give to such creatures, and he desires to win the adoration of the feminine element at college by tales of his experience, it is love's labor lost, for there is nothing as contemptible to the average modern woman as the scab, and we know that the University of California harbors its full complement of right-minded, progressive young American girls, even as it suffers, at present, from overabundance of the wrong type of men.

If the misguided student has taken up strikebreaking as a means of collecting data upon which to write a thesis on the subject, he could have spared himself the trouble. He could probably obtain all the necessary information from such enlightened experts as "Black Jack Jerome"; Robert Dollar, of Chinese coolie fame; The Sea Service Bureau, or even Captain Saunders of the Matson Line, who seems to be a favorite with the U. C. strikebreakers. However, the Kanaka beachcombers of the Matson Line, with whom the U. C. students will bunk and mess—while pursuing the art of breaking the marine strike will, doubtless, give the desired instructive pointers to their less competent shipmates, and upon their return to regular studies they can write their dissertation, obtain favorable notice from the fair ones, or wait for the next strike, as the case may be.

It may not be good form to treat the student strikebreaker activities as an act of hostility to the seamen's cause, therefore sarcasm would be misplaced.

It is with the hope that some intelligent or responsible person connected with the University of California will take note of their delinquencies and endeavor to save the institution from the disgrace which is being brought upon it that any attention is given to the matter.

The more intelligent and American spirited female students at the university can greatly aid in preserving the good name of that seat of education, by social ostracism or open boycott of those individuals who have stultified themselves and endangered the reputation of their Alma Mater by scabbing.

THE "BRASS CHECK" WORKS

Compared with the system operated by our commercialized press, censorship under the Czar's regime in Russia was mere child's play.

News of importance or of benefit to the masses is frequently suppressed, held back or deliberately distorted by the great majority of commercial publications in the United States.

This has been especially true of news from abroad which might have a bearing on labor matters or likely to influence sentiment of the workers. News of the engineers' strike in Sweden was only permitted to leak out, and the strained relations between seamen and their employers in Norway was not given publicity in the American papers until the actual strike was in operation.

Intentions of the Norwegian workers to sustain the marine unions in their lockout was not given mention until May 26, when the general strike was called, and immediately the Associated Press dispatches commenced to give color to the reports.

The earliest reports stated calling of the strike, with suggestions of Army and Navy mobilization. These were followed by hints of lawlessness, and again by suggestions that Bolsheviki were active with revolutionary efforts and propaganda.

As we go to press, the newspapers are regaling the public with accounts of riots and anarchy, alleged to be prevailing throughout the whole of Norway.

The purposes of this suggestive propaganda is made clear in an addition carried under one of these alleged reports, as follows:

"The rioting at Christiania is the outcome of a strike inaugurated two weeks ago by the steamship engineers and sailors in protest against a wage cut."

Of course, it is easily understood that this sort of thing is merely spiteful propaganda in the interest of those who control the "Brass Check."

A realization of the mischievous misrepresentations by the capitalist press is necessary at this present time. Too much care can not be exercised in giving credence to even the most harmless appearing press items.

Trade unionism, like Time, knows neither beginning nor end. It is the Genesis and Revelations of the human soul.

THE ROAD TO NORMALCY

Latest official reports state that: "The total deposits in the United States Postal Savings System on May 1 were approximately $158,100,000. The net amount on deposit suffered a decrease during the month of April, 1921, attributable directly to conditions affecting labor. At the large industrial centers, where there is considerable unemployment or wages have been reduced, instead of the usual increase in deposits there have been withdrawals to meet the living expenses of depositors."

The insufferable cruelty of these plain facts are staggering, their significance is all too clear.

This is part of the process, termed by big business, "Liquidation of labor." The figures damn the lie of repeated assertions by employes that they desire an independent and thrifty class of workers.

The aim of organized greed is to pauperize labor; to make dependent and enslave the workers by ruthless economic pressure. The thrift of one worker is made a weapon for subjugating others, and then the squeezing out process is applied upon the most thrifty to complete the scheme.

Compensation for the workers is based upon a standard of mere existence, and this standard is regulated in accordance with the necessities of the exploiters. Where the most efficiency is required the living conditions are permitted slightly higher stage, and where circumstances will permit, bare bone existence is all that the workers are able to obtain.

Exigencies of the war period upset, temporarily, the regular order of economic control, and in some instances a surplus wage permitted higher standards of living and the placing aside of a small competence by the thrifty.

The possibilities of a contented and independent class of workers was not satisfactory to the legions of greed, and they proceeded to eliminate the surplus.

The tragedies of these aggressions are inconceivable. Homes have been lost, hopes blasted, ambitions killed and comforts relinquished. Independent, happy and prosperous workers are compelled to exhaust their meager savings in desperate efforts to eke out an existence, under stress of conditions deliberately planned by the forces of greed and oppression. This explains one of the reasons for withdrawals from the Postal Savings Banks.

WHY, CERTAINLY!

The University of California has a well-established reputation as a breeding place for scabs, and the causes are quite natural. When asked by a newspaper reporter if he thought it good policy for U. C. students to scab on the waterfront, Professor Carl Plehn, head of the economics department of the State University, is alleged to have replied: "Why, certainly; it's all right." There are, no doubt, quite a number of sailors who would enjoy listening to the expression of such sentiments, from a lee yardarm, during a snifter on a dark night, but they don't happen to be taking a course of study at the B. A. F. tainted university at this particular time.

THE ROUGH LOCK

Before Butte, Montana, was a city, it was a mining camp and a hot one. It hummed with life twenty-four hours a day from the two thousand foot level underground to the top of the tallest gallows frame. It had to be hot to withstand the below zero temperature that swept the hills on which it stands in the winter time. Wood was the main fuel dependence and the current market price therefor was $18 a cord. Four horse wagons topped with huge wood racks conveyed the fuel from the hills, where it was cut, to the town and when the teamsters reached the top of the hill overlooking the main street they were accustomed to rough lock the wheels. The road was a blind one, blocked at the Main Street and by Tuohey and Sullivan's saloon and it was necessary to move slowly to make the right angled turn.

Phil Sims, teamster, was conveying four cords of wood down that hill at four o'clock on a cold winter afternoon when the rough lock on his wagon broke. The whiffle trees struck the wheelers and in a moment the team was going down the hill on the jump. Phil realized it was useless to attempt to stop them and concentrated all his efforts on making the turn. He swung the leaders into Main street and the wagon followed on two wheels. But the load of wood did not. The cord-wood sticks shot straight ahead and crashed through the big plate glass window of Tuohey and Sullivan's saloon.

Phil Sims halted his team and walked back. He gazed a moment at the wreckage, considering the possibility of reloading his wagon. Then he presented Tuohey and Sullivan with a bill for $62 for delivering four cords of wood and collected it.

The caustic wit of one of the Labor editors recently dictated the declaration that while it used to be "over the hill to the poor house" now "the road is all down hill." Your savings and investments are the brakes and rough locks which will check your progress on that road. If those investments are made in sound, profitable Government Savings Securities your journey through life will be secure, for those safeguards to prosperity can neither slip nor break.

Purchase regularly of Treasury Savings Stamps and Treasury Savings Certificates will assure your financial safety on the steepest hill. If you spill your load at the end of the road you won't be able to collect $62 for four cords of wood. For they have ceased to use wood for fuel, even in Butte.

More than nine thousand Haitian citizens died in American prison camps in 1918 20, according to a report filed recently by the Patriotic Union of Haiti, at the U. S. State Department and the White House.

The American occupation of the island republic is described as the "most terrible regime of military autocracy which has ever been carried on in the name of the great American democracy." In addition to those dying in prison camps, the report alleged that hundreds of women, children and invalids were killed, mutilated and tortured by American marines or native gendarmes, the latter being recruited and officered by Americans. The report asks liberty and relief by certain stipulations.

Another change in officers was made on the China Mail liner "Nile" on the eve of her departure for the Orient. Captain C. H. Cross, well known and popular skipper, formerly an American naval officer, was relieved of command and in his place was appointed John T. Kinley, who was formerly chief officer. Waterfront circles buzzed with gossip over this last-minute change. The vacancy caused by the promotion of Kinley made necessary the appointment of E. L. Tindall as first officer, and Dr. J. C. Edwards, surgeon on the "Nile," who was also relieved, was replaced by Dr. G. D. Schoonmaker. Cross refused to comment on his removal. Officers of the China Mail declared that their action was no reflection on Cross.

LAWYERS FIGHT IN TRIAL

Editor SEAMEN'S JOURNAL:

The following article from the New York Call of May 19, 1921, is enlightening, and I believe it would be of interest to Journal readers. Trusting same will be considered worth reproducing, I remain,

G. VAN DER STAAIJ,
No. 403 Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association.

Fisticuffs between lawyers for opposing sides marked the opening of the libel action of the thirty-three Hindu sailors against the British vessel "City of Norwich" yesterday morning in the United States District Court of Brooklyn. The men are suing for wages due and for maintenance and waiting time since the "City of Norwich" sailed away early in April and left them high and dry in Brooklyn.

Silas B. Axtell, attorney for the seamen, and Raymond Palmer of counsel for the vessel, were the two belligerents. The quarrel arose over the question of an interpreter, as none of the men speak English, and in the heat of the discussion Axtell told his opponent to "back up and get out of here."

Palmer retorted with the epithet, "You fat slob," and a blow on the cheek. Axtell then floored the other man with one blow. The incident which occurred in the corridor just outside the door of Judge Edwin L. Garvin's courtroom, attracted a number of spectators and proved the starting point of a number of heated arguments over the England-India controversy which threatened to become almost as heated.

Decision Postponed

After hearing testimony in the case at intervals throughout the day, Judge Garvin postponed further consideration of the case until this morning.

Ranji Singh, the Hindu who discovered the bewildered sailors wandering about the streets in the wake of a policeman, was the principal witness of the day. He testified that when he went back to the ship with the men the captain drove them off at the point of a revolver.

Thirty-two of the Hindus were in court yesterday watching the proceedings with interest. One of their number, A. R. Mishi, is in a hospital ill with pneumonia.

Singh, who said he is also a sailor, was passing along South street on April 4 when he saw the convoy of his fellow countrymen in the policeman's care, according to his testimony. He took them to the Municipal Lodging House, where they spent the night. The following day, he said, he went with them to the office of the British Consul-General at 44 Whitehall street, where he was told by "a Mr. Armstrong" that the men were "too filthy to come into the building," and passed along to the British shipping office in the Seamen's Church Institute at 23 South street. Here they found the captain, Singh asserted, who branded the seamen as "liars," but said that they could return to the ship if they wanted to. The British consul declined to interfere, Singh said.

Captain with Gun

At the Seamen's Service Center the men were likewise advised to return to the ship, and it was when they were attempting to do this that the captain brandished his revolver and threatened to shoot if they did not get off the gangplank, according to Singh.

Sydney Harper, who said he was employed by the McRoberts Detective Agency to guard the "City of Norwich," had previously testified that he had been ordered by the captain to let the Hindus come and go from the ship as they pleased.

New York, May 26.—One of the most distressing cases of oppression and maltreatment of seamen brought to light in recent years is disclosed here by thirty-three Hindus of the crew of the British ship "City of Norwich," in an action in admiralty against the vessel. The Hindus presented a pitiable appearance on their arrival. When they complained of their treatment, they said, they were beaten. One of the Hindus in court had had an eye put out, and numbers of others exhibited bruises and marks of brutal handling.

They were to have received a wage of $8 a month and a diet of dried fish, natural brown rice, curry powder and water, and were to have been provided with heavy clothing when the ship left the Suez Canal. They declared they were not provided with the clothing, and that all they received to eat was rice, which was unfit to eat, and rotten fish.

They complained to the admiralty officials when the ship reached here, they said, because they feared a repetition of the experience of the crew of the British steamship "Dewa," twenty members of which are said to have starved to death. After making the complaint they returned to the vessel, but, according to their attorney, Silas B. Axtell, they were refused permission to go aboard. No "squealers" were wanted, they were told.

For two days they slept on the docks without food of any kind. Finally an appeal was made to the Seamen's Service Center and they were provided with an attorney. Meantime their ship had sailed with a new crew, leaving them penniless and without food or shelter.

An investigation by local health department officials disclosed that the dried fish they had been served was worm-eaten, and the rice was musty. With the exception of buffalo grease and some white flour, there was no other food in the crew's quarters.

The following decision by Judge Augustus Hand gives judgment in accordance with the plain intent of the law, and interprets Section 20 of the Seamen's Act, which created rights for seamen which did not exist before:

Max Leon, plaintiff, against United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, United States Mail Steamship Company, and Morse Dry Dock & Repair Company, defendants.

Silas B. Axtell, attorney for plaintiff; Stuart H. Benton, attorney for defendant, Morse Dry Dock & Repair Company, demurrant; Charles J. McDermott, counsel. Augustus N. Hand, District Judge:

The defendant, Morse Dry Dock & Repair Company, has demurred to the complaint upon the following grounds: (a) Lack of jurisdiction of the person of the defendant; (b) lack of jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action so far as such defendant is concerned; (c) failure of the complaint to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The principal question involved is whether Paragraph 20 of the Act of March 4, 1915, as amended, justifies the attempted cause of action against the Morse Dry Dock & Repair Company. Section 20 reads as follows:

> That any seaman who shall suffer personal injury in the course of his employment may, at his election, maintain an action for damages at law, with the right of trial by jury, and in such action all statutes of the United States modifying or extending the common-law right or remedy in cases of personal injury to railway employes shall apply; and in case of the death of any seaman as a result of any such personal injury the personal representative of such seaman may maintain an action for damages at law with the right of trial by jury, and in such action all statutes of the United States conferring or regulating the right of action for the death in the case of railway employes shall be applicable. Jurisdiction in such actions shall be under the court of the district in which the defendant employer resides or in which his principal office is located.

While I am referring to no decision as to the scope of the Seamen's Act in relation to personal injuries, I think the scope of the section was to give a cause of action at law in the United States courts against employers. The words, "in the course of his employment," the succeeding words making applicable "all statutes of the United States modifying or extending the common-law right or remedy in cases of personal injury to railway employes," and the closing words of the section providing that, "Jurisdiction in such actions shall be under the court of the district in which the defendant employer resides or in which his principal office is located," all seem to bear out the interpretation I have adopted.

There is the further objection to the complaint that it does not set up any relationship between the plaintiff and the Morse Dry Dock & Repair Company, requiring it to provide a safe place for the plaintiff to work in; consequently, the fact that the plaintiff fell "into an opening on the after part of the deck situated beneath the main deck, which opening was unguarded, unlighted and unsafe," is, so far as this particular defendant is concerned, irrelevant.

The demurrer is sustained for the reason that the Act under which plaintiff seeks to recover does not apply to the Morse Dry Dock & Repair Company, because that company is not shown to have been an employer of the plaintiff, or under any legal duty to the latter.

May 14, 1921. D. J.

COTTER STATES CASE

Contention that the present lock-out of seafarers by shipowners of the United States, Great Britain and Scandinavia is an international conspiracy is more fully substantiated with the march of events. A general strike is now in full blast in Norway, due to the support given marine unions by their fellow-workers ashore.

In Great Britain no such solidarity is displayed, and the marine stewards seem to have been jockeyed into a position where they are compelled to resist aggression without the support of sailors and firemen.

The policy pursued by Mr. Havelock Wilson, who wields powerful influence over the British Seamen's Union, is chiefly responsible for this situation. Mr. Havelock Wilson is a member of the British Parliament and is also honored with Commander British Empire. Deviation from ultra-conservative lines might be fatal to further aspirations to title or greatness; therefore the peculiar situation prevailing in the British unions.

Following is a statement of facts by Mr. Joseph Cotter, president of the Marine Stewards, which in many instances reveals conditions identical with those which confront the seamen of America:

As we anticipated in our last issue, the struggle to keep our present rates of pay has commenced. Our part of the question of accepting reduction, or in favour of refusing to work, was overwhelmingly against acceptance, the actual majority being by six to one against the offer. A section of the Seafarers' Joint Council or their representatives decided to accept the reduction of £2 10s. per month on monthly boats and 8s. 6d. per week on weekly boats, and acceptance by these sections had a tremendous effect upon the attitude of the shipowners, who, despite all arguments, which included an offer to the shipowners, they (the shipowners) persisted in bringing the reduction into operation. On your behalf, my colleagues and myself of the Maritime Board Panel offered as an alternative to the shipowners' demand to suspend our demand for an increase in wages of £5 per month on monthly boats and 30s. per week on weekly boats which we put in, and was deferred in September last. We further offered to suspend our demand for the forty-eight-hour week for twelve months, provided the shipowners would agree to adopt the same course in present wages and conditions. This they point blank refused to do, and on Friday, May 6, the lock-out was declared.

Let us examine for one moment the reasons put forward by the shipowners for the reduction. The only thing they tell you is they cannot run their ships at present at a profit. They make bald statements, but produce no facts or evidence, and talk about their losses since September last, but say nothing about their profiteering from 1914 up to September last. The capital of nearly every Line worthy of the name "Line" has been increased enormously. Inflated dividends paid during the war, and bonuses, are not mentioned. We can produce evidence of companies who paid out dividends of over 100 per cent in four years, which was the return of their full capital, with their original stock left at an inflated value, and in some cases vast sums of money kept in reserve. I warned our members during the war, time and again, that the enormous profits made by shipowners would in part be used when the war was over to keep down wages and conditions which the men had struggled to get during the accursed war.

The Dockers' Inquiry and the Shaw Report laid bare to a very large extent the ramifications of the shipowners during the war and since, and now they have the audacity to come along to the men and women who were the means of producing that wealth by their labour, and at the risk of their lives—and God knows that is the greatest risk any man can run—and demand that they shall accept reduced wages and a reduced standard of life. They do not tell the public that freight rates today compared with pre-war rates are up enormously. They do not tell you everything. The pub'ic knows passenger rates are higher than they have ever been in the history of shipping, in some cases over 250 per cent. Previous to last September their cry was the price of bunker coal. But bunker coal, compared with last September, is reduced over 130 per cent, again in the shipowners' favour. They say the cost of living has gone down. If it has, that, also, is in their favour. The cost of insurance of ships has gone down. That, also, is in their favour. In heaven's name, will they tell us what more they do want! I haven't heard yet of one solitary shipowner who has been to the Labour Exchange looking for a job, but I know there are thousands of cooks and stewards who have not had jobs for months, and whose income during that period has been reduced over 250 per cent.

Mr. Shipowner, we sacrificed all to keep the flag of the British Mercantile Marine flying during the war. We helped to win the war. Over fifteen thousand British seamen, which included cooks and stewards, gave their lives to accomplish this. Is their reward to be a lower standard of life for themselves and their wives and families, whilst yours, Mr. Shipowner, is to be more wealth? The time has come for the shipowners to show their patriotism to their country and their gratitude to their men, the seamen of the country, by making a small sacrifice for at least a year, and agree to the standardization of wages and conditions. If this is done, the men of the sea will appreciate the shipowners' action. If this lock-out is persisted in the shipowners will deserve the deprecation not only of the seamen of the country, but every citizen of the British Empire. This is not a national question. It is now an international question. The British seamen are not the only seamen that it affects. Our American brothers are going through the same process. Our Norwegian brothers also. We have received the following cable from Brother Cartledge, Secretary of the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association of the Atlantic and Gulf:

"Cotter, Undivided, Liverpool:—We are out on general strike against the reduction of wages and working conditions.—CARTLEDGE."

The following cablegram has been despatched to our Norwegian and American brothers:

"We have refused to accept reductions in wages and overtime. Our lock-out began yesterday. Greetings to you, and wish you best of luck in your fight against international capitalistic conspiracy.—COTTER."

As we go to press the reports from all branches of the Union are magnificent. Even if we are left to our own resources, our men are determined to fight. We have the promise from the Transport Workers' Federation of their full support. Any help that is offered to us in our fight from any organization of the Transport industry will be accepted with thanks. Our fight is only another record in the great battle which is taking place in the industrial arena. Our ranks must be closed up all square, with a solid front to the enemy.

The funds of the organization belong to the members, and will be used to the last penny in this fight. To save any recriminations against officials, let it be clearly understood that we are all in it from the General President down. All members and officials receive strike pay. Members are requested to keep in touch with their branches and officials, so as to receive advice and instructions from them. If we are to win we must have discipline in our ranks. Every man cannot be a leader, but he can be a good soldier. Therefore, do not allow yourselves to be misled by fakirs who may come among you in the present crisis. If these instructions are carried out our victory will be more quickly attained.

To the employers and public, we again make our position clear. We are willing to negotiate at any time. We had no wish to enter into this dispute. This fight was sought by the shipowners. Any suggestions which may be made from the other side will be carefully considered. We have made our offer, which is a very generous one, to them to prevent the present deadlock.

My final word for the present is—Men of the Catering Department, remember 1911. You made history then. The record of our organization is a brilliant one. Don't tarnish it in 1921. Our maxim must be—Every member of the Catering Department on board ship this day must do his duty.

JOSEPH COTTER,
General President.

GREEK SHIPPING EXPANDS

During the war the merchant vessels of Greece suffered severely and the loss in tonnage approximated 60 per cent. There were left 205 steamers of 449,000 gross tons. Rehabilitation of the merchant service has progressed favorably which is in a large measure due to the energy of Greek ship-owning interests. At present the fleet consists of 343 steamers, having a gross tonnage of 565,543. Of these, one steamer is seventeen thousand gross tons and one of 9,272. Of the balance, there are twenty-four ships of from five thousand to 6,500, forty-five of from three thousand to 4,500, and sixty-six of from one thousand to 2,998 tons. The remaining 206 vessels are each below one thousand gross tons, fifteen being less than one hundred.

Quintessence of Hypocrisy

Our anti-labor Americanization crew, headed by Orth of the National Security League, David Jayne Hill of the corporation lawyers, Ralph Easley of the National Civic Federation and others of like backing, got together in the Hotel Astor in New York the other day and established a national organization.

In order to plumb the depths of their hypocrisy, one must glance over this letter, sent to Chairman Benson of the Shipping Board by Andrew Furuseth, president of the International Seamen's Union of America, and dealing with one of the recent tricks of this same element in the City of Baltimore:

"Dear Admiral:—On the 29th day of April, in a meeting called by you, on behalf of and instructed by the representatives of the seafarers' unions, officially made a proposal that—

" 'Preference be given to American citizens for all ratings for which they are qualified; second, preference to those who hold intention papers, and preference of such intention papers should be according to seniority of the papers.'

"You hesitated and qualified, until the proposal became meaningless. The shipowners definitely and clearly answered 'No,' whereupon you joined them in their refusal.

"Notwithstanding this episode, which must be clear in your memory, a 'Steamship Operators' committee of Baltimore, in paid advertisements that up to the present must have cost more than $1000 of Government money, accuse the foreigners in the Seamen's Unions of discriminating against and trying to drive out the native Americans. At the same time, the agents evidently of the Sea Service Bureau (of the Shipping Board) appealed to the foreigners to go to work and to disregard the Americans.

"While neither of the two parties thus far have accepted the advice given them, and while I am not complaining of the crimping methods used, I deem it my duty to send you this information in order that you may have an opportunity to inquire into it, and for the honor of yourself and the Government, to stop it.

"Most respectfully yours,
"ANDREW FURUSETH."

Besmirching the Name

There is a cross-section of the Americanization game in real life. If Americans are .organized, they are enemies of our form of government and are to be suppressed by tarring and feathering, deportation from the State, or shooting, as local circumstances may decide. If American labor is not organized, and men born abroad form the backbone of unionism in a locality, then, as in the steel strike, they must be Americanized by the Cossacks or Federal agents. Now that the United States Steel Corporation is about to take charge of the Shipping Board, in the person of Mr. Farrell, the Pittsburgh style of Americanization will be offered to all seamen, and if they happen, as in Baltimore, to be citizens, then paid advertisements will slander them anyhow, and the union-smashing program will be sustained. The shipowners' reason, and Benson's reason, for refusing to agree to preference in the merchant marine for citizens or intending citizens, is that these men are organized. They hope to find sufficient aliens, in the Atlantic ports, from time to time, to move their ships during the lock-out of the unions.

Strikebreakers Fail Miserably

Certain ships have, indeed, been manned by strikebreakers, and many appeals from these ships for help in distress have come back to their owners. So serious is the total of these cases of distress, and so great the cost involved in sending aid to them, that Chairman Marvin of the shipowners' committee has ventured to talk, in the New York Journal of Commerce, of "sabotaged vessels," and has hinted that either the engineers left the machinery in dangerous condition when they quit, or some of the men now on the ships have been up to mischief.

Union officials brand this complaint as nonsense. They say that the lock-out is still in its opening stage; that there would be no reason for the desperate state of mind, on the part of the union men, implied in acts of sabotage, at a time when the tie-up is still in process of completion. But there is abundant cause for the distress of the scab-manned ships in the fact that the men who are aboard them are ignorant and incompetent to perform the ordinary duties of seamen, firemen and engineers. Steamship boilers are not proof against the folly of unskilled handling.

Railroad Workers Vacillate

Rumblings of defiance of the wage cut ordered by the U. S. Railroad Labor Board for the classified employes of the railroad industry have already reached here, although the amount of the cut and the extent to which various groups will be included in it have yet to be announced. The maintenance of way and maintenance of rolling stock represent the great majority of labor cost in railroading. All employes in these two departments will have to take the reduced pay or quit Probably all of the clerks and baggage handlers and station employes will have to take the same choice. Probably, also the running trades will be brought within the sweep of the knife.

What will they do?

It is a serious moment for these two million workers, of whom perhaps 750,000 are already laid off as a measure of economy for the corporations during the commercial depression. Shall those now holding jobs take a strike vote, if the wage reduction is the 20 per cent that the companies insist upon? Strike votes generally result in affirmative majorities. Shall they go out, in a time of widespread unemployment? If they do, how long will the strike last, and what will be the means of its settlement, and what will be the terms? Will a strike bring them nearer to a real solution of the railroad wage problem? That, after all, is the prime consideration.

Argument on these points is engaging the minds and the tongues and pens of the officials of the sixteen railroad labor organizations. They are feeling their way to safe ground. They know how quickly an unwise strike can injure an organization built up through generations of toil and sacrifice; but they also know that once the membership come to the conclusion that their union is spineless and a waste of good money, nothing can hold them within its fold, nor save them from a rout. Hence the policy of the officials will be firm, and their program will cover all the steps toward a selected goal which must not fall short of the definite safeguarding of an American standard living wage, with the principle of industrial democracy upheld by written contract.

Compensation Comes Slow

Congress is just now considering, in its House Committee on the District of Columbia, the Fitzgerald-Jones bill establishing workmen's compensation for industrial accidents in the District. The measure promoted by the American Association for Labor Legislation extends this protection to the 125,000 private employes in mills, stores, laundries, bakeries and other employments, including domestic service and farming, within the Federal District. Federal employes and employes of the District Government are already covered by similar laws.

Of course, the insurance companies and their agents, backed by reactionaries of every stripe, are protesting against the bill. Four hearings have thus far been held. When Insurance Commissioner Duffy of Ohio, who has been administering a like statute for eight years past, made a powerful argument in its support, the fact was virtually ignored by the local press. They were busy printing accounts of the opinions of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and its retainers, that this was anarchistic, bolshevistic and communistic radicalism.

The District has one death per week, and thousands of cases of injury resulting in three or four weeks' total incapacity, every year, from industrial accidents which now have no safeguard in either reporting law, a liability law or a compensation law. All the old common-law defenses of the employer remain in force. The railroad terminal alone injures an average of one person daily, with this legal freedom from responsibility.

The insurance men say that if this bill becomes law, and since it establishes an insurance fund at cost, depriving them of a private profit on the new insurance business to be created by the law, then the State Legislatures may copy from this model, and cut them off from business in all the States. They tell each other this in private circulars. They are flooding Congress with protests against the bill, and unless the friends of fair compensation laws also send a word to Congress they may actually prevent its passage.

Send protests to Chairman Focht, or to Representative Oscar Keller, at the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The man who knows least about the strike talks loudest about its evils. The man who knows most about the strike most clearly perceives the "soul of good in things miscalled evil."

During the war 30,000 bombs were dropped by the British air squadrons stationed at Dunkirk, principally upon the docks at Ostend, Bruges, and Zeebrugge, the total weight of the explosives being over 1000 tons.

Washington, D. C., May 19, 1921.

Hon. James J. Davis,
Secretary of Labor,
Washington, D. C.
Dear Mr. Secretary:

Agreeable to your suggestion that I place in your hands the condition upon which the lockout may be settled so far as the sailors, firemen, cooks and stewards are concerned, I hereby respectfully submit the following, which will apply to the above Unions after you shall have succeeded in bringing about an agreement between the Shipping Board, the American Steamship Owners' Association and the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association:

(1) The wages in the coastwise trade to remain as it was prior to May 1, 1921;

(2) The wages in the competitive trade to be reduced to $75 per month for able seamen and marine firemen; (Note—This will be about 15 per cent reduction.)

(3) Wages of marine cooks and stewards I cannot state because I do not know;

Basis of Working Rules

(1) Three watches at sea for sailors in vessels carrying six or more men;

(2) Eight hours to constitute a day's work in harbor, such eight hours to be between 7 a. m. and 5 p. m. daytime.

(3) All work done for the safety of the vessel, her passengers, cargo or crew, or for other vessels in distress, shall be done at any time without any overtime pay.

(4) Overtime shall be paid in port, outside of the regular working hours, for loading and discharging of vessels, handling cargo gear, mail, and baggage; for moving, repairing, fueling or cleaning of vessels. (Note—The difference in the method of operation on the Atlantic and Pacific is so different that the same working rules could not fairly be applied to both coasts. The work done by sailors, firemen, cooks and stewards, is so different that the same working rules can have no application and the representatives of the different organizations must be called in to agree upon appropriate working rules for each department of the vessel, said rules to fairly lie within the outlines here agreed upon.

(5) No discrimination against Union men, or non-Union men, as such, shall be practiced or tolerated.

(6) Officials of the Union, as representatives of the men, shall have the right to be present when the men are signed on or paid off, whether such signing and paying off is done in the Shipping Commissioner's office or on board ship. (Note—This is the rule agreed to in Great Britain and has for its purpose the presence of both sides in order to promote fairness and the co-operation necessary to successful competition.)

If the above is agreed to as outlined the Pacific coast (employers and employes) should be authorized to meet and arrange the proper working rules. The representatives of employers and employes on the Atlantic coast and the representatives of the Shipping Board might meet at once, either here in Washington or in New York, for the purpose of agreeing upon proper working rules to lie within the above outline.

Most respectfully submitted.

(Signed) ANDREW FURUSETH,
President,
International Seamen's Union of America.

Note—As President of the International Seamen's Union of America, I have advisory powers only, but I can undertake to sign if the above is agreed to. It is impossible for me to undertake any revision of the working rules for either of the departments on board of ship. I have not the power nor have I, outside of the deck department, the necessary technical knowledge.

May 20, 1921.

Hon. William S. Benson,
Chairman U. S. Shipping Board,
Washington, D. C.
Dear Admiral:

The following is a copy of an affidavit made at Philadelphia, Pa.:

"Affidavit of Crew of the S. S. 'Gulf Maid'.

"The undersigned were late members of the crew of the S. S. 'Gulf Maid'. They went on board this ship at Port Arthur, Texas, in response to an advertisement in the paper for messmen. They reported May 9, 1921, and were taken to sea on May 10. After the ship left port they were changed in their ratings from messmen to able-bodied seamen and given able-bodied seamen's duties.

"Two of the undersigned, W. Stanfill and R. A. Cook, were compelled to stand the wheel watch during the trip from Port Arthur to Philadelphia and to perform all other able-bodied seamen's duties. Besides the three undersigned, there was only one other man in the deck force on this ship, who had never had any previous sea experience. The three undersigned men have never been to sea before and have had no experience whatever as seamen or in any other capacity on board ship.

"Sworn to and subscribed before me this 18th day of May, 1921.

"W. STANFILL,
"R. A. COOK.
"F. L. PRIEST.

"MORTIMER W. H. COX,
"Notary Public.
"Commission expires January 17, 1925."

You have repeatedly stated that you are in favor of enforcing the law "as long as it is on the statute books." The "Gulf Maid" is understood to be a Shipping Board vessel. It was your people that hired this crew; it was your people that violated the law; it was the property of the citizens of the United States that was put in jeopardy as a result of this violation of law.

Of course, this is only a single instance. This is what takes place practically in every port where a vessel leaves, and it goes a long way to explain the disasters that are overtaking the ships after getting to sea, and sometimes before they get out to sea. It is hardly fair to suggest, as it has been suggested, that it is a result of sabotage.

Respectfully yours,

(Signed) ANDREW FURUSETH.

THE PORT OF DANZIG

During the months of February and March, 1921, there arrived at the port of Danzig a total of 443 vessels, having a tonnage of 269,235, as compared with 279 vessels in the corresponding months of 1920 and a tonnage of 120,455. Of the arrivals, those during March outnumbered the February by 30 vessels and a tonnage of 11,547.

German shipping occupied first place in both months and increased from 187 vessels in 1920 (tonnage 37,260) to 260 vessels in 1921 (tonnage 73,545). The British flag accounted for 39 vessels as against 38 in 1920, with a tonnage of 52,647, compared with 22,724 in 1920. American shipping decreased from 11 vessels (tonnage 40,505) in 1920 to 8 vessels (tonnage 33,369) in 1921. Vessels flying the Danish flag in 1921 increased over 1920 from 11 to 30 and tonnage from 9,642 to 48,397. This important increase is due to vessels of the recently inaugurated Baltic American Line, which call at Danzig on their way to and from Libau.

Dutch shipping increased from 3 vessels in March, 1920, to 15 in February-March, 1921, and the tonnage from 829 to 18,110. Swedish vessels decreased from 25 in 1920 to 24 in 1921, but tonnage increased from 3,126 to 7,959. The French flag accounted for 1 vessel (tonnage 4,623) in March, 1920, where during February-March, 1921, there were 4 vessels, covering a tonnage of 3,152.

Labor News

At New York on May 25 wages of five thousand cloth hat workers were reduced 10 per cent by a board of arbitration. The reduction went into effect immediately.

The Santa Fe have notified of further reductions in working forces at all points on the coast lines. This is the fourth cut since January, 1921.

The Senate Finance Committee has been advised by Samuel Gompers, representing the American Federation of Labor, that indignation meetings will be held in every city, town and hamlet of this country if a sales tax is levied by Congress.

A voluntary cut of $1 a day in their wage schedule, effective on all new buildings at Fresno, has been announced by Brick Masons' Union No. 1 of California. The wage schedule calls for a $10 a day wage under the new scale, and the reduction is believed to be the first in a building trade in the city.

A new agreement providing average wage reductions of 10 per cent for five thousand slaughter and packing-house workers in New York district has been signed by employing packers and the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America. The new contract also provided for continuation of the preferential union shop. The agreement was signed by Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Wilson & Co., Morris & Co. and various smaller concerns.

The Massachusetts State Department of Labor and Industries reports improved conditions in the textile industries. The demand for boots and shoes persisted, although the majority of plants were still on reduced schedules; metal and machinery trades were dull. The department reported twenty-four strikes or lockouts; sixteen of them over wages, since May 1, involving about nine thousand employes.

Employes in shops of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway at Silves, Ill., near Moline, Ill., announced that they would refuse to abide by any decision of the Railroad Labor Board involving a reduction of wages of unskilled workmen, to take effect July 1, and that they would take immediate steps to prevent application of any cut in wages, even if they had to quit work.

Conferences over proposed wage reductions for the eighty thousand employes of the American Railway Express Company failed to reach any agreement and the company has filed the dispute with the United States Railroad Labor Board. The express company proposed that rates of pay be restored to those in effect before the increase of approximately 25 per cent was granted by the Labor Board, August 10, 1920. The employes refused to accept any reduction.

The anthracite mine workers will join forces with the bituminous miners in formulating policies to govern the negotiation of new wage agreements with the coal operators, to take the place of the contract which expire May 31, 1922. This action, which will consolidate the ranks of the 700,000 organized miners, was decided on at a recent conference between international officers of the United Mine Workers of America and the presidents and international board members of three union districts comprising anthracite coal regions.

Unemployment figures compiled by Secretary Frank Morrison, of the American Federation of Labor, from reports reaching him, show that in 210 cities there are 1,325,061 persons, both union and non-union, out of employment as compared with 1,391,396 the last of March.

A new American steamship service sailing from New York to Piraeus, Constantinople, Varna, and Constanza, has been inaugurated by the American Black Sea Line (Inc.), with Stephanidis Benas & Co. as general agents. The first ship of the new line left New York on April 15.

A contract for the construction in the United States of a twenty-thousand-ton electrically driven combination fuel supply ship for the Japanese Navy has been signed with the New York Shipbuilding Corporation. This announcement was made by Captain M. Yokura, chairman of the Imperial Japanese Naval Commission.

Hope for the safety of six men and one woman aboard the barge "Miztec" when it foundered in a gale on Lake Superior has been abandoned. No sign of wreckage of the "Miztec" has been found. The steamboat "Zillah," which had the "Miztec" in tow, made port in safety only after her boiler rooms had flooded and her rudder smashed.

Navy officials have decided to assign the transport "Hancock" to Pearl Harbor as a receiving ship, succeeding the U. S. S. "Monterey," according to advices received here from Hawaii. The Government plans to sell the "Monterey" and bids will shortly be issued. The "Monterey" will continue to remain at the Hawaiian naval base until she is disposed of. The "Hancock," 3840 tons, arrived at Honolulu on May 14. She is nearly fifty years old and saw service in the Spanish-American and the world war. During the war she carried the first contingent of marines to France. The ship has a complement of 232 men.

Belief is expressed by Commander Wallace Bertholf of the Twelfth Naval District that the barnacle-covered lifeboat found drifting off the coast of Southern California was not from the tug "Conestoga" or from any craft of the United States Navy. Commander Bertholf says that it was his opinion that the naval tug "Conestoga" turned turtle in heavy weather or broke in two when struck by heavy seas. He stated that the craft might have been swamped so suddenly that no chance was given to the radio operators on board to send out an S. O. S. The "Conestoga" is believed to have foundered while en route from San Diego to Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, with a crew of thirty-two officers and men on board. A squadron of submarines, subchasers and eagle boats are out scouting for the missing tug, but so far there has been no report of her being sighted. Commander Bertholf stated that the craft, in the event of encountering storms, might have turned turtle, in view of the fact that everything on deck might have been made fast. He said that her aerials might also have been dismasted when heavy weather was first encountered. The lifeboat picked up by the "Senator" was not from a naval vessel in the opinion of Commander Bertholf.

Domestic and Naval

The ten thousand ton steel tank steamer "Hammac" was successfully sent down the ways last week at the Potrero plant of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation. The vessel has been built for the United States Shipping Board and has a capacity for 75,000 barrels of oil.

The estimated number of suicides in the United States during 1920 may be conservatively given at not less than twelve thousand. Of these reported cases 707 were children, the boys averaging fifteen years, the girls sixteen and the youngest child five.

The new liner "Taiyo Maru," 14,000-ton passenger liner allocated to Japan by the reparations' committee, will arrive in San Francisco June 23 on her maiden voyage. This new liner gives to the T. K. K. lines six fast passenger steamers for trans-Pacific service. The "Taiyo" is declared to be thoroughly equipped with first class accommodations and has cabins for over eight hundred passengers.

The Holland-American line has under construction a new motor ship designed to carry passengers and freight and having a deadweight capacity of fourteen thousand tons. The new vessel will be propelled by a three thousand horse-power Diesel engine, and will be able to carry one thousand tons of fuel in the double bottom. The motor ship, which is being built abroad, is intended for the freight trade between Europe and this country and will probably touch at Pacific Coast ports, increasing the growing number of motor ships in these waters.

The motor schooner "Oregon," which arrived at Philadelphia on May 18, was towed 2400 miles. The trip was covered in twenty-five days. The "Oregon" is a vessel of sixteen hundred gross tons and carried a shipment of 1,500,000 feet of lumber from the Pacific Coast for the Charles R. McCormick Steamship Company. The lumber was for the Pennsylvania Railroad. Two tugs of the United States Shipping Board were utilized to tow the craft. The vessel left Colon breakwater on April 29, in tow, and was taken to Key West and turned over to another tug, which completed the voyage. While lying in the canal zone the "Oregon" was libeled. She had been several months in making the trip from the Pacific Coast to Atlantic waters.

Details of how American seamanship won out against big odds when the United States submarine "R-14" was disabled and out of fuel in mid-Pacific during a heavy storm, are contained in official correspondence from the Hawaiian Islands. The "R-14" was missing five days. She had been in search of the missing naval tug "Conestoga." When she arrived back in Hilo she was a cross between a three-masted windjammer and an undersea boat, as she was rigged with command built of hull iron and flying sails made of mattress covers and canvas hammocks. After chasing the sea in search of the missing tug, Lieutenant A. D. Douglass, in command, found that he had exhausted the fuel and ran short on electric power. The American naval officers on the submarine utilized the materials at hand and succeeded in sailing the undersea craft back to her port, which necessitated a five-day voyage.

News from Abroad

British naval officers at Constantinople have sent a warship to Adalia to force the Turks to release eleven prisoners who were removed from the British steamer "Palatina."

A naval building program calling for an expenditure of a sum equivalent to $100,000,000, spread out over a period of ten years, has been outlined by the Department of Army and Navy of Mexico.

The Rumanian Government is said to be extremely anxious concerning the concentration of about thirty Russian Soviet divisions southwest of Kiev, according to dispatches received by the French foreign office.

The atmosphere of Sofia (Bulgaria) is still somewhat unhealthy for royalty. King Boris recently found himself in close proximity to a bomb which caused eighteen casualties. The missile was thrown during a national holiday parade.

The seizure by Greece of the Japanese steamer "Heimei Maru," which was transporting from Siberia about three hundred Turkish officers and two thousand soldiers, who had been prisoners of war, was made the subject of protest by the Japanese Government.

A report from Buenos Aires, dated May 30, states that the customs warehouse in the port zone, where longshoremen have been on strike, was burned last night. Police believe the fire of incendiary origin. Several arrests have been made. The loss is believed to run into millions of pesos.

Radical elements seized the municipal government of the village of Jacona, near Sonora, State of Michoacan, last week, and in fighting with the village authorities killed the chief of police and wounded the mayor and several other civilians. Red flags were hoisted above several buildings.

Twelve American sailors from the flagship "Huron" were wounded, two of them seriously, in a recent street fight between American bluejackets and Japanese sailors at Shanghai. Shore leave for men of the cruisers "Huron" and "New Orleans" and the gunboats in the harbor has been stopped.

The Canadian Government fisheries patrol steamship "Malaspina" captured a Japanese sealing schooner, arrested the crew, seized 150 skins and destroyed the boat, according to a report reaching Prince Rupert May 26. The "Malaspina" left port last week for the south, and is said to have overhauled the schooner May 25.

M. Chitcherin, the Bolshevik foreign minister, has sent to Riga a general denial of reports that there has been a concentration of Soviet troops at various border points. Denial also is given to reports of insurrections in Tambov and Hursk provinces and activities of "green armies" in the governments of Petrograd, Pskov and Novgorod. All these reports, Chitcherin declares, are pure inventions.

Reports from Jerusalem by the Jewish Telegraphic Agency state that the inhabitants of Transjordania have risen in revolt against their newly-appointed ruler, Prince Zeid, third son of the King of Hedjaz, and have defeated the prince's forces in a pitched battle, killing one hundred of his men. The insurrectionists, it is said, desire to be governed by the British administration in Palestine under Sir Herbert Samuel.

"I was just reading the impression of an Englishman who has been visiting this country," said Mrs. Gabb. "He states that the only fault he has to find with American women is that they are overdressed."

"And yet we claim that the English have no sense of humor," commented Mr. Gath.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The man getting his hair cut noticed that the barber's dog, which was lying on the floor beside the chair, had his eyes fixed on his master at work. "Nice dog that," said the customer.

"He is, sir."

"He seems very fond of watching you cut hair."

"It ain't that, sir," explained the barber. "You see, sometimes I make a mistake and snip off a little bit of a customer's ear."—The Christian Advocate (New York).

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

REPORT OF LABOR BUREAU

Accurate Industrial Information Assembled by New Labor Agency

Research and publicity service conducted by trained experts is coming to be a necessary part of labor union activities, according to the first annual report of The Labor Bureau, Inc., made public at its New York office, 1 Union Square.

The Labor Bureau was established in May, 1920, the report states, "on the assumption that the labor movement has need of expert service along the lines of economic, social and political research and of newspaper and magazine publicity," that "labor has need to know as much about industry and the circumstances under which it operates as employers," and that "labor has as much need as employers to get its own interpretation of these facts before the public, before arbitration boards, and other interested bodies."

Served Twenty-seven Labor Unions

The first year's experience of The Bureau, the report claims, has proved the truth of these assumptions.

"The need for such a Bureau has been demonstrated," it says, "by the immediate demand for the work it performs." In this period The Bureau has rendered professional services along such lines to no less than twenty-seven labor organizations, representing a total membership of approximately 400,000 workers, has opened branch offices in Chicago and Philadelphia, and has established itself on a self-supporting basis.

"The services rendered have included twenty cost of living investigations, eleven investigations of earnings and wages, the handling of ten arbitration and wage board cases, reports on profits and financial conditions in seven industries, including over seven hundred concerns; newspaper and advertising publicity service to ten unions, bill drafting and legislative investigation for New York City legislators, and nine special investigations of various kinds."

Future Possibilities Suggested

The report concludes with the assertion that the first year's experience gives merely a suggestion of the possibilities for the Bureau's service in the years that are to come.

"Labor's responsibilities," the report says, "grow with its increase in power and prestige. Responsibilities require accurate information. The growing share which labor exercises in the control of industrial management demands a growing knowledge by labor of the processes of production and business finance. Labor's increasing participation in American political life necessitates an increasing knowledge by labor of the affairs of national, State and local Government.

"The possibilities for the future growth and usefulness of the Labor Bureau are limited only by the limits that can be sent to the growth of the power and prestige of organized labor."

The document is signed by the four directors of the Bureau: Alfred L. Bernheim, Evans Clark, David J. Saposs, and George Soule.

Labor's Auxiliary

The report outlines in detail the policies which the Bureau has followed during the year, the facts of its incorporation, a running account of the services performed by it during the year, the organizations which have endorsed its work, and its financial condition.

The Bureau is called by its directors "an auxiliary to the labor movement." "Its aim," they say, "has been to put the weapons of facts and figures into the hands of union representatives to use in the service of the rank and file."

The directors maintain, however, that "the only facts and figures worth using are those obtained by investigations of the most scrupulous accuracy and the highest professional skill."

Only labor organizations and individuals working in the interests of labor, the report states, have been accepted as clients of the Labor Bureau. This is in accordance with the principle that "no man can serve two masters in the present industrial struggle." The Bureau does not, however, refuse to accept retainers "covering service for both employers and workers under joint agreements or other arrangements sanctioned by the labor organizations concerned."

Deficit Overcome

The financial statement shows an operating deficit for the first year of $1,885.86. This deficit, it is pointed out, was due to "the usual initial expense involved in the establishment of every organization." It was met by the proceeds of the sale of an equal amount of stock—$250—to each director and by small additional loans.

The Bureau, it is stated, operated at a loss only during the first six months of its existence, but since October has been completely self-supporting. The year's experience, it is claimed, indicates that the Bureau will continue permanently on this basis.

No dividends have been, or will be, declared, the report states, as the Bureau is strictly a non-profit-making concern. Charges to clients, it is said, are based upon a computation of fixed salaries of the members of the staff during the time in which they are occupied on each particular case, the cost of materials used, incidental expenses, and office overhead, plus a small per cent for expansion.

The regular staff of the Bureau is supplemented by consulting experts and research or other assistants in every line who are called into service by the Bureau when occasion requires. These include engineers, lawyers, accountants, investigators, and others.

Wide Variety of Services

The work of the Labor Bureau, as described in the report, has covered a variety of services. The following are typical examples.

Members of the staff, acting as economic advisers to several unions, in the New York book and job printing trade, have prepared the briefs and argued the unions' case in two sets of wage arbitration proceedings, and have taken part in the cases of several groups of railroad workers before the Railroad Wage Board in Chicago.

The Bureau prepared complete reports covering wages, profits, and cost of living in two leading Philadelphia industries, textile manufacturing and painting and decorating. These reports showed wage increases and price reductions which were possible out of excess profits.

The Bureau handled all the newspaper and advertising publicity in connection with the painters' strike in New York last summer, as well as the publicity in connection with several of its reports and the arbitration cases handled by its staff.

The Bureau keeps the personnel records of all the members of one of its clients and renders quarterly reports to the organization giving exact data covering wages paid in each occupation, each shop, and the entire industry involved.

The Bureau has made special investigations covering, among others, the following subjects: shop committees; industrial council and other existing methods of joint control in industry; housing facilities in New York City; cost of newspaper printing; loans made to city employes; and comparative statistics of police and fire departments in leading cities.

Endorsed by Many Unions

Among the many organizations listed which have endorsed the Bureau or to whom application for references may be made, are the following: Chicago Federation of Labor; New York City Central Trades and Labor Council; Philadelphia Central Labor Union; Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers; International Seamen's Union; Railway Employes Department, A. F. of L.; United Textile Workers; Brotherhood of Painters, District Councils in New York and Philadelphia; Cleveland Building Trades Council; Chicago Typographical Union; Detroit Typographical Union; Newspaper Web Pressmen No. 25; Uniformed Firemen's Association of New York City.

Directors are Trained Experts

The directors of the Labor Bureau are trained experts, all of whom have had experience in labor research or publicity before the establishment of the Bureau.

Alfred L. Bernheim is a graduate of Columbia University and an expert in business organization.

Evans Clark graduated from Amherst College and took post-graduate work at Harvard and Columbia Universities. He was for three years Instructor in Political Science at Princeton University and served afterwards as Research Director for the Socialist Delegation in the New York City Board of Aldermen. He is a member of Bookkeepers, Stenographers and Accountants Union No. 12646, American Federation of Labor.

David J. Saposs graduated from the University of Wisconsin and was for six years special Research Assistant to Professor John R. Commons, the leading academic authority on the labor movement. Mr. Saposs is co-author with Professor Commons of "A History of Labor in the United States." He was later on the staff of the U. S. Commission on Industrial Relations, the New York State Department of Labor and the Interchurch Commission on the Steel Strike.

George Soule is a graduate of Yale University. He was formerly associated with the editorial staff of The New Republic and The Nation, and a member of the staff of the Interchurch Steel Commission. Mr. Soule is chairman of the Research Committee of the American Labor Party of Greater New York and a member of the Associated Teachers Union (Local No. 71, A. F. of L.). He is co-author with J. M. Budish of "The New Unionism in the Clothing Industry."

E. L. Oliver, the bureau's Philadelphia representative, was formerly on the staff of the U. S. Federal Trade Commission and Instructor in Industry in the University of Pennsylvania.

Offices in Three Cities

The New York office of The Labor Bureau is located at 1 Union Square. It is under the active supervision of Directors Bernheim, Clark and Soule. Bessie Leon is the office secretary.

The Chicago office is at 14 West Washington Street and is in charge of Director Saposs, assisted by Olive H. Rabe and Henry A. Rabe.

E. L. Oliver, Philadelphia representative of The Labor Bureau, directs the work of the Philadelphia office at 1700 Arch Street. Lina Price is office secretary.

DEMOCRACY IN INDUSTRY

By Leonard S. Woolf, author of "Co-operation and the Future of Industry."

The acme of democracy is thought to lie in the principle "one man, one vote" and many people have proclaimed the co-operative movement a pure democracy because it has adopted this principle. There is undoubtedly a certain amount of truth in this. The ultimate control of every co-operative society rests with the quarterly or half-yearly general meeting of members. At such meeting the management committee is elected, and to it the committee is accountable for the greatest and for the least of its acts. And since each member has at the general meeting one and only one vote, we do find in Co-operation a community of individuals with equal rights, in whom is vested both the power over and the responsibility for all the acts done in the name of the community.

But to understand this is not to understand the whole question. The doctrine "one man, one vote" is important, but it does not go to the root of democratic and co-operative principles. In attempting to apply to industry the principles of democracy, co-operators were breaking new ground and they were faced with a most complicated problem.

What the co-operator saw and still sees in the non-co-operative business and factories around him is this: First, the motive power which begins to set industrial operations in motion is capital. The object with which an ordinary shop is opened, or an ordinary factory is built, is profit of earning of interest on capital. In other words, the primary object is that money shall make money. But here deep down at its commencement co-operation proceeds on a different principle. The original co-operative motive power is the needs of man, not his money; and the co-operative store or factory starts operations in order to supply the needs of its members, not in order that their money shall earn money.

It is the man who begins as the pivot of the system. It is necessary to point out that this is not a matter of purely theoretical interest. It has the most practical effect upon the working of the two systems of industry, the co-operative and the non-co-operative. If you take the community of a country as a whole, it is clear that its interest is simply that industry should supply its needs, by which one means those commodities and services which are necessary if the individuals forming the community are to lead reasonably healthy and happy lives. It is widely recognized that the ordinary industrial system does not do this, and very largely because the needs of money and not the needs of man are the pivot of the system. Many writers in recent years have lamented the appalling wastefulness of our industrial system—the fact that an enormous amount of industrial energy is expended first in producing things which nobody really wants, and then in inducing people to believe that they really want them. All the making of shoddy articles, all the touting and advertising which is directed to induce people to buy them, are so much waste of industrial effort and energy from the point of view of the democracy or the community. And this waste exists because we organize our industries not in order to supply the wants or to produce things for the use of the community, but in order that capital may be profitably employed. That this is true in practice is proved by the fact that this kind of waste scarcely exists at all under the co-operative system, even though co-operative societies today are forced to compete with non-co-operative businesses. There is no motive in a co-operative society or a C. W. S. factory to induce its members to buy a shoddy article or one for which they have no real need or use, and in consequence one finds that the $500,000,000 of annual English co-operative trade can be conducted by the movement with practically no advertising at all.

This, then, is the first great practical difference between the co-operative and the non-co-operative systems, that in the former the motive-power which sets in motion industrial operations is the needs of the individuals forming the community, while in the latter it is the necessity of "money making money."

Few people will deny that capital is closely connected with that human passion —desire for gain—in whose name consciously or unconsciously more inhuman acts have been done than in the name of any other passion. The real danger of capital is that it is difficult for its owner or its lover to know what it is doing. To use it he must put it out of his hands into the hands of others, and he loses the sense of his ownership and of its tangibility, and, therefore, of his personal responsibility. And so the man that would be moved to genuine indignation at the thought of misery being wantonly inflicted on a mosquito, cannot be brought to see that he is in any way responsible for the human misery caused by his $500 judiciously invested to bring in a safe $100 per annum.

The arrangement by which Co-operators have refused to allow capital to acquire any power over the machinery of industrial organization abolishes at a stroke one of the most dangerous evils of the undemocratic system which has been built up all over the world during the last century.

The highest mountain in the State of New York is Mount Marcy, a peak in the Adirondacks, which rises 5344 feet above sea level. The average or mean elevation of the State, as estimated by the United States Geological Survey, Department of the Interior, is 900 feet.

SHIPPING AT HAVRE

Recent consular reports state that shipping in the port of Havre during the first three months of 1921 reflected the dullness in business and trade generally prevailing during that period. Docks and storehouses presented a far different appearance from that of a year ago, when arriving ships and merchandise tested the capacity of the port.

Statistics compiled by the Havre Chamber of Commerce show a falling off of 1307 ships of 135,970 gross tons, as compared with the first quarter of 1920. These figures, however, include ships of every character, ocean-going vessels, river steamers and canal vessels.

The curtailment in the volume of shipping has as a corollary a large increase in the number of American seamen out of employment, and a corresponding increase in expenditure for their care, maintenance and return to the United States.

Cargo vessels have fallen off both in number and in quantity of merchandise carried. One United States Shipping Board vessel of 6000 gross tons arrived with 2300 tons of cargo. Practically all American ships return in ballast, so that the freight one way must cover the expense of the entire voyage.

Statistics of imports by vessels of other nations are not yet available, but the cargoes of American vessels for the first quarter of the current year include 49,118 bales of cotton, 17,320 tons of crude oil and petroleum products, 8367 tons of grain and rice, 7600 tons of machinery, 4564 tons of steel, 6058 tons of coal, 2200 tons of frozen meat, 28,171 tons of general cargo.

Included in the general cargoes were shipments of farm implements and machinery, structural steel, copper, meats, linen, perfumery, hops, horses and automobiles.

The American Red Cross received large shipments during the quarter for use in European relief work.

According to the statement compiled by the French Bureau of Customs, the total number of loaded vessels entering the port during the first quarter was 332, with a tonnage of 512,713, and entries in ballast numbered 18, with a tonnage of 10,418. Clearance of loaded vessels numbered 236, with a total tonnage of 367,958, and clearances in ballast numbered 94, with a total tonnage of 135,603.

Of the entrances with cargo, 213 were English vessels, 42 Dutch, 31 United States, and the others were of various nationalities. In the customs statement no account is taken of vessels which first entered at another French port and subsequently called at Havre. For example, the entries of American ships show 31 instead of 39, the actual number which entered.

SALT IN THE SEA

The saline matter in the ocean is sufficient to make a block of salt measuring 4,800,000 cubic miles. If spread over the entire surface of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, it would form a crust more than a mile and a half deep. One per cent of the content of salt in the ocean would cover all the land areas of the globe to a depth of 290 feet.—United States Geological Survey.

Sales Tax Is No Panacea

The sales tax in Canada is not a substitute but is an additional tax on business profits, writes W. G. Gates, Canadian correspondent to Commerce and Finance.

"Americans who imagine that the Canadian experiment throws a flood of light on the sales and turnover taxes will probably be disappointed," says the correspondent.

"The one sure thing demonstrated by the ten months' experiment up to March 31 is that the tax has not produced the revenue expected. Our minister of finance, like Moses, struck the rock, but there was no great outrush of water, nothing more than a trickle equal to less than 10 per cent of the total revenue. Another fact demonstrated is that the tax can never be counted on as a major source of revenue.

"The sales tax consists of 1 per cent on sales by manufacturers and wholesalers, or jobbers, and importations at their dutiable value.

"Canada's experience may be taken as fairly good evidence that estimates of probable returns from either the sales or the turnover taxes have been much exaggerated. Apparently they have been based too much on the figures, not of a normal period, but of one of marked inflation.

"While Americans may see in the results of the Canadian experiment material for guidance in shaping their own policy, they may well hesitate before jumping to the conclusion that because this method of taxation is considered necessary in Canada, therefore, it is desirable in the United States.

"For one thing, Canada needs revenue much more badly than does the Republic."

How About This?

"We would like to know," says the All-American Co-operative Commission, in its press bulletin, "why bread still sells at war prices in most of the cities of the country, although wheat has fallen to one-half its last year's price, so that the wheat in a pound loaf of bread now costs but 2.2 cents.

"We would like to know why coal that sells for $3.50 a ton at the mine costs us $13.50 by the time we coax it into our cellar. Of course, we do not suspect that the mine owners are still making their 200 to 2000 per cent war profits.

"We would like to know where the difference goes between the $1.15 that the farmer gets for a whole beef hide and the $8 to $10 we have to pay for a pair of shoes. This enormous discrepancy cannot be attributed to labor costs. According to the figures submitted to a Government commission, the profits of the shoe industry are approximately five times the total labor cost and one-third the total price of shoes. In order to maintain high prices, some shoe factories are now shutting down because of "over-production," although a recent Massachusetts investigation reveals that thousands of shoe factory employes in that State are themselves in need of shoes.

"There are a lot of things we would like to know, but we do not suppose we ever shall know them until the workers of farm and mine and rail and factory who produce and transport the Nation's wealth, cooperate to demand the abolition of monopoly privileges and to secure the distribution of the fruits of industry to those who labor to create them."

Bad Conditions Revealed

The United States Child Labor Bureau says the administration of the first Federal child labor law has shown the vicious circle of child labor, illiteracy, bodily feebleness and poverty. In five States it was found that many of the children were underweight when examined by a physician. They had been working in the mills for several years. Some gained quickly when taken out of the mill and put on a better diet. With others it was difficult to reach even the low standard called for by the physical requirement. Many parents were reported unable to pay for medical attention, and in most cases no public clinics were available to lend assistance.

One-fifth of the children in the five States left school when they were in the fourth grade; almost one-tenth of them had never attended school or had not gone beyond the first grade, and only one-twenty-fifth had attended the eighth or a higher grade. Their educational equipment was even more limited than the grade which they last attended would indicate.

One-fourth of the children would be refused certificates if ability to write their names legibly had been a requirement.

Non-Union Ship Returns

After covering 300 miles of her voyage to South America, the big Munson liner, "Huron," was forced to return to New York with 140 passengers. Because of the marine engineers'-seamen's strike, the ship was manned by strikebreakers and the captain feared to risk passengers and cargo.

The "Huron's" return is proof, trade unionists declare, that strikebreakers are not competent to hold licenses issued to them by the Government. Only recently the steamer "Pocahontas" cleared from Boston, but was towed back to port by a revenue cutter. Ship owners are giving little publicity to these incidents, which endanger life and property.

The strike was caused by a refusal to accept wage reductions and a lowering of working conditions that would destroy the Seamen's Act.

Defends Cotton Strike

The refusal of cotton planters to sow a full crop was defended by J. S. Wannamaker, president of the American Cotton Association, at a meeting in New York recently. Those present included cotton growers, Government officials, manufacturers and allied interests.

Mr. Wannamaker said it would be "nothing short of suicidal to produce more than half a crop of cotton in the year 1921."

World's Workers

The Maritime Federation of Buenos Aires, which declared a general strike, beginning June 1, has affected all water traffic operating under the flag of Argentine.

With the latest addition of over 600,000 cotton workers, the number of unemployed in Great Britain approximates 5,000,000. The present industrial stagnation affects approximately 17,000,000 persons in the

The number of persons unemployed in Switzerland has increased to 120,000. Of these about one-third are totally unemployed, while two-thirds have partial employment. Emergency employment works are in operation in many localities with but slight prospect for immediate improvement.

Liquidation of labor continues in Canada. The strike of 1200 employes of Price Brothers' Paper Mills at Jonquieres and Kenogami, which had been in progress several weeks, ended when the men accepted a 20 per cent wage reduction and returned to work.

A twenty-four-hour general strike was called at Vera Cruz, Mexico, as a protest against the deportation from Mexico of alleged extremist leaders during the past two weeks. The initiative in the strike was taken by the machinists' union, assisted by union sailors.

On June 3, at London, the executive body of the striking British coal miners finally rejected government proposals for a settlement of the coal strike. Several of the labor leaders were inclined to vacillate; but the determination displayed by the union's rank and file compelled action in accordance with the strikers' wishes.

British advices state that an American vessel, loaded with coal and manned by American strikebreakers, has been detained at Penzance, Cornwall, since May 19. Under pressure, the British government attempted to aid discharge under military protection, but the hostile attitude of the population compelled withdrawal of the militia and the unions are in control. The strikebreakers show no eagerness to view the scenery of Penzance or to explore the large boneyard for useless vessels, of which the port boasts.

Advices received by the Boston agency of the steamer "West Jeffrey" state that the Argentine government has promised to protect non-union labor at Buenos Aires. This is declared to be the result of efforts of the United States State Department in behalf of the steamer "Martha Washington" and other American vessels, manned by non-union crews, which are expected to follow. To date the Argentine government has succeeded only in spreading the trouble to their own shipping.

Industrial unrest is still rampant in Italy. Recently, Premier Giolotti was called back to Rome from Cannes where he was resting following the death of his wife, owing to the grave situation occasioned by the demands of the State employes. They are asking increases which will increase the expenditure of 900,000,000 lire (normally about $180,000,000). Another strike which is threatening is that of the school teachers, who apparently have decided to walk out on the eve of the final examinations.

Pacific Coast Marine

The "Celestial," second Chinese-built steamer for the account of the United States Shipping Board, has left Shanghai for San Francisco. Her sister ship, the "Mandarin," is now lying with other vessels of the Shipping Board in Southampton Bay.

The tug "Sea Scout," fourth and last of the towboats purchased by the Red Stack from the United States Shipping Board, has made a very successful trial run. The vessel was commanded by Port Captain William Darragh. All of the vessels were built and engined by the Main Iron Works.

The largest combined shipment of wire rope and manila rope to enter San Francisco via the all-water route is scheduled to arrive on the steamer "Willpolo" of the Williams Line the middle of this month. The shipment, which is in excess of 310,000 pounds, is consigned to the Waterbury Company's Pacific Coast branch.

The tanker "Lansing" was taken out of San Pedro for San Diego June 1 with a full cargo of oil. She was towed by the United States naval tug "Koka." She was not able to leave under her own power, due to lack of men in the engine room. The steamer had intended to leave for Honolulu this week, but was prevented by lack of engineers.

There is every indication of an improved financial revival in the Orient, and the business outlook is declared to be quite promising. Japan is showing signs of more stable conditions and import and export houses are optimistic regarding the future. Money is freer and trade is picking up in all quarters. Many factories which were closed six months ago are again on their feet and shipping has also displayed progress.

The license of Captain Harry H. Marden, pilot in charge of the steamer "Governor" when that vessel was sunk off Port Townsend, Wash., April 1, with the loss of eight lives, has been suspended for one year by the Board of Federal Steamboat Inspection Service at Seattle, Wash. Captain Marden was tried by the board on charges of inattention to duty in connection with the sinking.

In a period of thirty-six hours a total of five thousand tons of cargo was stowed into the holds of the Williams Line freighter "Willholo." The work was carried out by Captain Fremont R. Nash of the Standard Stevedoring Company. Virtually half of the cargo stowed in the vessel, which consisted of nearly seven thousand tons from San Francisco, was copper. The craft will enter San Pedro to complete loading for the East Coast.

Although imports from foreign countries to San Francisco during April were but a trifle more than half of those during the corresponding month of 1920, the duties collected in April, 1921, by Collector J. O. Davis were $987,995.38 compared with $551,513.97 a year ago. The explanation is that large quantities of articles on which there is now a low duty have been rushed to the United States in anticipation of a high tariff being levied.

May halibut catches off Vancouver Island, off Cape Flattery, in Hecate Strait, and on the southeastern Alaska banks, broke all records for the year, it was announced by officials of the fishing vessel owners' association at Seattle. During the month 139 catches were brought into Seattle. The largest catch was made by the schooner "La Paloma," forty thousand pounds, secured off Goose Island, in Hecate Strait. The fish sold at 5 to 9⅞ cents a pound.

The marine department of the Chamber of Commerce has received word of an unusual charter secured for the four-masted schooner "Sir Thomas Lipton" to carry nineteen hundred tons of coal from Norfolk to Honolulu via the Panama canal. It is the first time in recent years that a sailing vessel has been chartered to carry coal. Schooners have been a drug on the market of late. But the shipping strike, with its resulting shortage of engineers, caused the sailing vessels to be employed. The "Lipton" is now on her way to Honolulu with the coal.

The little schooner "Lady Mine" has cleared at Vancouver, B. C., for Ensenada, Mexico, part of her cargo being a consignment of whisky. Friends of the vessel expect she will encounter difficulties, as officials of the Mexican ports are keeping a watchful eye on incoming liquor. Some months ago another Canadian ship arrived with a similar cargo at a Mexican port whose official head demanded $500 from the captain of the vessel. The skipper filled him with the mellowest brand and after succeeding in having the fine reduced to $10, shipped the befogged official ashore and departed.

Surveyors probing machinery trouble on the freighter "Bakersfield" have claimed to have discovered evidence of sabotage on the craft. After an investigation, officials of the United States Shipping Board at Balboa asked the Panama police to arrest the third assistant engineer of the vessel and four firemen. The men shipped on the vessel at San Francisco under the reduced wages and at the time of signing on stated that they were not affiliated with any maritime association. The "Bakersfield," running for the Williams-Dimond Company, sailed May 10 for Europe. She encountered minor trouble between San Francisco and San Pedro.

It has been reported in shipping circles that the Rolph Navigation Company chartered its steamer "Georgiana Rolph" to Frank Starke for the west coast trade. The information stated that Starke intends operating the vessel between La Paz, the Lower California Gulf port, and Salina Cruz in the freight and passenger trade. Starke, at the present time, operates the steam schooner "Centralia" on the west coast. The "Georgiana Rolph" is of 1385 net tons and is declared adaptable to the trade. Recently she has been tied up at San Francisco. While information was not obtainable as to the terms of the charter, it was stated that Rolph closed an exceptionally good deal.

Latest reports from the Alaska salmon fleet state that there is ice in Bristol bay from Port Moller to Ugashik. Eleven of the fishing fleet were lying in Bristol bay. The lighters and ways of the Northwestern Fisheries Company sustained some damage from the heavy fall of snow. The motor-ship "Margaret" arrived in the north and reported encountering mostly westerly winds from San Francisco to Bristol bay. Other vessels of the fishing fleet which arrived there from this port prior to last Friday were the bark "Star of India," "Star of Iceland," "Star of Russia," ship "Bohemia" and the schooner "S. N. Castle." The bark "Guy C. Goss" arrived there from Port Blakeley.

Water freight rates from San Francisco and other ports of the Pacific Coast to Europe were reduced at a meeting recently of steamship lines engaged in this service via the Panama canal. Effective immediately, the following rates are in force: Dried fruit, sacked or in boxes, $1.25 per hundred pounds; beans, $1.20; canned goods, $1; rice, $1.05; tallow, $1. These rates are for one-hundred-pound shipments. In making the reductions it was announced that the rates will apply on shipments in any quantity, as the lines do not require shipments to move subject to minimum carload weights. The reductions were made following the announcement of the railroad freight cuts to the Atlantic seaboard. The steamship lines stated that the rates will hold good for the present year.

Those interested in the development of the intercoastal trade by the cutting of costs in competition with transcontinental railroads, are focused upon the activity of the Williams Line in their utilization of the motorship "Kennecott" in the coast to coast service. Economy in operation, less heating in the holds and larger cargo space are cited by marine surveyors in favor of motorships in the coast to coast freight trade. The "Kennecott" is capable of making 270 knots a day, and has a carrying capacity of eight thousand measurement tons. It is estimated that there will be a saving of $4000 in the run to New York, due to the few members of the engine room crew and the comparatively small amount of fuel oil needed to operate the craft.

Demands for accommodation on transpacific liners at Oriental ports is heavy and a worse congestion exists there now than there is at Hawaiian ports. The situation is brought about by the demands of foreign legation attaches for reservations on homeward bound liners. These attaches are now returning home for their vacations, the first in seven years. According to the advices, it is impossible to secure accommodations on steamers from Japan, China and India to Marseilles or London before next winter. Those who cannot secure bookings on vessels going from the Far East to European ports via the Suez Canal are therefore crowding the passenger offices of transpacific lines running to San Francisco and other Pacific ports. The passenger situation at Honolulu is not as bad now as it was a few months ago.

Effect of the marine lockout is being felt with severity at Eureka. The first large cargo vessel to cross the bar in twenty-six days went over last week. This was the Standard Oil Company's tanker "Atlas," Captain Sullivan, from San Francisco. She was brought in by the Humboldt Stevedore Company's tug, Captain Petersen, which, in going out, crossed the bar for the first time in twenty-six days. The last large cargo vessels to cross the bar after the strike was declared were the steam schooners "Vanguard," "Mayfair," "Halco" and "Katherine," lumber laden for coast ports, May 5. After delivering their cargoes these vessels joined the other vessels of the Humboldt fleet tied up at San Francisco. Since then the Humboldt fleet has consisted of the three little gasoline schooners "Magnolia," "Martha" and "Coaster," plying to Del Norte ports.

A REASON FOR SUPPRESSION

In their efforts to degrade American seamen to the level of Asiatic coolies, vessel operators are resorting to desperate expedients. While throwing out a smoke screen of falsehood and character assassination, every law, ruling or provision for safety of life at sea has been violated or disregarded by the Shipping Board and American Steamship Owners' Association. Vessels are being despatched short-handed and with the most incompetent and inexperienced personnel, notwithstanding the U. S. Statutes.

Shipowners are aware of the significance and danger of these criminal acts, and are doing everything in their power to keep knowledge of these matters from the general public. As an example of news suppression by the commercialized press, the report of the "Tokuyo Maru" disaster stands out in the light. Although several deaths resulted and the vessel was a total loss, press reports of the occurrence were very meager and of limited duration.

Actuated by comment which appeared in a recent issue of the Shipping Register — devoted to shipping interests — the JOURNAL has conducted a quiet investigation of the circumstances pertaining to the affair. The article which agitated our activity follows:

"The tragedy aboard the Tokuyo Maru on Monday was unnecessary. Under stress, Japanese aboard ship are prone to lose their heads. Unless there be the firm hand of a white man above them, they lose all self-control. Now, let any traveler who has crossed the Pacific put himself in the position of a passenger aboard the 'Tokuyo Maru' when she caught fire. There was, according to all accounts, a hideous yellow pandemonium. So, again, we take the liberty of advising the T. K. K. to return to its former method of white captains, white pursers, surgeons and chief stewards, that there be always at the head of each chief department somebody who can keep his brain level and who knows what to do and how to do it in an emergency."

It was the feeling that something must have been radically wrong to bring forth such criticism from the shipowners' mouthpiece that led us to seek certain facts which were related by members of the crew of the U. S. transport "Buford." This steamer was first on the scene and picked up members of the crew and passengers from the water and from lifeboats, to which they had been driven by the flames.

The statements of the "Buford's" crew are substantially as follows:

"On May 2, 1821, we had fire drill at 4:30 p. m. We had just completed the drill and had gone below for supper, when we were informed that a Japanese steamer was afire a short distance away. When the men got on deck we could see volumes of smoke and flashes of flame breaking out on the 'Tokuyo Maru,' which was then about six miles away.

"While approaching, we observed two boats in the water about four miles from the burning ship. The captain gave orders to launch the emergency lifeboats, while he picked up the two boats from the Japanese vessel. It took us about half an hour to reach the vicinity of the 'Tokuyo Maru.' We noticed a crowd of people huddled on the extreme stern and they were panic-stricken to a degree of helplessness; making no attempt to get life rafts or other life-saving appliances overboard—the only two lifeboats had already left.

"Noting the panic-stricken condition of the Japanese, the 'Buford's' emergency boat did not venture too close as we feared they would jump and swamp the boat. They jumped overboard and we picked them up from the water, sixteen men being rescued in this manner.

"When we got back to the 'Buford' we found that the Jap boats had been picked up; that there were only eight men in one of them, and about one-third of the crew in the other, although each boat had sufficient capacity to have taken the whole crew.

"This showed that the first men into the boats deliberately deserted the others aboard the burning vessel, leaving them to their fate in the awful furnace, and due to the fact that they were so far from the 'Tokuyo Maru' they had no intention of aiding those aboard.

"There were also a number of men swimming in the water which the Jap boats would not pick up; we picked up two before they drowned, but one died before we reached the 'Buford.' We buried him that night."

The foregoing statements by American seamen attached to the transport "Buford" again substantiates the frequent assertion that Asiatic crews are of the lowest standard of courage and efficiency. In our issue of May 4, 1921, the JOURNAL illustrated this fact with a description of the sinking of the steamer "Hong Koh," where nearly eleven hundred persons were drowned in the stampede and riot which followed the vessel striking on a river bar on the China coast. In the same issue we elucidated the necessity of enforcing the protective provisions of our maritime laws.

Significance of the suppression of facts pertaining to the "Tokuyo Maru" disaster is painfully apparent.

Vessel operators, including the Shipping Board, are at present engaged in desperate efforts to drive Americans from the decks of American ships. They intend to degrade them to the level of Asiatic standards or substitute coolies for American crews. As a means to accomplish this end, it is deemed necessary to violate all laws of safety and to disregard the Seamen's Act entirely. With the support of Admiral Benson, every bureau and department entrusted with enforcement, is deliberately permitting open violation of the marine law of the country. If such a striking example of inefficient crew should come to public view, the bureau and departmental heads might be embarrassed to such extent as to curtail their effectiveness in the interest of private shipowners.

Will it require another "Titanic" disaster to arouse the citizens of this country to action?

EMIGRANTS RENIG

On June 3 immigration authorities began enforcement of the immigration bill restricting entry of aliens to 3 per cent of the nationals of their country in the United States at the time of the 1910 census.

Only 20 per cent of the total quota of any country can enter each month.

There is reason to believe that insofar as Northern Europe is concerned our restrictions are entirely unnecessary. The steamer "Olympic" was recently chartered for return to Finland of thousands of Finns, and there are quite a number of other nationalities who are inclined to take the intolerants at their word and "if they don't like it get out."

Over thirty thousand Norwegians have returned to the land of their birth since conclusion of the war, but in that instance they were so thoroughly imbued with the 100 per cent idea, as expounded by Ole Hansen, that they carried many intolerant notions with them. This resulted in a restricted liquor traffic, followed by reciprocal action by Spain, which found her market for wines destroyed in Norway, and immediately the Norwegian market for stockfish was put on the toboggan in Spain. In order to meet this situation, the Government of Norway intends to introduce into the Storthing a proposition for governmental control of liquors, and the population are eager to repatriate their visitors to the land of their adoption.

In evidence of the fact that Northern Europeans do not any longer consider North America a land of milk and honey, the following statistics are enlightening:

The number of emigrants who sailed from the port of Amsterdam in 1920 is the highest on record, namely 8752, as compared with 5020 during 1919, and 5332 during 1913, the last pre-war year. The various steamship companies are booked up until late in the summer and the indications are, now that foreign travel has become easier and passport regulations are less strict, emigration for the current year will surpass that of 1920 by several thousands. Of the 8752 emigrants, 5166 were men, 2832 women, and 754 children under ten years of age. Only 197 of all these were Hollanders, the majority coming from Germany (6492), Poland (356), Austria (234), and thirty-two other countries. As in former years, the bulk of the emigrants were bound for Argentina (4523), Brazil (2920), and Mexico (608). The rest left for Cuba, Uruguay, Spain, Portugal, England, and France. Only eight men sailed for the United States. Practically all emigrants from this consular district bound for the United States embark at Rotterdam, a very small number sail from Antwerp and from English ports.

EX-SERVICE IDEAS

A booklet, issued in the interests of unemployed ex-service men, recently published the following:

The Shipping Board

Sends a ship to a foreign port,
Discharges its cargo;
Has an argument with the oil trust
Because they want nine a barrel for oil.
Sticks around a few weeks,
Shooting cables to Washington.
Gets real mad over the delay,
Then turns said ship into a coal burner,
Taking a couple weeks more vacation
At the expense of the taxpayer.
Then fills the bunkers
With a lot of bum coal and sails
Within half-way of another port,
And returns to the port again,
Where the cargo was discharged;
Pays the oil trust his price for oil,
Changes back to an oil burner,
Which means another vacation
At the expense of the taxpayer,
Then sails for the U. S. A.
Without a return cargo, and raves
Because running expenses are so high,
And tries to reduce the seamen's wages.

As another filler, they continue:

"We will say right now that we are for UNION LABOR—First, Last and Always. We want no ADVERTISERS who will not back the laboring man in his fight to earn a living, with conditions that will give him a place on this earth fit for a human being."

It seems that the ex-service men, in their perambulations, have been observing, and in this instance they are fully awake to the situation as it exists today. Perhaps the crude manner in which employers displayed their intentions to exploit them, and the distress coincident to prolonged unemployment, has aroused a certain activity in brain cells that otherwise might have lain dormant.

However, the ex-service men are to be congratulated on their point of view as expressed in the foregoing.

ATTA BOY! ATLANTIC

If it were not for compensating features, recent news from Atlantic ports might be regarded as distressful. With propaganda aimed to place the locked out seamen before the public as aliens, ne'er-do-wells and lawbreakers, the combination of private vessel operators and Shipping Board continue to "use all the resources at its command" in destroying the American Merchant Marine.

As part of the plan, hundreds of seamen have been thrown into jails without provocation and upon the slightest pretext; many of them for alleged violation of judicial edicts or injunctions.

Cowardly thugs, hired by the American Steamship Owners' Association, supported by the Shipping Board, are murdering and maiming in ruthless manner, and every strategem possible is resorted to in order to break down the morale of the locked out seamen.

Under ordinary conditions such bald misrepresentation and vicious aggression could be considered distressful, but the fact that the men are only inspired to further effort instead of dejected by the sacrifice demanded of them eliminates whatever element of discouragement the situation suggests.

If the predatory employers have indulged in self-congratulation at the harshness and deviltry of the tactics employed, they are entirely too premature in their glee.

The spirit of men who can withstand the cruel attrition of the past six months of unemployment; who have suffered to the limit cold and hunger, is not easily impaired. Their solidarity has been welded in accordance with the force of aggression; the fiercer the onslaught the more compact and determined the resistance.

That is the rule with seamen everywhere, for they realize that this is only part of the price which must be paid in their struggle for human liberty.

THANKS

The JOURNAL is receiving whole-hearted support from the membership, and the interest in our welfare recently has become intense. Members on the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts are exhibiting considerable speed these days. We were recently favored with a request for more copies by Comrade R. Olsen, agent at Savannah, Ga., and while "sending her in" he found the old-time method of mail not swift enough, due to the fact that members wanted copies on the spot, therefore the request came by night letter. Thanks, comrades, we appreciate your speed in addition to your generous union spirit.

ORIGIN OF LONG ISLAND

Long Island affords particularly clear evidence as to the history of the great continental ice sheet which covered the Northern States many thousand years ago.

The southern margin of this great ice sheet, according to the United States Geological Survey, Department of the Interior, extended to Long Island and remained there for a long time, depositing a thick body of intermixed boulders, sand and clay as a terminal moraine, which is now the "backbone" of the island. The ice moved southward across the area that is now occupied by Long Island Sound and brought these materials from the north, dropping them at its melting edge. This method of deposition developed a very peculiar topography, consisting of an irregular aggregation of hummocks and hollows, which have produced the many beautiful details of configuration that make the higher parts of Long Island so attractive to lovers of nature. The most notable of these hollows in the morainal ridge is the one holding the picturesque Lake Ronkonkoma, which lies in a depression fifty feet below the surrounding ridges. Several other similar pits are eighty to eighty-five feet deep, and some of the larger irregular hollows are several miles long.

The older rocks of Long Island consist of the granite floor, which comes to the surface near East River and Hell Gate, and clays and sands of Cretaceous age, which not only crop out at places along the north shore, but rise into high mounds that lie under the surface deposits at places in the west-central part of the island.

The tendency of trade unions, as of other bodies of men, to act upon sentiment rather than reason, would be more dangerous than it is, were it not for the intervention of that strongest of all forces, instinct.

Always demand the Union Label!

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

HONOR TO OUR DEAD

The impressive ceremonies and imposing procession attending the funeral of our lamented comrade, José Rigo, on Sunday, May 22, 1921, was the greatest, as well as the most solemn and decorous demonstration of Merchant Seamen that ever moved through the streets of New York.

Comrade Rigo was foully murdered by a dastardly, lawless strikebreaker employed by the American Shipowners' Association, on May 17.

It is gratifying to note in passing, that the cowardly assassin, Arthur Green and a couple of his scab accomplices, were arrested immediately after commission of the crime, and are now lodged in the Tombs prison awaiting action by the Grand Jury.

Comrade Rigo was, at the time he was shot, near the Savannah Line dock. With several other comrades he was endeavoring, peaceably, to dissuade a number of strikebreakers—who had already been engaged on coolie terms to sail on the "City of Savannah"—from taking the degrading chance.

Fearful lest he should lose his inalienable license to scab, the cowardly bandit drew a revolver and fired into the crowd. The prevailing belief that his aim was deliberate, and that he fired with intent to kill, is apparently justified by the fact that the bullet struck Comrade Rigo in the abdomen, inflicting a mortal wound, from the effect of which he died a few hours later at a local hospital.

Comrade Rigo had served nobly as a seaman during the height of the submarine campaign in the late war, and was highly esteemed by his fellow-members, both as a brother and a man.

He died at the post of honor, fulfilling his duty to his Union and the Merchant Marine. The funeral procession was an orderly and dignified success, and exerted a profound and lasting impression upon all beholders along the line of march.

Grand Marshal Oscar Carlson, secretary of the Marine Firemen, Oilers and Watertenders' Union, of which division our late comrade was a member, and the Committee of Arrangements deserve to be warmly congratulated for the flawless manner in which their plans were carried out.

And the nine thousand stalwart members who marched reverently with bared heads for nealy two and a half hours through the penetrating summer heat in mournful but dignified silence behind the remains of their fallen comrade, likewise deserve unstinted praise for their manly, upright bearing, orderly deportment, and fine appearance.

The funeral procession, headed by a military band and preceded by three open barouches laden with beautiful floral tributes and a line of draped automobiles containing the chief mourners, took up its line of march from the undertaking establishment at 72 Thompson street, where Comrade Rigo's remains had been placed on view for several hours before, at 10:30 a. m.

The body, enshrouded in a white casket, was likewise carried to the grave in a white hearse. After making a detour of the section of the city surrounding the late home of the deceased, the procession moved with slow and measured tread down Canal to West street, and paraded solemnly before the Savannah Line pier, where Comrade Rigo was so foully murdered, with the casket carried aloft on the shoulders of the stalwart pall bearers, in silent protest against the atrocious deed.

It is a significant fact, and well worthy of note, that during this silent demonstration the Savannah Line dock was entirely deserted. All its customary officials, employes and loungers had concealed themselves in evident shame and consciousness of guilt; and in spite of the beautiful weather and warm sunshine, every window in the big dock building was tightly closed.

From the Savannah dock, at pier 35, the procession marched northward along the waterfront of the North River to Pier 79, at Twenty-third street and Eleventh avenue, thence eastward through Twenty-third street to Third avenue, where the parade disbanded, and the funeral cortege proceeded unattended to Calvary Cemetery, where Comrade Rigo's remains were interred, with appropriate religious rites and fraternal honors.

The Marine Firemen, Oilers and Watertenders' Union, of which Comrade Rigo was a member, occupied the post of honor in the vanguard of the marching procession.

In addition to the Union banner, the Firemen carried two significant transparencies. One of these bore the following terse, but sorrowful text: "José Rigo served the shipowners loyally through the submarine campaign. His reward: Shot down by a shipowner's hired gunman!"

The other sign bore this apt and truthful legend: "The shipowners cannot break the spirit of the Marine workers; they must hire paid gunmen to do that!"

The procession included all branches of the unlicensed seamen, and a considerable following of licensed engineers attended as well. All made an impressive and magnificent showing, and the procession as a whole, a solemn and instructive spectacle.

The onlooking populace could easily divine what the shipowners arrogantly affect to disregard, that the organized seamen of America derive inspiration, not fear from the supreme sacrifice of a brother member.

Press is Silent

One very significant feature in the aftermath of the Seamen's great funeral parade was the almost unanimous silence of the public press of New York in regard to it.

Even the grandiloquent Hearst papers, which vociferously claim to champion the cause of the workers so valiantly and fearlessly, were mute and dumb spectators of the whole sorrowful proceeding. Not one syllable in reference to the funeral did they print.

Who muzzles the press?

For more than two hours, on a peaceful Sabbath in early summer, the shrouded form of José Rigo's mortal remains were borne reverently through the public thoroughfares of New York, poised aloft on the shoulders of his late comrades, followed by a legion of stalwart seamen marching in reverent tread and uncovered heads, in the blazing sunshine, to the mournful dirges of a military band clad in the olive drab uniform of the United States Army.

Yet this unusual, this solemnly moving and unique spectacle, in so far as seamen are concerned, attracts no attention, nor draws a single word of publicity, or even news comment from a hopelessly sordid, thickly besmeared and helplessly subservient "public" press.

Among other presumptuous ambitions charged against industrial unionism by the opulent and authoritative head of the steel corporation, in his recent denunciation of labor organizations, was a general desire to "control the public press."

When the public press has become so completely dominated by avarice, that its columns and comments are entirely devoted to corporate advertising and the nauseating details of society scandals, to the utter exclusion of public events of the greatest possible moment in the march of human progress, is it not time that all workers, and the seamen in particular, should both own and control, as well as publish, unmuzzled and unfettered public newspapers that not only will dare tell the truth, but dare not suppress the truth to propagate a lie?

PRESS MISSTATEMENTS

Port Arthur, Texas, May 31, 1921.

Editor Seamen's Journal:

I am sending you a clipping from a scab paper, the Beaumont Enterprise, that is printed under the auspices of the Associated Press. The article tells where one of our comrades was shot down by a hired gunman. The paper called him a non-union seaman, but all of his comrades know him by a different name. He is now in the county jail, charged with murder, and we all hope he dies from sudden strangulation and are going to prosecute to that end.

This same capitalist-owned paper printed the account of our comrade's funeral, giving a biased and untrue account of it. This paper stated that there were about four hundred comrades present; instead of this there were between seven and eight hundred present at the procession. This paper also stated that there were about forty automobiles in this procession, but the true count gave between sixty-five and seventy. So you can see that the capitalists try to keep the general public misinformed in every way possible, for they see the handwriting on the wall. Union labor is going up and forward, instead of down and backward. There are men joining the ranks every day that had never given it a thought before. If you will print this you may do so, and sign my name to it, as I am a free-born American and believe in free press and speech, and I think I have this right if any one has.

CHAS. G. COCKERHAM.
Marine Firemen's Union, Atlantic and Gulf, Port Arthur, Texas.

The following clippings show just what the press is doing regarding information pertaining to the lockout of seamen on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts:

Dead Sailor Honored

Probably the largest funeral, from the standpoint of automobiles and attendance, in the history of the city was that of Axtel Herman Ohman, the seaman who was fatally shot on Procter street Saturday night, held this afternoon. It was estimated that there were forty cars in the procession and several hundred of the striking seamen paid a last tribute to their dead comrade at the cemetery.

The body was taken to the headquarters of the Seamen's Union in Procter Street from the Grammier undertaking parlors and at 3 o'clock the services were conducted by Rev. J. A. Frampton of the Seamen's Institute. The casket was carried, with a black draped United States flag and color guard in uniform, to the corner of Procter Street and Waco Avenue, where it was placed in the hearse and three hundred marchers followed it to Stillwell Boulevard, where there were waiting autos donated by public car service companies and others. Room was made for all for the trip to the cemetery, although some of the cars were occupied by more than a half dozen men. There were several magnificent floral pieces as the result of a subscription list passed by the seamen this morning and from private donations.

Shipping News Restricted

Port Arthur, Texas, May 30.—Shipping News has not been put on exactly a wartime basis in Port Arthur, but a tightening up has been announced in shipping circles owing to the strike of the seamen, and information concerning outbound movement is being denied the public for the time being. The Sabine Pilots' office is keeping any information of the kind off their public bulletin board and agents are showing a hesitancy in discussing departures outside official circles.

RENEWED AGREEMENTS

The following steamship companies have realized the ignoble attitude of the American Steamship Owners' Association in seeking by a war of attrition to force merchant seamen back to serfdom and have decided to resume business on honorable terms by signing up with the organized seamen on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, with conditions of the previous agreements prevailing.

It is gratifying to note that nearly all these companies are seceders from the Steamship Owners' Association, impelled by considerations of justice no less than self-interest to accede to the reasonable demands of the organized seamen:

Boston—Eastern Steamship Company, United States Transportation Line.

New York—Universal Steamship Company, Polish American Line, Mills Towboat Company.

Norfolk, Va.—International Towing Company.

New Orleans—Mexican Fruit Company Gulf Navigation Company.

Mobile—Coastwise Steamship Company

Foreign Agreements

No doubt the publication of the above list of progressive shipowners will prove very gratifying indeed to the locked-out seamen, but equally encouraging, and even more remarkable, is the appended list of nineteen Scandinavian ships all signed up under the following contract through the active and energetic efforts of Comrades E. V. Rosen and Robert Sorensen, agent and delegate, respectively, of the Brooklyn branch, Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association:

"It is hereby mutually and conjointly agreed between the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association, The Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association and the Marine Firemen, Oilers and Watertenders' Union of the Atlantic and Gulf, acting as a union, and the master or agent of the S. S. ....., acting for the foreign firm or corporation represented herein, that:

"Members of the above-named union or associations shall be employed exclusively in all departments on the above-named ship when and wherever obtainable.

"It is further agreed that non-members may be assigned to vacancies for one passage only; provided, such assignments are acceptable to a majority of those already in service. It is furthermore agreed and understood by the signatories hereto that:

"The rates of wages, working rules and living conditions heretofore established by the union or association hereinbefore named shall govern at all times while trading to or from ports on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of the United States.

"Provided, that this agreement shall terminate not later than May 1, 1922."

Here is a bona fide agreement with nineteen Scandinavian ships.

Who were those calamity howlers bawling about "low-pay foreign competition" just now? Won't some one please page Mr. Gary of the steel trust! J. H. W.

List of Scandinavian ships that have signed up with the unions for another year: "Brighton," "Nickolas Cuneo," "Joseph Cuneo," "Granfos," "Lysefjord," "Smaragd," "Runa," "Queenstad," "Belridge," "Borgestad," "Tune," "Fort Moegan," "Eiger," "Tungus," "Torgerd," "Uffe," "Bratsberg," "Trafalgar," and "Epholm."

OFFICIAL

We are pleased to announce in this week's issue of THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL the opening of a new meeting hall by the Brooklyn branch of the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association at 102 First Place, Brooklyn.

The growth of this interesting branch since its affiliation with the I. S. U. of A. in August, 1919, has been most gratifying. One year ago we had the pleasure of publishing an editorial announcement of the establishment of the branch in the new cooperative clubhouse, purchased by the members, at 260 President Street.

Upon taking possession of their new quarters a large room in the commodious building was set aside for a meeting hall and another for an office.

The increased business and membership recorded during the past year, however, has so overcrowded the premises, spacious as they are, and overtaxed the social capacity of the club, so that a move at this time has become imperative.

The branch removed into its handsomely appointed and commodious new quarters on May 24 and are now settled down to business on a larger and more comprehensive scale.

We desire to add for the benefit of old members and new friends visiting Brooklyn that the club is still on the job and doing a flourishing business at the old stand, 260 President Street, where comrades will always find a hearty and fraternal welcome when ashore.

The new meeting place is near by, only two blocks farther up Court Street, in one of those wide and beautifully kept spaces which the old city of Brooklyn, in the days before the greater charter, jealously reserved as "Places," instead of common streets.

Here's greater success and renewed prosperity to the Brooklyn branch of the ancient and honorable order of marine pot wrestlers. J. H. W.

Address of new hall, 102 First Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

DOES RIVER FLOW UPHILL?

"Does Mississippi River flow uphill?" is frequently the subject of school debates, and such debates usually arise from inaccurate or indefinite uses of the terms "uphill" and "downhill."

In answer to a correspondent who recently made this inquiry, the United States Geological Survey sent the following reply: Some people describe "down" or "at a lower elevation," when referring to two localities, as the one nearer the center of the earth, and consider the "upper" of the two as the one farther from the center. If only a small area is considered this is practically true, but in referring to widely separated localities, such as the source and the mouth of the Mississippi River, such a definition would lead to an absurdity and must, therefore, be incorrect.

The surface of water at rest is a level surface, as that phrase is usually understood. Any particle of matter above such a surface will be at a higher elevation, and if acted on by natural forces alone will tend to go down toward the water. Mean sea level is the surface generally accepted as the datum or reference plane for all topographic elevations.

The source of Mississippi River is about fifteen hundred feet above mean sea level. Therefore, the unrestrained water at the source of the river, under the action of natural forces, tends to go down to sea level at the river's mouth.

As the equatorial radius of the earth is about thirteen miles greater than the polar radius, and as the intermediate radii differ in length between these limits, and as the source of the Mississippi is nearly nineteen degrees of latitude farther north than its mouth, it follows that the mouth of the river is about four miles farther from the center of the earth than its source. The combined effect of gravity and centrifugal force makes the water of the river run downhill, although actually the water moves away from the center of the earth in doing so.

ANCIENTS USED ALLOY

The general belief that the ancients were able to harden or temper copper to a greater extent than is now possible is a myth, in the opinion of the United States Geological Survey, Department of the Interior. It is well known to metallurgists that processes of rolling will harden copper to some extent and that it can also be hardened by the addition of other metals. Specimens of ancient so-called "tempered" copper that have been examined have invariably proved to be no harder than copper that is manufactured today, or to be simply an alloy of copper and some other metal.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Shipowners Aggressive

Developments in the maritime lockout seem to prove that the Marine Engineers are not to be permitted to save their organization, even temporarily, by drawing out and leaving the International Seamen's Union to carry on the battle with the shipowners and the Shipping Board.

An official statement from H. H. Raymond, president of the American Shipowners' Association, announces that he has been instructed to "inform the Secretary of Labor and Secretary of Commerce that in view of the present depression of conditions in the steamship trades and of the uncertainties of the future it regrets it is unable to alter its previous decision" of May 23. That decision was, in effect, that there would be no agreement with any union, and no taking back of strikers under any conditions, to replace strikebreakers.

At a meeting of the executive committees of the shipowners of the Atlantic, the Gulf and the Pacific, in New York last Monday, it was unanimously voted, that the shipowners would stand pat on the wage reductions and the inferior conditions announced as effective May 1. Among the statements in the preamble to this resolution were:

"Whereas, the suggested compulsory reinstatement of engineers who went on strike is contrary to the already declared policy of the Shipping Board and of the Shipowners' Associations, and would involve a breach of faith with the loyal employes who rallied to the flag during this emergency, and were assured that their employers would protect and prefer them in future employment; and , , ,

"Whereas, in view of the persistent refusal of the union leaders even to consider a moderate wage reduction of 15 per cent, when reductions even greater than this have been promptly and manfully accepted in other trades and industries, and in view, moreover, of the many attacks of violence that have been made upon men simply exercising their legal rights to seek employment, and of the intimidations practiced against them, and of the destruction of Government and private property that have characterized this present strike, the Shipowners' Associations have unitedly announced that they will not enter into any agreements wtih the engineers' and seamen's organizations as now constituted and controlled; and

"Whereas, such an agreement as has been suggested would place American-flag ships at a hopeless disadvantage in competition with the ships of our competitiors, while no real benefit could accrue to the engineers themselves by an agreement to terms on which ships could not be operated; , , , "

The shipowners concluded that the Secretary of Labor should not continue to give encouragement to the union leaders "in endeavoring to end a strike which, as the Department knows, is rapidly failing."

This announcement by the shipowners put an end, for the time at least, to the proposal signed by five members of the executive council of the Marine Engineers' national organization, and tentatively accepted by the Shipping Board, calling for the 15 per cent cut in wages with various other concessions, but including a union agreement for one year. Two of the seven members of the executive council—Healy of New York and Pegg of the Pacific Coast district—refused to agree to any such terms, believing that the strike could be won for the Seamen and the Marine Engineers alike. At the same time, some of the local unions notified National President Brown that they might secede rather than accept a lower standard of living. But since the shipowners have undertaken to replace all union men with strikebreakers, permanently, the ranks of the Marine Engineers will again be solidified, and their co-operation with the Seamen assured.

At Their Service

What the Shipping Board and the Secretary of Labor and Secretary of Commerce will do, in the face of this reproof from the arrogant shipowners, is yet to be disclosed. Thus far Chairman Benson of the Board has been at the service of the shipowners in their every move to break the unions. He is advertising throughout the country for strikebreakers, and is insisting on the abandonment of the safeguards of the unions in the Merchant Marine. Yet he did agree to the compromise offered by the majority of the executive council of the Marine Engineers, and the chances are that as the staggering cost of the fight piles up he will become more and more ready to consider terms with the Seamen also. A word from President Harding would send him to his desk, even now, to sign an ultimatum to the shipowners that would settle the controversy at once.

Secretary of Commerce Hoover reappears in the case, in the statement issued by the shipowners. He has power to tie up all of their fleets at any time, by the mere issuance of orders for the strict enforcement of the Seamen's Act with reference to skilled crews, the language test, lifeboat safeguards, etc. If Hoover should, from any motive, decide to intervene to settle the strike on a basis which the men can accept, he will have no difficulty in carrying out that decision.

Miners Case Probed

Senator Kenyon of Iowa, chairman of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, will be in direct charge of the investigation of the West Virginia coal strike war which his committee has asked the Senate to order begun at once. The Senate is ready to concur, and the inquiry is scheduled to begin at Williamson about June 10. It will be as brief as is consistent with the desire of the committee members to get at the facts in the Mingo and McDowell and Logan county situations. Both of the West Virginia Senators have, after long opposition, agreed to approve the making of the investigation of the causes for the armed revolt of the mountaineer coal miners and the presence of a hired army of gunmen in the non-union or strike-bound coal camps.

Senator Johnson of California introduced the resolution calling for this senatorial investigation in Mingo county, but he did so at the urgent and repeated request of the United Mine Workers, of District 17. They sent delegations here to explain the situation fully to him, and to convince him that the people of West Virginia are really concerned over the bloodshed, the industrial slavery and the civic shame which have been the by-products of coal operator ownership of the Government of the State.

Press Censorship Eased

Perhaps the most significant of the events of the week in the capital, from the standpoint of the labor press, was the announcement by Postmaster General Hays that the Burleson censorship of the press—which for more than three years has been exercised only against the pro-labor press—was illegal and was to be promptly abandoned. Hays made good on this announcement by granting a second-class mailing permit to The Liberator magazine, and by promising to restore the New York Call and the Milwaukee Leader and other papers of wide circulation to the second-class mailing rate within a few days. This means the financial salvation of many of the daily and weekly organs of the labor movement which have been under the ban of the Department since 1917.

How far the existence of the censorship in the Post Office has cowed the labor press by its continual threats of financial ruin for struggling local journals of labor, can only be estimated. The value of this threat to the plans of the organized employers during the past two years, when they were developing their plans and their publicity drive for the breaking of the spirit of the labor movement, is only too evident. The editor of a small labor paper who ventured to speak too plainly in dealing with the profiteers and their political stoolpigeons was haunted day and night by the thought that the Department might swoop down upon him and put his paper out of business, thereby stifling one more of the small voices of the wage-workers when the need for these voices and warnings to the rank and file was most urgent.

Not all of the censored papers will get back their mailing privilege at once. The more radical the paper, the slower will be the process of restoration of its rights. But at least the great bulk of the penalized journals will be once again free to speak aloud. That is a big gain for labor at a time when unrest pervades every industry and when plans of defense and attack are changed every hour.

Unimportant

It now seems likely that the boom of John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers for the presidency of the A. F. of L. will collapse before the day of election of officers at Denver, next month. Railroad labor, observing that Lewis offers no written statement of his stand on fundamental issues affecting the railroad problem, is cooling toward him. It is "from Missouri" as to all candidates. Of course there is yet time for Lewis or some other aspirant to "show" these railroad labor delegates. Conferences will doubtless begin as soon as Denver is reached. The course of President Gompers in relation to Russia and public ownership of railroads, in the convention, will have some influence on events. But just now it appears probable that Johnston and Franklin, as candidates for the executive council, will be the chief concern of the railroad group.

The Machinists may refuse to vote on the presidency, as they are forbidden by their constitution to vote for a Civic Federation member.

BURDEN OF UNEMPLOYMENT

(By Paul S. Taylor)

The burden of unemployment in industry should be borne by the employers in that industry—not by labor. This fundamental principle is squarely recognized by a bill recently introduced in the Wisconsin Legislature by Senator Huber. The bill owes its inspiration largely to Professor John R. Commons of the University of Wisconsin, who is well known throughout the country for his work in the field of labor economics.

Under the bill, unemployment compensation at the rate of $1.50 per day after the fourth day is due from the last employer of the unemployed person, provided: that the person has been employed for twenty-six weeks; that he has made application for compensation by registering with one of the State employment offices; that he is capable and available for work, but unable to obtain employment at wages and under conditions as favorable as habitually obtained in his usual employment; that he has not lost employment through his own fault or because of a strike or lockout. An unemployed person does not lose his legal claim to compensation because he may decline to take a situation made vacant by a strike, or at wages and conditions less favorable than habitually obtained, or in another employment district in the State to which the last employer refuses to prepay the railroad fare.

The following persons are excepted from the operation of the bill: Persons employed by farmers or canneries; or who receive $500 annual income independent of personal exertion; or who have an annual income of $1500. The rate of unemployment compensation is subject to change by the Industrial Commission in accordance with changes in the general costs and standards of living. Employers must provide insurance for the compensation liability either through recognized insurance companies, or through employers' mutual insurance associations organized in accordance with State regulations. Employers are liable for compensation to an unemployed person for one week for each four weeks of service, and not more than thirteen weeks in any calendar year.

This bill, if enacted into law, will carry one step further the movement to place upon industry the responsibility for the losses and sufferings which are incurred in its service. It is only logical and right to place the burden upon the shoulders which can most easily bear it. If the industry cannot pay its human as well as material costs it has no right to exist.

Ocean-going vessels entered the port of Montevideo during February, 1921, as follows: British, 60; American, 23; Italian, 16; French, 14; Dutch, 8; Spanish, 7; Norwegian, 5, Brazilian, 5; German, 4; Uruguayan, 3; all others, 6; total, 151.

During the first quarter of the present year the number of departures at the port of Hamburg totaled 1734 vessels, as compared with 985 for the corresponding period of the previous year.

HIGH AND LOW LANDS

The difference between the highest and lowest points of land in the United States is 14,777 feet, according to the United States Geological Survey, Department of the Interior. Mount Whitney, the highest point, is 14,501 feet above sea level, and in Death Valley there is a depression that lies 276 feet below sea level. These two points, which are both in California, are less than ninety miles apart. This difference in height is small, however, as compared with the difference in the height and depth of land in Asia. Mount Everest rises 29,002 feet above sea level, whereas the shores of the Dead Sea lie 1290 feet below sea level, a total difference in height of 30,292 feet. Mount Everest has never been climbed.

The greatest depth yet found in any ocean is 32,088 feet, the depth at a point about forty miles north of the Island of Mindanao, in the Philippine Islands. The bottom of the sea at this point is, therefore, more than 11½ miles below the summit of Mount Everest.

PHILIPPINES WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY

Recent improvements in the naval wireless telegraph station at Cavite now enable the transmission of radio messages from the Philippines to San Francisco without relay. A large increase in electrical power and the construction of telegraph lines between Cavite and Los Banos are responsible for this direct Pacific wireless service covering some seven thousand miles. Formerly, dispatches from the islands to points in the United States were copied at Honolulu and relayed to the mainland. This meant unnecessary delay in transmission. The improvements will treble the capacity of the naval radio service to and from the Philippines. The naval radio stations at Cavite and Los Banos are handling a daily total of approximately twelve thousand words. The service covers all of the Navy and Army business, some of the insular government's messages, the Associated Press dispatches, amounting to one thousand words a day, aside from other press matter, and a considerable volume of commercial business.

England and Denmark have signed an agreement relative to aerial navigation between the two countries. The accord is based on the international convention. In Denmark, airplanes and hydroplanes must descend at Christians Havn; in England, airplanes at the present airdromes, and hydroplanes at Felixstowe. The crossing over the Danish frontier may be made at any point; but for England, airplanes must enter between Folkestone and Dungeness, and hydroplanes must enter between Orfordness and the Naze.

In accordance with British press notices, considerable tonnage was chartered for conveying American coal to Great Britain, in order to relieve the shortage caused by the strike. This tonnage was chartered on the Baltic Exchange and, in accordance with the contract of charter, the ships were to be ready to load on or before May 10; 35s. per ton was agreed on as the freight rate.

Labor News

Investigation of disturbances in Mingo county, West Virginia, is proposed in a resolution introduced in the Senate by Senator Johnson, Republican, of California.

The strike of five hundred employes of the Northern Paper Mills of Green Bay, Wis., was settled at a conference of mill officials and union officials last week.

Between seven thousand and ten thousand workmen will be reemployed in the Northwestern Pacific and Great Northern railroad shops at St. Paul, Minn. The men will be called back to work July 1.

The Employers' Association of Paterson, N. J., and vicinity has dropped its anti-union fight against building craftsmen and accepted last year's rates. These workers were locked out when they refused to accept the anti-union shop and wage reductions.

Charges that union men are being laid off by the Santa Fe Railroad system in an effort to replace them with non-union workers, were made recently in a telegram sent to Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, by W. E. Freeman, president of the Kansas Federation.

An estimated $400,000,000 will be slashed from the Nation's railway wage bill when an order cutting wages an average of 12 per cent, to be handed down by the United States Railroad Labor Board, becomes effective July 1. The order affects members of thirty-one labor organizations, employed on 104 railroads.

More than one hundred new wage disputes, submitted by railroads, have been filed with the Railroad Labor Board within the last five weeks. Every submission asks a reduction of wages in various classes of employes, from the train service and shop crafts divisions to common laborers. The disputes will be heard by the board beginning June 6.

The deadlock which has existed in the building trades industry at Cleveland, Ohio, since May 1, when approximately twenty thousand mechanics went on strike, was ended by an agreement recently. Building operations amounting to $40,000,000, employers and union officials agreed, will be in full swing within the next few days under the continuous union shop agreement of May 1, 1918.

The California - Hawaiian Sugar Company and the Hercules Powder Company, two of the largest industrial plants in Contra Costa county, have announced wage reductions affecting 1670 men. The 20 per cent reduction of the sugar company, whose plant is at Crockett, affects all the employes, fifteen hundred men. The reductions at the Hercules plant range from 12 to 18 per cent and affect 170 men.

Approximately 65,000 New York clothing workers are returning to work following a general strike in the industry, which started last December. Thirty thousand were expected back in the shops immediately as the result of an agreement reached between officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and the Clothing Manufacturers' Association. A formal settlement, drawn up for signing today, provided for a 15 per cent increase of production weekly and for an impartial arbitration board.

The steamship "George Washington," which carried former President Wilson to France and back, was recently damaged by fire at New York.

Action seeking to have set aside section 27 of the Mercantile Marine Act of 1920, prohibiting the diversion of American cargoes to Canadian ports for shipment to Alaska, was instituted in the Federal Court at Juneau, Alaska, June 3, by Attorney General John Rustgard, on behalf of the Alaska Territorial Government and the Juneau Commercial Association.

According to advices received by the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce, the steamer "Oskaloosa," which left Mobile May 22 for Antwerp, has been reported as disabled about 125 miles southeast of Jacksonville. A radio appeal for help sent by her to ships in the vicinity stated that her main feed and circulating pumps were out of commission and that she was short of fresh water.

The President would be requested to negotiate treaties regulating salmon fishing in Pacific Coast waters off the United States, Alaska and the Dominion of Canada, under a resolution by Senator McNary, Republican, Oregon, reported favorably by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Senator McNary told the committee that many wasteful practices, including use of small nets destructive of small fish, were threatening the salmon fishing industry on the Pacific Coast.

The superdreadnaught "Tennessee," which recently completed all final tests, will leave the Atlantic soon to join the Pacific fleet. The "Tennessee" is an oil-burning, electrically-driven vessel, mounting twelve 14-inch guns in the main battery. It was also indicated that the new dreadnaughts "California" and "Maryland" will be assigned to the Pacific fleet when completed. The "California" will be commissioned this summer at San Francisco, and the "Maryland," which is under construction, will be commissioned in about a year.

Hawaiian interests are seeking to have the steamers "Geat Northern" and "Northern Pacific" placed in operation between San Francisco and Honolulu. The need for these vessels was pointed out in the agitation to secure them to relieve the present congestion of travel. Efforts were made recently by the Portland Chamber of Commerce, to have the vessels resume their operations between San Francisco and Portland. Both steamers are at present under the control of the Army transport department. The "Great Northern" is in port here and the "Northern Pacific" is on the East Coast.

Work of changing the Japanese steamer "Kiyo Maru" into an oil tanker has been completed. Word of her sailing from Balboa on May 20 has been received at San Francisco by the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce. The craft is bound for San Pedro to load a full shipment of oil for delivery to Yokohama. The craft, prior to the conversion, was operated by the Toyo Kisen Kaisha between Japanese ports, via San Francisco, to Valparaiso in the freight-carrying trade. The task of changing the vessel into a tanker was done in shipyards in the canal zone.

The Mulford biological expedition sailed from New York June 1 for South America to explore the headwaters of the Amazon and seek Theodore Roosevelt's famous River of Doubt.

One of the latest U. S. dreadnaughts will be sent to participate in the celebration of Peruvian independence from July 24 to 31, it was indicated after Ambassador Pezet of Peru had called on Secretary Denby.

A general inquiry into the race riots at Tulsa, Okla., has been ordered by Attorney General Daugherty. The inquiry ordered is informal and will be made by the department agents in the field.

Restrictive legislation in the United States still goes merrily on and movies in Massachusetts will be under State censorship hereafter. Supervision will be exercised by the Department of Public Safety. Exhibition of any film not formally passed is prohibited.

First award in the Navy Department's competition for designs of aircraft to be used on board naval vessels goes to the Dayton-Wright Company, Dayton, Ohio. The winning design will be purchased for $16,000 and a contract let for the construction of experimental planes.

The U. S. Shipping Board has been relieved from at least one of many wearisome burdens. Darragh Delancey of Waterbury, Conn., director of the Industrial Relations Division of the board, tendered his resignation to Chairman Benson, to take effect about July 1. It was accepted.

Sugar production of the Hawaiian Islands is estimated to fall short 200,000 tons this season, due to refusal of Japanese employed on the plantations to work. The attitude of the Japanese workers has been construed as an act of sabotage by the planters, according to press reports, quoting the Matson Navigation Company as authority.

Honolulu advices state that the U. S. Shipping Board steamer "Creole State" has been delayed at that port several days. The steering gear, refrigerating apparatus and other machinery showed evidence of inefficient handling, according to machinists employed to repair the trouble. The "Creole State" is operated by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Plans of the Navy Department to reorganize the American Navy so as to create a main fleet in the Pacific ocean will not be dropped because of the Alameda naval base defeat. Even with authorization for the Alameda base, which has been subjected to a bitter fight in the Senate, it would take several years before the proposed project could be completed, naval officers pointed out, and the consideration being given to putting a main fleet in the Pacific would involve more immediate action. Approximately half of the American naval forces are now in the Pacific, and it is admitted that to put many additional warcraft on that Coast probably would tax the existing [illegible]. It is planned to bring practically all the battleships together on the Pacific Coast, thus creating the main fleet and to organize a fleet, probably headed by battle cruisers, on the Atlantic Coast, but with the burden of the upkeep of the two fleets about equally divided so as not to overtax the Pacific bases.

News from Abroad

The Bulgarian Government has been informed that Serbia has renounced its projected occupation of Bulgarian territory.

A radio dispatch from Moscow states that the port of Petrograd had been opened and that the first ship, a Lettish vessel, has sailed from that port.

The latest note from the United States to the Hague regarding the Netherlands' oil policy in the Dutch East Indies has evidently caused much concern in the Foreign Office. Further information regarding it, however, was refused.

The exchange value of the American dollar continues on the toboggan at Buenos Aires. The chief cause of the decline is a result of the announcement that American exporters intend liquidation of large stocks of unaccepted goods which have piled up in South American ports.

Guerrilla warfare between French and Turkish Nationalist troops has been renewed in Cilicia. Turks are preparing to recapture the city of Aintab from the French, while Nationalist leaders are being arrested by the French authorities.

The situation of the British forces in Mesopotamia is reported to be increasingly unstable. According to the latest reports, it was represented that the British were faced with the necessity either of withdrawing or of adding reserves to the forces already there.

Buenos Aires reports, under date of June 1, that a serious fire broke out on board the Munson Line's steamer "Martha Washington," which has been lying at that port under boycott by the Port Workers' Union for several weeks. The cause of the fire is not known.

Eleven former army officers, including Major General Joseph Hummel, have been placed on trial at Vienna before a special court on the charge of having committed treason in connection with the recent attempt of former Emperor Charles to regain the throne of Hungary.

The first submarine ever constructed in Spain was launched at Carthagena June 3. The vessel's displacement is 713 tons and her calculated speed submerged is nine miles an hour and surface speed sixteen miles. She is one of a group of six similar craft ordered for the Spanish navy.

Indications of an understanding between Great Britain and Germany along trade lines is reported from Berlin. Unofficial advices state that the largest and most powerful financial groups of Germany and Great Britain have concluded an agreement which provides for exploitation of Russia's resources. It is intimated that Lenine is in favor of a trade agreement which excludes the United States.

Fighting between Germans and Poles has been resumed in the vicinity of Schimischow, about five miles northwest of Gross-Strehlitz. The castle owned by Count Stahwitz has been burned. The British are gradually reinforcing their troops in the plebiscite zone, bringing in fresh soldiers and many tanks. The interallied commission for Silesia is reported to be considering the disposition of Allied troops here, so that clashes between the Poles and British may, if possible, be avoided.

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL

FOR THE SEAFARING PEOPLE OF THE WORLD.

A Journal of Seamen, by Seamen, for Seamen. Our Aim: The Brotherhood of the Sea. Our Motto: Justice by Organization

VOL. XXXIV, No. 41. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, 1921. Whole No. 1757.

A TALE OF TERRORISM

Victim Relates Facts of Frightful Experience on Board Hell Ship

At a period when the most ruthless drive is being waged against the welfare and living standards of American seamen, and while private shipowners are assisted by the United States Shipping Board in these attempts, "with all the resources at its command," there arrives from a foreign port a story of atrocious cruelty practiced aboard an American vessel that is startling in its frightfulness. The record of brutality has only been equaled by the inhuman acts of the bucko mates of old-time American hell ships. The story, as narrated by members of the crew, is such as could be expected from the imagination of a Dante or Poe, but their authenticity is substantiated by affidavits which have been furnished the United States Attorney by the U. S. Consul at Antofagasta, Chile.

Arne Mikol Arneson, who was one of the unfortunate victims, has furnished the Journal with a vivid history of the recent voyage of the American barkentine "Rolph," from Newcastle, Australia, to Mejillones, Chile. The statement, in his own words, follows:

Editor Seamen's Journal:

I will now give you my full and true story of the crimes, cruelties and hardships which have been practiced and imposed on the crew of the barkentine "Rolph," and the death of one of our number, caused by a tyrant mate named Hansen.

We signed on board the barkentine "Rolph" on February 27, at Newcastle, Australia, bound for Antofagasta, Chile. We departed next day, February 28. The trouble started as soon as the towboat had left, and we were sent aloft to loose the sails. As soon as we came down on the deck again it started.

The first one to get his first hammering was a young American boy about nineteen years old. Hansen went up to the lad and asked him if he knew that he was together with "Fighting Hansen," and then knocked him down on deck with his fist.

Next move was after a Russian named Kaptein, struck him with all his force in the back, and then on the rest of us. He knocked us all to right and left, some of us dropped down on deck and nobody seemed able to stop the brute. Hansen was yelling out, "I'll show you b——s you are on board the 'Rolph' now."

A while after we were called to the braces, when the drunken brute started again. This time he went after a young Swede named Norting, knocked him in the face and kicked him terribly all over the body, using the words as "Pull, you Swedish b——d; do you know who I am?" Then at the whole lot of us again kicking and beating us right and left. During all the time on board, the captain and both mates were under the influence of liquor, and remained so the biggest part of the trip.

One night when I was at the wheel Hansen came up from the cabin, staggering drunk, round the poop deck with a bayonet in his hand, and sung out for Henrichs to come to the wheel and learn how to steer. The skipper spotted the mate and asked him, "What in Christ's name you going to do with the bayonet?" "Oh," he replied, "I like to stick in some of their ribs; I like to hear them yell." Then at young Hendrik, prodding him in the ribs, with the sharp steel and yelling at him like a dog, "You see this, now you learn to steer or I'll stick it through you." After a while he went down the cabin again.

Another day, a couple of days later, when we were pumping, the mate was working round with the pumps, when he got hold of an empty beer can, sharp around the edges, and struck a Greek sailor over the mouth with it. The can cut his upper lip across from one side to the other of his nose, so you could see the teeth right through where the cut was. I think he will bear that mark forever.

Another day, at the braces, he hit me with his clenched fist right in the face so hard the blood was running all over my face, broke my nose, and chased me all round the deck. Then he told me to go and wash my face in the scuppers. After that he sent me to the wheel, came aft himself and told me he had good mind to put me under the grating and stand on top of me. The same thing was going on day after day. At last he was using a hemp rope tarred, with two knobs in, using it as a whip on our backs. Some days I got ten or fifteen lashes across my back, so we were blue, black and yellow. If you happened to do something wrong, he got wild, throw belaying pins, the shoes off his feet .in fact, anything he could lay his hands, right at you, generally finishing it up with a couple of kicks.

One day we were pulling ropes. He kicked the Greek right under his heart, down on the deck, roaring at him. You Dago S—O—B, and gave him several more. The man groaning with pain. Then the mate got hold of a board and beat the Greek over his head twice, so big bumps was on his head, the day after. The same thing with a German, struck him over the legs with a board, so one of the legs was swollen up and he was limping round the deck a long while after. I saw him knocking the same fellow over the head with a belaying pin so he staggered round the deck and after a while he dropped down senseless on the deck at the main-rigging, with Hansen after him still kicking him all over the body roaring at him filthy names. After a while the man came to, limping round the deck, with tears in his eyes.

Another morning on the 4 to 8 watch, he started in again with the Greek, knocked him down with his clenched fist, and then with the tarred rope after him, lashing him all over his face, so one of his eyes got closed, and swelled up terrible big and blue all around. Another time he went at an old Carpenter about 50-60 years of age, getting him by the throat and choking him roaring, "Get a move on you, you old Bolshevik bastard.

The cook was also roughly handled. Every morning he got a kicking for no reason; we could sit in the forecastle and hear him crying out for pain.

Another day when we were taking the headsails over he knocked down the second mate senseless on deck, then he got hold of a board and struck me across the back. I thought my back was broken. He threatened to kill us, one day I remember him saying "You should have been with me a trip to Cape Town, when I made two sailors jump over the side." The some thing occurred day in and day out the whole trip.

Now I'm going to write all of what I knew, when one sailor get lost. He was a young German. That happened in the morning about 6:30 A. M., both watches on deck, the captain himself at the wheel. We were shortening sails the flying jib and the outer jib were hauled down, royal and top-gallant sail was clewed up. One watch was sent up to make fast the square-sails, the other watch sent out to make fast the jibs. A big sea was running, with the ship taking a dive once in a while. Some of the boys were too frightened to go out, the Second Mate holleering and jumping and using all kinds of threatening words. Before the men got out on the jibbom the second mate hurled a belaying pin after them—the Greek reckoned it struck the man who got lost—at the same time the ship took a good dive, and when she came up most of the men were hanging on to the stays, with the exception of one who get lost. I was up on the gallant yard at the same time seeing all this, when somebody shouted "man overboard," and I saw the German swimming round in the water about 3 to 4 feet from the ship's side singing out for help. When he came to midships he was about 8 feet away. Then I saw the captain coming running down on the deck. He throwed about 2 to 3 lines at the man, but without effort. After that I saw him swimming round or drifting aft. I believe he was trying to make for the ship's rudder, but without effort. After that I saw him waving his hand over his head a couple of times. After my estimation, it must be about 8 minutes, I saw him again. The ship was making about 4 or 5 miles per hour. The last I saw of him was his back above the water. I believe he was trying to take his oilskins off.

When all that was finished Hansen came out on deck and was told that one man was gone. He only laughed and said "We can't help that" then he started with his rope yelling out "Come on you (imprintable name) one Dutchman is gone; I don't give a G. D. if another B—— goes."

Many a time he told me to jump over the side. You don't dare to, you hound, you got a yellow streak across your back. And about the Sailors' Union; he mentioned, "they tried hard to hang me once." You fellows can pray to Andrew Furuseth now."

"Next trip I'm going to take a Union Crew out of Frisco, believe me, I'm going to pay them."

At last we came to Mejillones. When the tugboat got hold of us, the mate using his rope freely in port. We got money on Saturday night and went ashore. We went up to the doctor and to the police station. The doctor reckoned he never saw such a lot of cripples and mutilated bodies in all his life. After that we went up to the American Consul and complained about the treatment. He sent us up to the Salvation Army and kept us there for a week, while the longshoremen refused to unload the ship till some action was taken and Hansen was paid off. It was intended to send the mate and two of us, in the same ship S. S. "Delsosa" back to the States, but Hansen didn't show up. He got paid off with $1700 in cash at the consel. More could be said, just as bad, as been written down. And I make a motion that all this what I have been writing down will be read up in the first meeting and printed in the Seamen's Journal. If I ever was in a hell ship, I been in the "Rolph" with Mr. Hansen. It's the worst thing I ever went through in all my life. And if equality before law exists I hope Mr. Hansen and the rest of the officers on the "Rolph" will get the same treatment from the law, and just as heavy as a sailor, when he is tried for his wrongdoings.

These things ought to be stopped where is "Killman" Hellfire Pedersen what I've heard of before. Mr. Hansen has been tried before. Where are they at the present. Are they still on board ships again using their brutal tactics?

And, by heaven, I'll swear that everything is true, what is written down.

Respectfully yours,
ARNE M. ARNESEN.

HEAVY LOSS BY FLOODS

The recent heavy floods in Colorado, with loss of lives estimated at over two hundred, is the worst disaster that has befallen this country since the sinking of the steamship "Eastland" at Chicago in 1915, with a loss of 812 lives.

Within ten years, more than two thousand lives have been lost and millions of dollars' worth of property destroyed by floods of American rivers. The most memorable were:

Overflow the Mississippi in April, 1912, with a loss of five hundred lives and destruction of $3,000,000 worth of property in scores of towns and cities in Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas and Tennessee.

In March, 1913, the Ohio and its tributaries overflowed with serious effects on a large region, including Dayton, Hamilton, Zanesville, Columbus and Cincinnati. In Ohio, 452 lives were lost and property damage exceeded $20,000,000.

More than two hundred persons lost their lives in a flood which overran the valley of the San Luis Rey river in California in January, 1916.

The Rio Grande overflowed in July, 1916, and several hundred persons perished, mostly on the Mexican side. There were seventy-five deaths at El Paso.

The greatest American flood occurred when virtually all of Johnstown, Pa., was destroyed on May 31, 1889, by the breaking of the Conemaugh dam. The dead were estimated at about 2500.

Much of the damage to Galveston, Tex., in a hurricane of September, 1900, was done by water blown in from the Gulf of Mexico. More than three thousand persons died and property worth $25,000,000 was destroyed.

POOR CATCH RUINS EXPORTS

The value of the exports of canned fish from the Stavanger, Norway, consular district to the United States, during the first three months of 1921, fell from $481,023, which was the total value of the shipments for the corresponding period in 1920, to $115,467. The decrease is attributed to the poor catch of bristling in 1920, which is used by the canneries as raw material for their packs of the best grade of Norwegian sardines, and also to the poor demand in the United States for the cheaper grades, the market being well supplied.

A CAT THAT CAME BACK

About thirty years ago it was generally conceded that the regular deep-water sailor, who confined himself to service in limejuice ships, "had it on" any living creature when it came to sustaining life on a minimum of food and water—any ordinary prison allowance was comparatively a round of feasting. However, when it comes to doing the thing right, an ordinary, common, fence-walking, every night Thomas cat seems to have put the fasting records of the old-time limejuicers to shame.

The following, which recently appeared in the San Francisco press, is of interest as a record of long-distance abstemious ability:

"'Tom Cadillac,' feline resident of Detroit, Mich., arrived in San Francisco on the Oceanic liner 'Sonoma,' after spending eight of his nine lives in a trip from New York to Sydney, Australia, and back.

"Tom will be used as the model for a bronze entitled 'The Cat That Came Back.'

"He died numerous deaths before he was discovered, made a hero, and returned to his native land.

"Tom was only an ordinary mouse-catcher in the Cadillac automobile factory until he inadvertently started on an eventful journey. He had no intention of traveling half way around the world and back or he would have provided himself with a meal ticket and perhaps a thermos bottle.

"As it was, he found himself accidentally nailed up in an automobile crate with elegant sleeping quarters and famine.

"Tom is believed to be a real automobile expert. When he was discovered as the crate was unloaded at Sydney he had devoured the instruction book, polished every part of the machine that carried any oil, overhauled the differential as far as taking out the grease, and stretched himself out on the engine to die from thirst.

"The Australian authorities found something against him in the immigration laws and ordered him deported. Representatives of the automobile company took care of him and insured his life for the return journey, believing that he had but one left.

"The trip to Australia consumed approximately seven weeks, and Tom arrived in Sydney on February 22."

He was brought back to the United States in fashion "De luxe" by the wife of the Australian agent for the Cadillac concern.

Only an old-time limejuice deep-water sailor can appreciate the sufferings of Thomas, but it is a safe bet that unlike the habits of the sailor there will be no more shipping off shore for the four-footed ocean traveler.

Four merchant vessels recently purchased by the Mexican Government in Canada are on their way to the Pacific Coast of Mexico. Two of the vessels are to be used in the freight and passenger service between Manzanillo, Islas Maria and Mazatlan; the other two are to have their headquarters at Guaymas, whence they will serve ports in the Gulf of California and the Pacific Littoral of Lower California, including Ensenada.

LIVING COSTS UNSTEADY

The United States Department of Labor, through the Bureau of Labor Statistics, has given out the changes in retail prices of food in nine principal cities of the United States. The Department publishes monthly changes in the prices of forty-three articles of food in fifty-one cities, but complete returns will not be available until the 15th of the month. The data for nine cities, Bridgeport, Newark, New Haven, New York, Norfolk, Philadelphia, Providence, St. Paul, and Washington, are complete and present the following results (figures showing changes in the prices of food in other cities will be published from time to time as the data are available):

During the month from April 15 to May 15, 1921, the retail cost of food in Bridgeport decreased 3 per cent; in Newark, 6 per cent; in New Haven, 5 per cent; in New York, 4 per cent; in Norfolk, 4 per cent; in Philadelphia, 5 per cent; in Providence, 3 per cent; in St. Paul, 8 per cent; and in Washington, 5 per cent.

For the year period, May 15, 1920, to May 15, 1921, the retail cost of food decreased 29 per cent in Bridgeport; 30 per cent in Newark; 31 per cent in New Haven; 29 per cent in New York; 30 per cent in Norfolk; 32 per cent in Philadelphia; 30 per cent in Providence; 37 per cent in St. Paul; and 29 per cent in Washington.

For the eight-year period, May 15, 1913, to May 15, 1921, the retail cost of food shows an increase of 39 per cent in Newark; 43 per cent in New Haven; 49 per cent in New York; 51 per cent in Providence; 44 per cent in Philadelphia; and 53 per cent in Washington.

GERMAN-SYRIAN TRADE REVIEWS

Regardless of obstacles in the way of the resumption of German trade in Syria, German manufactured products are now available in this market. The Deutsche Levant Line has re-established its freight service between Hamburg and Jaffa and Haifa, but its ships are not permitted to touch at Beirut or any port on the Syrian coast under French mandate.

German exporters are making quick deliveries, and on account of their comparatively low prices, because of the low depreciation of the exchange on the mark, their goods are finding an open market in Syria and are again effectively competing with American and European manufactures. Catalogues received from German houses are printed in German, English, French and Italian.

The Germans are short of copper, and at present products necessitating the use of copper in their manufacture are not supplied by German houses.

The output of coal since the beginning of the British miners' strike has been negligible. Miners themselves have appropriated certain coal outcrops for their own needs, and in some cases marketed same. A few shallow mines are being operated on a co-operative basis, but the output is not sufficient to be a market factor.

A recent report from Shanghai states that 320 American vessels arrived in that port during 1920, compared with seventy-three for 1917 and forty-one for 1914.

An Awakening Coming

In a recent address to business men in Charleston, W. Va., Governor Morgan said: "Thank God, the awakening is coming in Mingo county."

To this statement the West Virginia Federationist replies:

"Yes, it is coming, but through no effort of yours, the coal masters or any of the State officials.

"The awakening will arrive when the Federal investigation committee makes public their findings and expose the vicious system of the industrial overlords who have ruled with brute force and crushed a liberty-loving people under the iron heel of greed by the usurpation of the Constitution and the enforcement of a law of the gun and club in the hands of their thug army, aided and abetted by the public officials whom they own and control.

"Governor Morgan was absolutely right when he stated that 'the people of West Virginia don't understand the situation as it exists today.' If they did there would be a mighty roar throughout the entire State demanding that he perform his sworn duty to uphold law and order by removing the private army of coal company thugs from Mingo, Logan and McDowell counties and restore constitutional rights to the citizenship thereof.

"If he wanted to acquaint the people with conditions he could have quoted an editorial from the Charleston Mail in openly advocating mob law, which said: 'What is needed to settle that trouble on Tug river is a few tugs by the sheriff's assistants at a stout rope.'

"In other words, the Mail advocates that the thugs and bums recruited by agents of the coal masters to break the miners' strike should string up the citizens of Mingo county who are struggling for their American rights and more bread and butter for their families."

Employers Cause Waste

Responsibility for more than 50 per cent of the waste in industry can be placed at the door of employers and less than 25 per cent is due to labor, according to a report by the American Engineering Council's committee on elimination of waste in industry.

The committee consists of sixteen engineers and scientists who were appointed by Herbert Hoover when he was head of the council. The report comprises 125,000 words and has been handled most gingerly by those "holier-than-thou" influences that insist capitalists are 100 per cent production perfect, while labor is responsible for mankind's social and economic ills.

As examples of waste in various industries, the report declares the building industry is only about 60 per cent efficient, the shoe industry about 65 per cent, the metal trades 70 to 75 per cent and the clothing industry 60 per cent.

In the building trades alone waste of time and energy, and money through duplications, estimates and bids, total millions of dollars annually.

Reference is made to the untold losses through preventable diseases and the cost to the Nation because workers are changing from job to job because of unsatisfactory conditions. This high labor turnover, the report said, is a rough index of one of the commonest wastes.

The committee shattered another hobby of "public opinion molders" by the statement that the annual losses through strikes is much less than popularly supposed.

Teachers and Politics

If there is a "professional dignity" associated with teaching, why are not teachers accorded the same treatment accorded other professions, ask officers of the American Federation of Teachers in the official bulletin of that organization.

"A year or so ago," these trade unionists say, "several well-known opponents of the American Federation of Teachers, who had won for themselves the title of 'great educators,' had much to say about the professional dignity of teachers and tried to compare them with doctors and lawyers. The comparison is, of course, a dismal failure from every angle. Would that such a comparison could be made. Who ever heard of teachers serving on boards of education, in municipal offices, state legislatures or Congress, while still engaged in their vocation? The majority of all officeholders in the United States are lawyers. The medical profession is well represented. To these are accorded all the rights of citizenship. Who ever heard of lawyers being disbarred, or doctors losing their licenses because of the participation in political activities? Any attempt to place teachers in the same category is not only sickening humor, but is obviously insincere."

Crewless War Machines

A warship without crew and steered by radio is possible, according to Rear Admiral Robert S. Griffin of the Navy Department.

The discovery will be used in the coming tests between battleships and airplane, when the Iowa will be guided by radio from the battleship Ohio. The apparatus aboard the latter will be of sufficient strength to direct the Iowa from a distance of 500 miles.

The invention consists of a valve of secret construction which is attached to three parts of the machinery—the full engine, water engine and the steering gear. Thus the vessel is not only guided, but is fueled and watered by radio. Navy experts predict that the invention will be applied to gigantic torpedoes, which can be launched at a foe, no matter how distant.

Aliens Who May Come

Under the new immigration law, which limits immigration to 3 per cent of the nationals in this country in 1910, 77,206 immigrants will be allowed to enter from the United Kingdom; from Norway, 12,116; Sweden, 19,956; Denmark, 5644; The Netherlands, 8602; Belgium, 1557; Luxemburg, 92; France, 5692; Switzerland,

Appropriations of $110,000,000 for the Shipping Board deficiency appropriation bill were cut to $61,000,000 by the Senate and House conferees, the latter refusing to agree to the Senate increase of $50,000,000.

American forces will begin to withdraw from Santo Domingo in the near future. An official announcement fixing the date of this exodus is expected from the State Department within a short time.

Equipment has been assembled ready for shipment to Hawaii for the establishment of a railway battalion, including eight mortars of 12-inch caliber, to be used on all lines of the Oahu Railway. Spur tracks will be built where the railway does not reach, thus enabling the Army to rush heavy artillery to any strategic point of the island.

Employment by the Shipping Board of former agents at overseas ports was criticized in the Senate by Senator Jones of the Commerce Committee and Senators Kenyon, Republican, Iowa, and Reed, Democrat, Missouri. Of 300 employes in European ports, at least 75 per cent are British subjects, Senator Kenyon declared. A former employe who made a report of the situation, was dismissed. Senator Reed suggested that the employment of British agents by the board in foreign ports was "a reaction of the pro-British propaganda."

Fifty destroyers and three divisions of seaplanes will accompany the battleships "New Mexico," "Idaho," "Mississippi" and "New York" on the cruise from San Diego to San Francisco, Monterey and Santa Barbara, starting from San Pedro June 21. With the destroyers will go the destroyer flagship "Charleston" and the tender "Buffalo." The fleet will remain at San Francisco the week of July 4. Twelve seaplanes will escort the war craft through. Destroyer divisions attached to the Asiatic fleet and cruising in Far Eastern waters will be relieved every six months and sent to join the destroyer force at San Diego. The Fourteenth Division, comprising the "Rathburne," "Talbot," "Waters," "Dent," "Dorsey" and "Roper," will sail from San Francisco July 5 for Manila on arrival.

At San Diego, officials of the Benson Lumber Company say plans for towing three huge log rafts from the Columbia River to San Diego this summer have been held up because of failure to complete arrangements for a towing tug. Log chains with which to bind the third raft were shipped from San Diego May 14 on the McCormick steam schooner "Wahkeena." The vessel got as far as San Francisco and was then tied up by the marine strike. The chains are still aboard and unless they reach Astoria before July 1 the Benson company announces that the season will be too far advanced to attempt to handle the third raft before the summer of 1922, even if towing arrangements on the other two are successfully completed. Once the strike is ended local lumbermen say millions of feet of lumber, piling, timbers and railroad ties will begin coming to San Pedro and San Diego. The Santa Fe Railway has contracted for three million feet of ties which are to be brought there for storage by some of the steam schooner fleet begins operating again.

Pacific Coast Marine

After many years of litigation, the differences between the Outer Harbor Dock and the Wharf Company and the City of San Pedro are in process of settlement.

The steamer "Yale" of the Los Angeles Steamship Company is running on fast schedule with quick turn around, and is having her passenger and freight accommodations taxed to their capacity.

The Pacific Westbound Conference has failed to join forces with the steamship lines of Seattle, Wash. This means that rates will be fixed independently by operators out of California ports, and the some methods will be practiced by Washington companies.

The schooner "Zampa" has arrived at San Francisco with a cargo of copra, consisting of 385 tons. The vessel was sold to satisfy a libel suit for crew wages and other costs while in Hawaii. The craft was 165 days arriving from Apia, via Honolulu, twenty-five days.

A cable received by E. F. R. deLanoy, San Francisco agent for the Royal Mail Steam Packet Line, states that his company has chartered the English steamer "Sometsetshire" for service between Pacific Coast ports aand Europe. The "Somersetshire," now at London, will leave there June 18, and is expected here July 24 to receive cargo for London, Hamburg, Rotterdam and Antwerp. No passengers will be carried.

Lloyd's have finally and officially posted the schooner "Harvester" as missing and will pay the insurance claims against the vessel. The "Harvester," with a crew of fifteen men, sailed from Vavau, Tonga Island, November 4 last, with a cargo of copra for San Francisco. The vessel was of 678 net tons. She is believed to have foundered in a hurricane. Hope for the safety of the vessel was given up months ago.

For the first time in many moons, a sailing vessel sailed from Astoria last week with a full shipment of lumber. The vessel was the schooner "Mindoro," sailing from the Columbia river port with a shipment of 700,000 feet aboard. The craft is consigned to the Donovan Lumber Company and is expected to make a fast trip. Inability of steam schooners to secure engineers and the demand for lumber resulted in the dispatching of the "Mindoro."

The Pacific Coast Steamship Company has been denied a refund of $1500, paid to the State as a franchise tax for 1917, according to a decision handed down by the Supreme Court. The action of the Court was on appeal brought by the State from a judgment of the Superior Court against Friend W. Richardson as Treasurer of the State of California, to return the amount, which is said to have been paid under protest, to the steamship company.

A vacation has been granted by Superintendent of Lighthouses H. S. Rhodes to the captain and crew of the lighthouse tender "Sequoia." The crew of the "Sequoia" have been at their work continuously for several months, Sundays and holidays included. Most of their time has been passed in Southern California waters. Superintendent Rhodes recently returned from making a complete survey of lighthouses along the southern coast of the State.

The first coal to leave Norfolk on vessels under the direction of the United States Navy since the sea strike are on their way to the Pacific Coast. The Shipping Board freighter "Mundelta" sailed from the Virginia port on June 9 with about eight thousand tons of coal for California City, and the Government freighter "Honolulu" sailed from there for San Diego on June 1 with nine thousand tons of fuel for discharge at San Diego.

When the steamer "Mexico" sailed for Mexico she had on board more than 1000 destitute Mexicans, who had been in Southern California and who appealed to their Government for a return to their native land. The Mexican Green Cross attended to the wants of the refugees. Many of the Mexicans had been serving jail sentences in Los Angeles for minor offenses and, when offered an opportunity to return home, accepted parole and were placed on board the steamer.

The Admiral Line steamer "Admiral Evans," Captain Borg, from San Francisco, with passengers and freight for Portland, was towed into Eureka, June 9, by the tug "Ranger." Soon after leaving San Francisco, the vessel began having trouble with her feed pumps, but it was thought possible to make Eureka under her own steam for repairs. Off Cape Mendocino, the pumps gave out entirely and she was forced to anchor. The steamer "Watson," coming along, gave her a tow to an anchorage off the bar, where the tug "Ranger" took hold.

Work on the repair of the north jetty on Humboldt Bar is now progressing steadily, the land slip at the rock quarries having been completely repaired, and a train of fifteen cars of rock is being delivered every other day to the jetty. Twelve hundred feet of rock and shore work has been completed, there being a total of 2500 feet to complete the work. The twelve hundred feet completed is the shore end; the work to be done is toward the sea. It will be completed September 1, is the estimate of the engineers.

Shipping men of San Francisco have been evidencing considerable interest in the freakish construction of the British tank steamer "Escalona," now in that harbor. The vessel was formerly a tramp steamer and has been converted into an oil carrier. Three tanks have been built in the vessel, running from bow to stern. Two of the tanks are side by side and the third tank forms a triangular effect, resting on top of the two. It is necessary, according to marine surveyors, for the vessel to load and discharge its lower tanks first; otherwise it would be top-heavy.

Traffic by sea between San Francisco and Eureka, which has been closed more than a month, is to be resumed. The Coggeshall Launch & Towboat Company's gasoline schooner "Magnolia" will leave Eureka with freight bound for San Francisco and will return with a cargo of freight from there. The "Magnolia," which is only thirty-three tons net, will not carry as much as one of the steam schooners plying in the trade before the strike, but she will be able to help out a little with her eighty tons' capacity. The strike is being felt severely in some of the small ports of the Pacific Coast.

In an effort to stimulate movement of cargoes from Pacific Coast points to Australia and New Zealand, the General Steamship Corporation, the Oceanic Steamship Company, and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine and Canadian Australian Line, have agreed upon reductions in freight rates on canned salmon, general merchandise and other commodities, effective immediately. The tariff on canned salmon is reduced from $25 to $18 a ton, general merchandise from $25 to $20 a ton, box shooks from $15 to $10 a ton, and wall board from $18 to $15 a ton. The lumber rate, reduced recently, will remain at $20 a thousand feet. The new tariffs are effective from all Pacific Coast ports to Auckland and Wellington, N. Z., and to Sydney and Melbourne, Australia.

Consideration is being given a plan to install engines in several former German barks now lying off Sausalito. To this end draftsmen of the Union Iron Works have submitted specifications for installing five-hundred-horsepower engines in the bark "Hans." In the event of a decision to carry out the project, engines now in motor-ships of the Pacific Freighters Company will be used. Four of the motor-ships of the Pacific Freighters and Pacific Motor-ship Company are lying in San Francisco Bay. According to surveyors, the Seymour & McIntosh engines, at present in the motor-ships of the "Cethana" and "Babinda" type, are suitable to install in the German barks, being capable of generating 600 horsepower, giving a speed of ten knots to the sailing vessels.

W. R. Grace & Company have announced the establishment of a passenger and freight service out of San Francisco port to ports of Chile and Peru. A monthly service will be maintained and the operations will include other Pacific Coast ports. A contract has been made between the company and lumber interests to move twenty million feet of lumber out of San Francisco and other parts of the Pacific Coast to Peru and Chile, and the Cerrao del Caso Mining Company of Peru has closed a deal with W. R. Grace & Company for the transportation of fifty thousand tons of ore from South American ports to San Francisco and Tacoma smelters. Carrying out of the contract will require seven months' time. Before the war W. R. Grace & Company operated a passenger and freight service to South America.

Rushing from the Atlantic Coast to Seattle to take the place of the steamer "Wenatchee," under orders issued by the Pacific Steamship Company, the new liner "Keystone State" will not call at San Francisco. The craft has no passengers or freight and will stop at San Pedro for fuel only. This program was decided on following orders to lay up the steamer "Wenatchee" on her arrival at Seattle from the Orient for repairs and alterations. The "Keystone State" will take the schedule of the "Wenatchee." The "Keystone State" sailed from Philadelphia on June 2. The "Silver State," which left New York June 4 with passengers and freight, will make all ports of call that were made by the steamer "Wenatchee" on her trip from the Atlantic. Three vessels of the 535 type will be in service out of Seattle in the trans-Pacific passenger and freight trade to Far East ports when the "Silver State" and "Keystone State" arrive here. Two more of this type are nearing completion in eastern yards, making a total of five allocated to the Pacific Steamship Company by the United States Shipping Board.

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION LABEL COUNCIL SAN FRANCISCO

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, 1921.

DEFINITION OF A SCAB

At a conspiracy trial held in England about thirty years ago, the prosecuting counsel gave the following definition of a scab: "A scab is to his trade what a traitor is to his country, and though both may be useful in troublesome times, they are detested by all when peace returns; so when help is needed the scab is the last to contribute assistance and the first to grasp a benefit he never labored to procure. He cares only for himself, he sees not beyond the extent of a day, and for momentary approbation he would betray friends, family and country; in short, he is a traitor on a small scale, who first sells the journeyman, and is himself afterward sold and deserted by all. He is an enemy to himself, to the present age and to all posterity."

LOCKOUT EFFECTS REVEALED

When the Matson Line steamer "Matsonia" arrived in San Francisco from the Hawaiian Islands, the vessel had completed her first round trip since the inception of the lockout of seamen. The steamer's return was heralded in the daily press with acclaim, and the Examiner even went to the extent of anticipation by giving the trip a write-up in its shipping news columns, while the "Matsonia" was still some considerable distance from port. The Examiner said:

"With between forty and fifty college men toiling in the engine room, waiting on the passengers in the dining salon and doing regular seamen's work on deck, the big Matson liner 'Matsonia' will arrive in port today from Hawaii.

"The college men made the round trip on the vessel, having signed on at this port, following the marine workers' strike. When the vessel arrived at Honolulu, Captain Arthur L. Soule expressed words of praise for the seamanship of his crew, and Matson officials here declared yesterday that they were now 'old-timers.'

"When the liner arrived at Honolulu, the following was published by one of the Island newspapers:

"'Our passengers did everything in their power to help the boys along in their work,' said the skipper. 'Some of the women, even in the de luxe suites, turned to and made up their own beds. A fine spirit of co-operation and helpfulness was displayed by every person on board, both passengers and crew.'

"Radio messages received last night stated that the liner had an excellent voyage in the run up from the islands and many deck games and social functions were staged aboard the craft."

Such style of newspaper bunk is frequently digested by the general public, but to experienced seamen or anyone connected with operation of vessels the suggestions contained in the write-up were ridiculous. Viewed in connection with other press suggestions, the impression given was that efficiency was the order of the day on the "Matsonia," and that at last we had reached the climax of equality, good-will and happiness; in fact, the voyage of the Matson liner had furnished a concrete example of that ideal state of human equality for which the socialist efforts have been strained since the advent of Marx.

These suggested evidences of a new social order naturally aroused a burning curiosity; therefore we started out on a round of investigation. We were anxious to know if the firemen, sailors or messboys cleaned their fingernails before sojourn to the first class salon for a rubber of bridge with the lady passengers. We were in the dark regarding the deportment of the galley-men. Did they change the greasy habiliments of their craft for more suitable raiment when they promenaded the salon deck or looked into the limpid eyes of some heiress in the pale moonlight shadows cast by the lifeboats. Did some of the grappo friends from Third street and North Beach suddenly bloom into regular "Beau Brummels" under the influence of Matson line psychology? In fact, there were so many possibilities brought to mind by the press accounts that in order to maintain a state of mind free from conjecture we were compelled to be satisfied as to the real situation.

Due to the fact that our citizen rights have been abridged by the Federal Courts, and it would have been a crime to interview the greasy scabs, or wet-nosed college boys, endeavors were made to get in touch with some of the passengers and obtain their version of the situation. This was accomplished, with the result that certain facts were gleaned which placed the matter in an altogether different light.

We were informed that when the "Matsonia" left San Francisco, outward bound, she carried enough fuel oil for the whole round trip, and in addition a sufficient surplus to meet any ordinary emergency. That, when the vessel arrived at Honolulu, it was found necessary to replenish the fuel stock to the tune of $13,000 worth of oil. When it comes to throwing smoke screens, the destroyers of your Uncle Samuel's Navy are mere pigmies compared with the Matson liners, manned with scab crews. It was also discovered that in pursuing their smoke manufacturing activities the vacationists from the University of California managed to burn the smokestack out, and repairs were necessary at Honolulu. It also became necessary to discharge the second engineer at that port.

So much for the efficiency of the engine room department.

It is natural that passengers are more thoroughly concerned with the stewards' department, and some of their observations were interesting and enlightening.

The "Matsonia" brought up over 260 passengers, thirty-two of which were children, and no great effort was required to get them to speak, inasmuch as complaints were universal. They were compelled to pay first class rates and received less than third class accommodations and service. The majority felt that notwithstanding strike conditions they should not have been subjected to such a state of affairs as existed on the "Matsonia."

The general consensus of opinion was to the effect that the sanitary conditions aboard were such that any cheap boarding-house ashore, if maintained in the same state of filth, would be condemned by the Board of Health. The toilets were in very bad order and the stench almost unbearable in the lavatories, which were not cleaned during the whole trip. (In substantiation of this fact, one passenger stated that the lavatory which he was compelled to use was particularly filthy, and that he had observed a pearl button lying in the center of the floor when be got aboard at Honolulu and that he noticed the same button in the identical spot just before coming ashore at San Francisco.) During the voyage a passenger with plumbing ability sought to borrow a monkey-wrench to repair his own toilet.

As a concrete example of the impositions to which the passengers were made subject, the experience of one was stated as follows:

"I paid for first class accommodations; in fact, everybody was charged the first class fare. Many men traveling with their wives were forced to be separated from them, the men being placed in the dormitory—which is third class accommodation under ordinary circumstances—while the wives would crowd into staterooms.

"The conditions pertaining to the staterooms were abominable. From the time I got aboard with my wife until we arrived in San Francisco Bay, we never saw a room steward. The linen was not changed the whole trip, and it was almost impossible to obtain a clean towel. There is no running water in the staterooms, and the water bottles were in such filthy condition as to be useless, and until I had located a place where I could obtain it we were without water. Once I was compelled to wash in about a glass of water. The floor was not swept once and we were compelled to empty our own slops. I was unable to take a bath during the whole trip, due to the fact that the bathroom was in a state of filth.

"The berth conditions were bad, but the food situation was considerably worse. There was a number of colored ex-Pullman men acting as cooks, and their habits were extremely filthy. It was anything but appetizing to observe the perspiration rolling from their faces into the pots and pans on the galley stove. The food was vile and sickening, made worse by the breakdown of the refrigerating plant and the fact that there was not an engineer aboard competent to make the necessary repairs.

A great number of passengers went on a starvation diet rather than risk the consequences of eating the food. In this connection let me state that the doctor was kept busy day and night attending passengers confined to their berths suffering from ptomaine poisoning. I believe that if the voyage had been rough some of the children and weaker passengers would surely have died.

"As to service, there was none. An incident worthy of mention is this: One evening while awaiting something to eat, one of the waiters (a young college student) was asked by one of the twelve passengers around the table to get him a cup of coffee. He disappeared and after expiration of twenty-five minutes he arrived with just the one cup of coffee, amid the cheers of the congenial passengers, who saw the humor of the situation, and were willing, for the time being, to turn tragedy into comedy. There was no discipline in any department of the ship and none was attempted. The chief steward contented himself by keeping away from passengers' complaints and giving his special attention to the Matson family, who were traveling de luxe with their whole retinue of servants.

"It is my opinion that conditions could not possibly have been worse. There was great suffering, and to most of the passengers the voyage was a nightmare. The captain slept only for a few hours on the whole trip, and the doctor was overworked. He probably used as much castor oil on the passengers as fuel oil was consumed on the trip. The stewards' department was careless and incompetent, and when we neared home some of their clothes were in such a state of filth as to be repellant. I wouldn't make a trip on one of those boats again under such circumstances if you made be a present of it."

A passenger, who stated that he was an employer of labor, said that he felt sorry for the college boys. "They have been misled and victimized; they were poorly fed and compelled to live under abominable conditions, and for many their vacation has been entirely spoiled. The passengers were only made the victims of a 'public be damned' policy in efforts of the company to maintain wartime profits in peacetime."

Giving a slight touch of nature to the situation, one of the passengers said that he had observed the characteristics of some of the crew. Certain of the college boys were unable to adapt themselves to their position and persisted in mingling with the passengers. "The chief engineer looked as if he had been selected from an early morning row of vagrants, which might have been hauled out of some gin mill or from under some sidewalk, and appeared before a police judge in unkempt state for sentence. Only once during the trip did I see one of the deck department, and that was when deck sports were going on.

"Two of them, very repellant looking tatterdemalions in filthy clothes, came up on the deck to shine brass, apparently with the desire to observe the sports, as they took nearly four hours to po.. h a piece of brass with a foot square surface. They looked to me as characters you would not care to meet in the dark."

Summing up the evidence, it is proven, in positive manner, that a very energetic press propaganda is operating in the interests of the shipowners, purposed to keep the knowledge of real conditions from the traveling public. That the shipping companies are not only victimizing such confiding spirits as college students when they become strikebreakers, but they wilfully obtain money under false pretenses from passengers for services which cannot be given under the conditions prevailing, due to the lockout.

What would be the consequences of an accident to one of these inefficiently manned vessel can only be conjectured, but past records lead to the belief that it would result in disaster to the passengers and a loss of life that should be made avoidable.

There are laws governing the operation and manning of all vessels. These laws are being flagrantly violated. Will an indignant traveling public finally assert themselves and insist upon their observance?

STOP IT NOW

The revelations of brutality practiced aboard the barkentine "Rolph" reminds us of the days when such crimes were of common occurrence. During the latter period of the existence of that evil the Union kept a record which was published in the Journal as the "Red Record." It was the feeling that such conditions needed to be abolished that actuated many humane and far-seeing Congressmen to support the La Follette Seamen's Act when they were given the opportunity to vote in the interest of the seamen, their people and their country.

Since the Seamen's Law was enacted, brutality aboard ship has ceased except in certain isolated instances, of which the case of the barkentine "Rolph" is one.

Mayor Rolph, one of the operators of the vessel, has a reputation for humanity and fairness and has always been included in the category as a friend of the seamen. It is unfortunate that some of these latest distressful cases have happened on vessels operated under his name.

The brutal Hansen has earned for himself a reputation as a hard case, therefore we have reason to believe that this particular happening could have been avoided if proper precautions had been taken when hiring a mate for such an extended voyage.

There exists a possiblity that Mr. Rolph has not been kept sufficiently informed as to the character of men engaged as officers for his vessels. We suggest that maintenance of reputation for fairness and respect from his seamen makes it imperative that this slight oversight be remedied. We do not believe that the actions of the officers have the stamp of approval from the vessel owner in this instance, and trust that such a situation will be made impossible of repetition.

The Government of Norway and that of the United States assume a different attitude towards locked-out seamen. While the Storthing appropriated 1,000,000 Kr. as recompense for seamen's war services, the U. S. Government-owned Shipping Board uses every resource at its command to destroy the unions.

DIED

August Ehlert, No. 42, a native of Germany, age 72. Died at Palo Alto, Calif., June 9, 1921.

Two Japanese freighters were chartered last week to load grain on the Columbia river for European ports. The Port Said Maru, 4529 net tons, was chartered by Kerr, Gifford & Company for 58 shillings, for the United Kingdom. The "Ryufuku Maru," 4254 tons, has been chartered for 57 shillings 6 pence, to load grain for two ports, one in the United Kingdom and the other in Continental Europe.

The Norton, Lilly & Co. freighter "Steel Inventor," which collided with and sunk the United States destroyer "Woolsey" last February off the Panama coast, has arrived at San Francisco. This is the first time the vessel has been in this port since the accident. The craft was forced to lay up for repairs on the Atlantic, following emergency repairs made in the canal.

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

A BLACK SQUAD POET

A composition from the pen of Comrade Bill Hart, member of the Marine Firemen's, Oilers' and Watertenders' Union of the Atlantic and Gulf, shows that environment is not all-essential to flight of emotional expression. According to Jim Lynch, the brother member's surroundings at the time of his poetic efforts were very uninteresting. The letter and verses follow:

Editor SEAMEN'S JORNAL:

Enclosed you will find a piece of poetry composed by one of our striking firemen, who is at present locked out and sleeping on the floor of the union hall every night. He is willing to sacrifice everything in order to do his bit in helping to win this fight.

As a member of the ship's crew on the particular trip mentioned, he kept a log of his own. The present lockout has given him time to compose this bit of poetry. I copied it off and would very much like to see it in the columns of the JOURNAL, in order to prove that marine firemen frequently observe what takes place on board ship.

CRUISE OF THE "WESTERN SEA"

(By Bill Hart, Marine Fireman.)

From the broad Atlantic reaches
To the wild Pacific shore,
I've traveled this old planet
Many times o'er and o'er,
Of all the ships I've ever struck
That seemed of good to me,
It was a famous packet
They called the "Western Sea."

T'was on the thirteenth day of June
And set out bound for Liverpool,
A place of great renown.
We were only four days out of port
When we ran short of water;
They put us quickly on our whack
Amid great shouts of laughter.

The skipper was a limey,
Our mate and steward as well,
The chef he was Italian,
And the truth to you I'll tell:
It took eighteen days to make the trip
In a zig-zag formation,
And before we reached old Liverpool
We near died from starvation.

On July 1st we reached the pool,
And on the 3rd we docked;
And on the 4th we dressed the ship,
The crew then got "half-cocked."
On the evening of the 4th, my boys,
That I remember well,
They gave us all five pounds apiece,
And for the booze we fell.

We sure did drown our sorrows,
And had good things to eat;
We were acclaimed as heroes
By all upon the street,
For attempting such a voyage it seemed
A risk most trying and daring.
We didn't know the risk we'd run
And the horrors we were staring.

Our refrigerator got on the bum,
'Twas dirty and besotten,
And all the meat that was stored therein
Got maggotty and rotten;
The board of health they found this out,
And they got awful sore,
The steward got amazed and shocked
When they ordered the meat ashore.

If they only saw the galley
And the condition it was in,
They would send us all back home again
Or give us quarantine;
Our cooks and stewards and flunkeys
They were a measley lot,
They were always hatching up a scheme
Or some mischievous plot.

To put the sailors on the bum
It would be their delight
To see us writhe in agony
Or see us out of sight;
We moved down to the old Queen's dock
And thought our troubles were o'er,
But, alas! they only just commenced,
And everyone was sore.

Every American ship we saw
From their flagstaff flew their flag,
But from the staff of the "Western Sea"
We never showed a rag;
On Sundays only Old Glory flew,
'Twas something grand to see,
On week days it was stowed away
In the house of the "Western Sea."

At last it came the happy day
When our cargo it was out;
We moved to the Herculaneum dock
For a supply of oil we sought.
We left early the next morning
To wend our homeward way,
But our propeller was moth-eaten;
We came back the next day.

We had to go into dry dock
To repair that bothersome screw;
It took a week to do the trick,
And it was some big job, too.
Finally we got started,
We had to do our chores,
And it took us fifteen days or more
To get to the Azores.

To Ponta Delgada we had to go
For water, food and for oil;
Our engines needed repairing,
With needed skill and toil;
Our first thoughts were to go ashore,
But it seemed so funny
When we went to see the captain,
He refused to give us money.

Our captain was a sanctimonious man,
He surely did feel sore,
He wondered how we got the kale
And the price to go ashore.
We sold our clothes, everything we had;
We even sold our shoes,
We went ashore that very night
And we filled right up on booze.

We laid in a great supply,
Enough to fill a good-sized shack,
With whisky, wine and creme-de-mint,
Gin and cognac.
On the sixth day of September
We left Ponta Delgada town;
We were sorry to leave so soon,
For to Norfolk we were bound.

On the twelfth day of September
Our coffee it run out;
The food got ripe in the ice-box,
We knew 'twould give us the gout
To eat any more would be dangerous;
We lived on cracker hash,
Everything was camouflaged,
It looked like slobberdash.

The chef he never washed his hands,
He never washed his face,
And never changed his dirty clothes,
And looked a big disgrace.
We got chicken every Sunday,
Old and young and ancient,
But it never could be eaten,
For it was always tainted.

Our stew it was a mystery,
Full of cockroaches and flies;
Our chef he told us it was good—
He never told such lies.
He is a bird at cutting meat,
And he cuts it rather rough,
It surely was like leather
It was that blooming tough.

On the eighteenth day of September
Of sugar we run short;
We can't get any substitutes
Or fruit of any sort;
We maintain the strictest discipline,
And fear we do not show it,
But when we reach old Norfolk
The whole damn town will know it.

The officers have their luxuries,
With sugar on the bill of fare;
The limey flunkies get theirs as well—
There is no distinction there;
But when it comes to an American,
He's surely out of luck
For to join a hoodoo tramp like this,
He then surely will get stuck.

One day at supper we had fish,
Canned salmon good and pink,
They flavored it with coal oil
To keep down the smell, I think;
One of our firemen ate it,
It put him on the bum;
Our captain got enlargement of the heart,
He gave him a hooker of rum.

You ought to have seen the fireman's eyes,
They sparkled and they gleamed,
He puckered up his lips and said,
"Ye gods, oh! what a dream!"
When the captain saw what he had done
He loud for help did shout,
He hollered for the steward
To kick this fireman out.

The captain he got sorry

To give away his dope;
Next time it would be alcohol
To kill some unlucky mope.
No doubt the fireman needed the rum,
And so did the skipper, too;
I believe he'll never any more
Give more to this darned crew.

Our steward is an educated man;
He said, ,"Now take my tip,
If I do not suit you boys,
I'll exolerate the ship."
I suppose he meant to leave the ship
Or something of the kind,
For such a word as exolerate
Is pretty hard to find.

I've lost some sleep on that account,
My eyes begin to twinkle,
I'll take a whiff of ether
And sleep like Rip Van Winkle.
I've looked in press and dictionary
Exolerate to get;
If I looked from now till doomsday
I'd be looking for it yet.

Firemen, oilers and sailors,
Listen unto me:
Never join a miserable tramp like this—
The S. S. "Western Sea,"
For if you do you're sure to rue,
You'll surely be like me,
Enjoying the misery and strife
On board the "Western Sea."

When ever you see a funnel
With a white band and painted black,
You'll know the ship's the American Line,
Leave her and never come back;
Their commanders are all cheap guys,
Their cooks and stewards as well,
If you don't heed this warning
Your end we cannot tell.

COURT SCENE IN TEXAS

Justice in the State of Texas is still of the old-time border, or wild west variety, judging from the following from W. F. Cattell, agent for the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association at Galveston. But when we realize the fact that the United States Government—through the agency of the Shipping Board, which is using "all the resources at its command"—is actively engaged in efforts to destroy the marine unions, a few more acts of injustice perpetrated against American seamen can be expected.

Time—June 4, 1921.

Place—Corporation Court, Galveston, Texas.

Judge—Henry O'Dell, a cheap politician, who tries to play both ends and the middle.

Courtroom crowded with striking sailors and a few potential murderers. The first man to be tried is charged with disobeying a city ordinance. Officer testifies that the defendant is selling milk out of dirty bottles; that his place of business is not screened; that the milk was fed to babies, and in all probability would result in the death of persons drinking same; that he had repeatedly warned the defendant and he (defendant) refused to comply with the law. Result:

Judge—"You have committed a very serious crime, which might result in very serious consequences; you must obey the law at once and your sentence is suspended."

The second man to face the bar is charged with reckless driving. Officer testifies that the defendant was drunk and was driving the car at a terrific rate of speed, and that when warned to obey the law he became abusive. Result:

Judge—"Do you know that you have committed a very serious offense and that you might have killed a lot of people? You are discharged this time and please don't let it happen again."

A few more persons are tried, some for very serious offenses, and are all dismissed.

Final—Sixteen sailors are brought forward, who have been in the bull pen all night, suffering the torments of the damned with the heat and foul air; they are charged with loafing. Officer testifies that the night previous he went out in the patrol wagon and scoured the town and picked these men up. That they were all behaving themselves and gave no trouble, but he was carrying out instructions. Result:

Judge—"Don't you men know that I am your friend? I have warned you before not to go beyond the dead line."

Mr. Bullock, agent of Cooks' Union, asks Judge where is the dead line?

Judge—"All over Galveston."

W. F. Cattell, delegate of Marine Cooks, then tells Judge that the men have asked him to defend them and asks if he may do so. Judge agrees.

W. F. Cattell—"Your Honor, most of the men are Scandinavians and were attending the Scandinavian Church. One man was arrested while mailing a letter. Several others were asked if they were sailors, and on answring 'yes,' were put in the patrol wagon. Another man was about to enter his house." While this talk was going on, the Judge was writing on the blotter that all the men plead guilty and that they were fined $25 each. The facts are they had not been permitted to say a word.

Judge—"You men are a bad bunch; you cannot attend that church; they must move the church. I feel very sorry for you. You must go to jail for twenty-five days each."

Franz Stoeckel, a former agent and highly respected member of the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association of the Atlantic, has suffered a crushing misfortune in the loss of his dearly beloved wife, Marie Stoeckel, who died at Salzburg, Germany, on March 8, 1921. Those comrades who are acquainted with him, and his worthy qualities, extend their heartfelt sympathy to him in his bereavement.

HEAVY INDUSTRIAL TOLL

Industrial accidents cause the death of more than twenty-two thousand persons annually, according to a compilation of statistics by the American Red Cross in Washington, based on reports of the Department of Labor and other official sources. Of every ten thousand American workmen employed, seven were killed in industrial accidents during 1918, the latest year for which complete statistics are available. The total of casualties thus was 45 per cent of the number of American killed in battle in the World War.

"The control of accident fatalities and injury is one of the outstanding problems in the movement for longer and healthier lives," says the Red Cross statement. "Life saving and first aid instruction, which the Red Cross provides through chapters scattered throughout the country, has in the last seven years helped lessen drowning. If the drowning death rate of 1906-1910 had prevailed in 1918, for instance, there would have been 2100 more deaths than actually occurred."

Coal and metal mining attained the highest accident death rate of any industry, with rates of thirty-three men killed for each ten thousand employed. In coal mines alone, over 2500 were killed in 1918. During the past seven years an average of at least four men have lost their lives for every million tons of coal produced, according to United States Bureau of Mines figures. One-quarter of the men employed in metal mines sustained an injury during the year.

An unusual average of more than ten thousand men were injured in quarries for the five-year period 1913-1918. There has been a slight decrease in the fatality and injury rates for 1919, as compared with 1918, among the quarry operators, according to reports by the Bureau of Mines. The records show that 144 quarry operators out of each thousand employed in 1919 and 147 in 1918 were injured.

RUSSO-DUTCH TRADE RELATIONS

The Dutch do not intend to lose any benefit which might accrue from trade with Russia, and for this reason a concern has been formed at Rotterdam for financing trade between the countries. The company will act as a clearing house for Dutch traders dealing with the Russian border States and will not trade on its own account.

Several firms have been dealing with Bolshevist interests for some time, and recently trade has grown to such a degree as to require considerable financing. Strong Dutch interests are back of the newly formed syndicate, and it is their intention to shift operations to Amsterdam, where closer touch with the component members can be maintained. The business of the concern has consisted chiefly in the sale to the Russian interests of old army uniforms, khaki cloth, shoes, rough underwear and other clothing, with medical and other sorts of army supplies, in return for which it has been receiving flax and gold through shipments arranged between Reval and Rotterdam. The balance against the Bolshevists for these shipments has been settled for in gold exported from Reval to Amsterdam.

UTAH'S LOFTY MOUNTAINS

Utah has many lofty mountain peaks. Six of them rise more than thirteen thousand feet above sea level and nearly sixty rise above twelve thousand feet, according to the United States Geological Survey. The highest mountain in the State is Kings Peak, which has an elevation of 13,498 feet. Mount Emmons and Gilbert Peak, both in Utah, are also high mountains, reaching elevations of 13,428 and 13,422 feet, respectively.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Roads Seek More Boodle

A trip around the capitol, these early summer days, leaves one impressed with the economic illiteracy of the great majority of members of the Senate and House. Reaction is in full swing. Tolerance, much less approval, of liberalism in the industrial field is even more unpopular than it was a year ago.

In the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, Chairman Cummins announces that the hearings in the investigation of railroad finances are suspended for ten days, and one learns that this delay is due to Cummins' desire to have the committee vote something near a billion dollars to the railroad corporations for their alleged losses during Government control, on the item of rotted ties, etc. It is also proposed that the companies be permitted to issue fifteen-year bonds to cover their payment of some hundreds of millions which they owe the Government. Alfred Thom, chief of the railroad lawyers, sits complacently at the committee table, thinking up new gifts for his clients which may be picked from the Government's Christmas tree.

Workers Victory Rankles

In the Senate Committee on Labor, Archibald Stevenson of New York, counsel for the New York Clothing Trade Association, which has just been defeated in the six months' lockout of 65,000 clothing workers, begs for an investigation of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, who were the first to win the forty-four-hour week in a manufacturing industry. He denounces the organization as a hotbed of bolshevism, anarchy and dangerous radicalism. The committee, skeptical of his statements, sends for the chief officers of the Amalgamated and the leaders of the two organizations of manufacturers—one of which has signed up a union shop agreement which assures peace in the industry.

Shipping Graft Disclosed

On the floor of the Senate Senator Kenyon is disclosing the wholesale waste of salaries and the big and petty graft in the United States Shipping Board, which is due to create the worst financial scandal in the annals of the Government. Public funds pay for telegrams from Shipping Board officials to their wives, sweethearts and friends, on the most trivial subjects. Kenyon reads some of these telegrams aloud, and remarks that Government money is poured out in hundreds of ways as unfair and outrageous. Salaries in the Shipping Board for various positions are $15,000, $10,000 and $7,500, for work paid at $4,000, $3,000 and $2,500 in other departments of the Government. An assistant auditor at a fat salary is reported to Kenyon as being used as chauffeur to one of the more lavishly paid officials.

All of this graft and waste is just what Andrew Furuseth and other spokesmen of the International Seamen's Union have claimed it to be, when they have pointed out that the wage reduction demanded by Chairman Benson of the Shipping Board from the seamen was a mere fleabite on the whole situation. Salaries at headquarters of the Board alone would account for the throwing away of more money than is invested in the wages of a large part of the seamen locked out on May 1. Kenyon asks the Senate to adopt a resolution investigating the management of the Board under Benson. Senator Warren and Senator Jones of Washington, heads of the Appropriations Committee and the Commerce Committee, argue that the Board is doing as well as could be expected of it under the existing commercial depression. The Senate seems to agree with them, that after all the waste of a billion or so is unavoidable, and that Benson should be left a free hand.

Attack Seamen's Act

Merchant Marine, however, is a popular topic. Over in the House the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has just reported, by unanimous vote, the bill offered by Representative Scott of Michigan, wiping out the main safeguards of the Seamen's Act applying to the Great Lakes. It provides for the abolition of the eight-hour day, the reduction of the percentage of able seamen in the deck department from sixty-five to fifty, and the lengthening of the legal season for navigation fifteen days in the spring and thirty days in the fall, making the season extend from May 1 to October 15, for vessels of every class.

Patrick O'Brien of the Seamen explains that under this Scott bill a thirteen thousand ton ore carrier on the Lakes can now carry a crew of only five men and five boys, where now she carries seven men and three boys, while on passenger vessels the reduction in the number of able seamen means that the lifeboats, which now must be sufficient for only half the total number of persons on board, cannot all be launched in case of disaster. The United States Steel Corporation will be the chief gainer by this breaking down of the Seamen's Act. A very strong fight will be put up against the Scott measure in the Senate, when it has passed the House. If it gets to President Harding, he will demonstrate what he meant when he said, recently, that the Seamen's Act represents the American conscience.

Will Go Same as Others

Railroad labor organizations, whose spokesmen have been waiting to see what the new Congress would do to avert a railroad strike, are pessimistic. They see what the International Seamen's Union and the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association have received thus far, and they discover that the wage reduction ordered by the Railroad Labor Board for two million railroad workers meets with enthusiastic approval in the House and Senate. Accordingly they have begun to take their referendum as to the acceptance or rejection of the award. If the award is rejected, a strike vote will be taken in most of the organizations. In the Machinists' organization a strike vote must be approved by three-fourths of the members voting on the proposition. It seldom happens that a strike vote fails to receive the necessary majority, unless badly beaten.

Since the announcement of the wage reduction on the railroads, discussion of American Federation of Labor politics among railroad labor spokesmen here has virtually ceased. John Lewis of the United Mine Workers, who was looming as a certain winner of the presidency in the race against Samuel Gompers, has dropped out of the limelight. It now seems unlikely that his chances can be restored by new approaches to the big organizations controlling the votes necessary to elect at Denver. When the moment for his giving of pledges as to his attitude, to various progressive elements, came and went without a sign from him, Lewis' star waned and went down.

Convention Must Act

The probable re-election of President Gompers is not to be confused, however, with the complete control of events in the coming convention. There is evident a determination to set new frontiers for the labor movement in America, and the railroad men are promising that this will be done in the sessions beginning June 13. Changes in the list of vice-presidents are almost certain. Adoption of resolutions instructing the executive council to demand Government ownership and democratic operation of railroads is a foregone conclusion. Proposals of far-reaching development of the co-operative movement, and of the setting up of higher standards of living for the wage workers, will be approved by virtually unanimous vote. Political strategy will once more be debated, in the light of the bitter experiences of the past twelve months.

President Gompers, Secretary Morrison and a large party of minor officials, and delegates to the Building Trades Department convention, which meets in Denver next week, are leaving here tomorrow and will leave Chicago on Monday, June 6. They will be on the scene of the convention in time to hold preliminary sessions of the executive council and to canvass the general situation of the labor movement in all departments before the delegates to the big convention arrive.

Andrew Furuseth of the Seamen may not reach Denver until very late, due to the fact that the shipowners are now attacking his organization through injunctions in many ports where the members are locked out. The latest injunction is reported from San Francisco. At the same time, and as if planned to make his situation as difficult as possible, the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries announces that it will start hearings on the Edmonds bill, which proposes to repeal a great part of the Seamen's Act as applied to ocean shipping. The committee has found it so easy to report out the Scott bill, destroying the application of the Seamen's Act to the Great Lakes, that it feels like making a clean sweep while conditions are favorable. The use of action in Congress to assist the shipowners in breaking a labor organization is not new, but this is perhaps the most brazen attempt yet made by political business interests to assist a lockout by the legislative power of the House and Senate.

The Seamen's one victory of the past week has been their defeat of the movement among officials of the Marine Engineers to sign up a compromise with the shipowners, leaving the Seamen to fight on alone. As soon as the membership of the Marine Engineers saw the possibilities in such disunion of their forces, they protested, and their national officers balked at the compromise. The shipowners helped their decision, by refusing to agree to reinstate the engineers who had quit. Now the Marine Engineers and the Seamen are standing firmly together once more.

GOVERNMENT AIDS STRIKE-BREAKERS

The following affidavit has been forwarded to headquarters by P. B. Gill, Seattle agent:

State of Washington vs. County of King—ss.

Leonard Eccles and Charles H. Koch, being first severally sworn, each on oath and for himself, says: That Leonard Eccles is by occupation an oiler; that Charles H. Koch is by occupation a water-tender; that both of them prior to June 1, 1921, were residents of Cleveland, Ohio, and had for several years engaged in their respective occupations and trade; that on or about June 1, 1921, they were approached by a man whose exact name is to them unknown, but which said name is either Griffin or Griffith, who represented to them that he was the representative of the United States Shipping Board and was seeking to engage men to work for the said Shipping Board in the operation of its ships on the Pacific Coast; that it was at that time represented to the affiants and to each of them that the strike and lockout on the Pacific Coast had been settled; that in response to said representations the affiants and each of them, in company with five others, accepted employment for the said United States Shipping Board, and that their transportation from the city of Cleveland to the city of Seattle was thereupon advanced and provided; that the affiants, together with the five others accompanying them, arrived in Seattle, Washington, on Sunday, June 5, 1921, and were immediately taken to the Butler Hotel in said city, where accommodations were provided for them. That on Monday afternoon, June 6, they were directed by telephone that an automobile would be sent to the hotel to take them to their respective ships. That the affiants, together with the five others, took said automobile and were driven to Pier A in the city of Seattle and there instructed to report for employment to the steamship "Admiral Dewey"; that the affiants at that time, for the first time, learned that said steamship was not operated by the United States Shipping Board, but was operated by The Pacific Coast Steamship Company, a private corporation, and that because of such fact the affiants refused employment. That after reporting to said steamship for duty the affiants further learned that the lockout strike was still in full force and effect and that the differences between the private steamship company and the various unions concerned had not been adjusted.

Notary Public in and for the State of Washington, residing at Seattle.

The foregoing is an example of what is meant by Admiral Benson's despotic declaration that the Shipping Board "will use all the resources at its command." It is the most positive evidence that the Government, through the medium of the Shipping Board, is engaged in the business of breaking strikes for private shipowners.

MOVIE ACTORS HARD HIT

The industrial slump has struck the movie business in Los Angeles. A conservative member of the Hollywood film colony estimates that between two thousand and three thousand motion picture workers of the world's film capital are idle and many of them are actually starving.

Following the feverish wave of wartime prosperity and high wages has come the reaction which is being felt in the cinema industry, as elsewhere, with the result that thousands of artists, helpers, clerks, etc., in the studios have been thrown out of employment.

While the motion picture companies have not acknowledged the seriousness of the situation, they do take occasion to blame a considerable portion of the present inactivity in the studios to the introduction of foreign films.

The situation was first disclosed to the public when, a few days ago, a young man who formerly earned good pay in the movies fainted in the street in Hollywood. He was taken to a hospital, where it was discovered that he had been without food for three days, and he had walked to Universal City and back—a matter of several miles—in search of work.

Pretty girls, who had begun to shine as screen stars of lesser magnitude, actually pawned their clothes to keep from growing hungry. It is pointed out that under these conditions the most serious temptations are confronting these young women.

Public Press Fails

In an advertisement published in the Baltimore press, the Church League for Industrial Democracy says:

"It is a sad commentary on the state of the morals of the public press that it will not give the essential facts of industrial controversies save through the medium of paid advertisements. It is readily recognized that the attainment of decent social and industrial conditions will be delayed until this condition is corrected, since a well-informed and intelligently directed public opinion is essential if the scales are to be held anything like equal."

Profits in Shipping

The International Mercantile Marine Company made a clear profit of $9,444,157 last year. This stupendous amount is exclusive of all charges, and was made after deducting operating and general expenses, income and excess profits taxes, interest on bonds and setting aside $4,417,854 for depreciation in steamers.

This "clear velvet" of more than $9,000,000 is about one-half of the clear profit made in 1919.

Labor News

The Cracker Bakers' Union of San Francisco has secured a new agreement which reduces the nine-hour day to eight hours.

The order for twenty members of the State police to leave Reno, Nevada, for service in the strike zone at Tonopah has been canceled.

The strike ballot circularized among the Pullman Company's shop forces in more than eighty cities, which was to have been voted, was recalled, following a conference with the railway employes' department of the American Federation of Labor.

At Denver, delegates to the convention of the Metal Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor defeated the proposal designed to bring about the organization of one big metal trades union in the United States.

Reactionaries of the American labor movement refuse to heed the requirements of the times, and the executive council of the American Federation of Labor has again decided to stand by its decision not to affiliate the American labor movement with the International Federation of Trade Unions.

Unemployment increased approximately one-half of 1 per cent during May, according to the Department of Labor. The statement is based upon reports from 1423 firms, employing 501 or more persons, in 65 principal industrial centers of the country. The same firms employed 1,573,538 workers in May, as against 1,580,749 in April.

An agreement signed by officials of the Foundrymen's Association and the Moulders' Union at San Francisco, carrying a wage reduction from $8 to $7.50 a day, effective June 15, and a further reduction to $7.12 per day, effective August 15, and to remain in force one year. The reduction in wages was accepted by the union men after negotiations.

Organized manufacturers were strong enough in the Connecticut State Legislature to smash the new compensation law after it had been reported favorably by the Senate Judiciary Committee. Senator Hall, a manufacturer, led the fight, pleading that "this is not the time to make changes." The bill would not be effective for a year.

Textile workers in North Carolina and neighboring States are on strike against wage cuts that range as high as 78 per cent. Manufacturers have made unprecedented profits during the war and wages that were below living standards prior to that time were increased. An attempt is now being made to enforce standards lower than existed in 1916.

The solidarity of 55,000 ladies' garment workers in New York has checked labor "deflationists" in this industry, and an agreement has been entered into between these workers and their organized employers which provides that there will be no increase in hours or decrease in pay during the present season. A joint commission will be appointed to study shop and production records with a view of working out measures that will tend to increase the productivity of the workers. The commission shall also act as a joint appeal committee and shall pass upon all complaints of employers and employed regarding the adequacy of production. Both sides agree to abide by the decision of the commission.

Domestic and Naval

The steamer "Winyah" has been compelled to go into dry dock for repairs at Shanghai. The craft was discovered in a leaky condition.

While loading at Santa Fe for Quebraono, the steamer "Mount Rainier" took fire. The vessel will be a total loss. The vessel was partly loaded when she caught fire.

The British steamer "Seapool," from Montreal to the United Kingdom, struck an iceberg several hundred miles off the coast of Newfoundland. Details in reference to the accident are lacking to date.

The nominations of the members of the U. S. Shipping Board, with A. D. Lasker as chairman, have been confirmed by a special executive session of the Senate. No opposition was reported.

The Japanese steamer "Belgium Maru," which arrived on May 5 at Naples from Galveston, had several rivets started, caused by the heavy weather encountered. Part of the vessel's cargo was damaged by sea water.

The supply ship "Nero," which arrived on the Pacific Coast recently from Samoa, is to be put out of commission at once. The "Nero" probably will be sold, according to Captain Robert Morris, assistant to the commandant of the Twelfth Naval District.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court decided in Brooklyn that the City of Mount Vernon was within its rights when it refused to allow Socialists to hold a street meeting October 2, 1920. The Socialists had asserted that the action abridged the rights of free speech.

When the U. S. Shipping Board's steamer "Wanatchee" arrived at her home port on the Pacific Coast, the vessel was the subject of much boast and fuss, which afterevents have proved unwarranted. On her trip to the Orient, during April, the "Wenatchee" was seriously delayed, and now while en route to Seattle on the homeward voyage, the vessel is reported disabled by engine trouble in the inland sea of Southern Japan.

The four new cutters, building or nearing completion, for the United States Coast Guard Service, are being fitted with engines of the same make as those installed in the latest type super-dreadnaughts. The cutters cost approximately $700,000 each and will have a cruising radius of four thousand miles. They are the "Haida," "Tampa," "Modoc" and "Mohave." It is known that two of the vessels will be retained on the Pacific Coast and that one of these will be assigned to duty on San Francisco bay. The four cutters are of sixteen hundred tons each and the tug is of one thousand tons. They will supplant vessels now in the cutter service.

The recent disastrous floods which swept the Arkansas River valley, resulted in loss of hundreds of lives and tremendous destruction of property. The city of Pueblo, Colo., which suffered the most severe damage reports a loss aggregating $20,000,000. Martial law was proclaimed in the stricken zone and every effort made to prevent an epidemic. The situation is still critical with other floods sweeping over the Middle West. Denver, Colo., which was at one time threatened, seems to have passed the critical stage. Flood victims are suffering great hardships and relief is pouring in from all sections of the country.

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

THE HEALTH OF A NATION

Workers Participate in Hygienic Efforts With Remarkable Results

The skill with which the Soviet Government confronted and conquered epedemics which threatened to emasculate the population of Russia has surprised the people of all other nations. Suffering more than any other war participant; stricken by famine and disease, harrassed by civil war, rebellions, and conspiracies, to which was added the machivellian aggressions of world-wide capital, these wonderful people have arisen from the ashes of their misery and are going forward to a higher plane of civilization than the world has ever known.

An idea of some of their accomplishments can be gathered from the following, issued by the Commissariat of Public Health:

The World War laid bare the ills of modern society, and forced humanity to search for new forms of social relations. Russia was the first to take a new path; she severed her connections with the past and made labor and the interests of the toiling masses the main concern of the Government.

The new social order was bound to reflect itself in such an important state function as the care for public health. Believing that the health of the population is the foundation of the prosperity of the country, the Soviet Government spared neither expense nor effort in the care of the population. By a series of bold and original reforms the Commissariat of Public Health was enabled to cope with the most severe epidemics, and under conditions of unparalleled difficulty.

It is thought that it may interest the American people, irrespective of political opinions and sympathies, to know of the work of the Commissariat of Public Health of Soviet Russia. With this end in view, a series of articles are to be issued on various activities of the commissariat.

Public Health Organization

At the beginning of 1917 Russia was already exhausted through the prolonged war, which she was unable to carry on, and through the inefficiency of the Czar's government and the complete incompetence of the Lvov and Kerensky governments, which followed it. The latter did nothing to conserve the feeble economic and cultural forces of the country. They only augmented the ruin of its economic life. When the power passed to the Soviets, the country was already in chaos. Then came rebellions, conspiracies and all the inevitable destruction of cities and entire regions by civil war, and boycott and sabotage by the intellectuals. Finally there came the blockade.

All these disorders could not fail to affect the condition of the public health. In July, 1918, the newly organized People's Commissariat of Public Health had to fight epidemics over an area covering almost one-sixth of the globe, among over a hundred million people living under the conditions described above. There was a shortage of physicians, of whom many had been called to the front; there was a lack of medical supplies and disinfectants, which could not be brought in from abroad because of the blockade. Prior to the war, Russia had obtained the bulk of her chemical and medical supplies from abroad.

The Commissariat of Public Health had to organize on entirely new lines, and with new personnel. It had to mobilize, concentrate and distribute its forces, and at the same time combat its enemies, who, although invisible, are none the less dangerous.

The Commissariat of Public Health successfully accomplished these apparently impossible and superhuman tasks. It came out victorious, and now, after a year of effort, during which the general sanitary conditions and the epidemics were brought under control, we can speak with assurance and with definite figures at hand.

What gave such power to the commissariat in its work with conditions which apparently boded nothing but defeat?

Beset by Enemies

The foreign foes of Soviet Russia prophesied failure in this sphere, and pointed out that the Soviet Government would not be able to cope with the epidemics, and that, with the coming of peace, there would be a general popular uprising, which would result in the downfall of the Soviet Government. Others prophesied the almost complete extinction of the Russian people, and invited the International Red Cross to organize expeditions to save Soviet Russia and to fight epidemics.

These dark forebodings fortunately did not come true. Soviet Russia defied the epidemics by her own forces and without foreign aid, despite the blockade and the difficult conditions of life. The reasons for these surprising results can be found in the principles on which the organization of public hygiene in general, and the struggle against epidemics in particular, were built.

Never in any country was the problem of public health given such wide and complete attention, and never was a population so actively enlisted in the preservation of its health. Even in the Western countries, which consider themselves the most advanced, public hygiene has been largely in the hands of officials, scattered among several departments. The defects of such an organization were recognized by investigators as far back as 1913. Mr. Mirman has pointed out that in the French Government there is no regular department responsible for public health and public hygiene. In the case, for instance, of parliamentary interpolation on measures for the prevention of tuberculosis, such an interpolation would have to be addressed to at least four ministers of state, in addition to the ministers of the army, the navy and the colonies.

Organization of Work

The first thing the Soviet Government did in the matter of public health was to bring all the public health work together under on organization, the Commissariat of Public Health. Thereby it removed one of the greatest obstacles to the advance of public hygiene, especially in the struggle against epidemics. This unification was not merely the setting up of a crude and formal authority. The Soviet Government understood that medical work has its peculiarities with respect to different groups of the population, and in different localities. This had been taken into consideration. The commissariat achieved the complete unification of all medical organizations, civil, military and naval. Wherever the local peculiarities of medical work require continued submission to a central authority (as in the case with the military organization), or where they do not coincide territorially with local administrative bodies, there was applied the principle of co-ordinating the work of the medical departments under central control. Other forms of medical work which do not require such permanent central control were given to local and medical sections, which enjoy wide freedom, and have to follow only the general directions of the central body, which does not interfere with their work as long as it is of a local character, unconcerned with questions of state importance.

In a word, the basic principle of the organization of public health in Soviet Russia is this: The Commissariat of Public Health unites all forms of medical work and sanitation, which had previously been scattered among all the departments. Locally the medical units (in the form of district and city medical sections) have sufficient independent authority for their local medical and sanitary affairs, under general instructions and regulations of the commissariat.

Workers Participate

The second principle of Soviet hygiene is the participation of the population itself, through the representation of the toiling masses in the actual work of public hygiene. Every one who has had to fight epidemics under former conditions knows from experience how this work was jeopardized through the lack of participation by the population. The people were merely addressed through orders and regulations in the formulation of which they did not share. These regulations were enforced by the police power, without the control and participation of the population. The very essence of medical and sanitary measures, however, is such that they cannot be enforced without the conscious participation of the people themselves. The widest sanitary rule will remain a dead letter unless the people themselves take part in its formulation and in the control of its enforcement. The Soviet Government, realizing this elementary truth, invited the population to participate in the care of its own health. "The health of the toiling people is the concern of the toilers themselves." This watchword became the guiding principle in all the activities of the People's Commissariat of Health.

Extensive Operations

Among the first steps taken were the introduction of certain measures for popular education in hygiene. By 1921 the Commissariat of Public Health had distributed over fifteen million leaflets, a million pamphlets, and eight hundred thousand posters, in addition to books, instructions and scientific publications. In thirteen provincial capitals there were opened large medical museums. Medical exhibits were organized in twenty-six district towns. Seven traveling exhibits on wagons and seventeen exhibits in railroad cars were sent out. Sanitary schools were opened in seventeen provincial capitals. At these institutions permanent lectures and discussions on medicine and sanitation were instituted. To draw the toiling masses into this work sanitation councils, in which the central bodies and trade unions were represented, were established in the central and provincial cities. Not less than half of the membership of the local councils consists of representatives of labor organizations. The councils have discussed the reports of the Commissariat of Public Health, and such questions as the struggle against smallpox, the prevention of the spread of epidemics, sanitary measures in the Red Army, etc.

Thus the discussion of the most important sanitation measures was carried on through the participation of the interested persons, and not under the secrecy of departmental routine, as is the case abroad even now. With the same end in view, a special effort was made to secure the co-operation of representatives of the workers in special fields of endeavor. Thus, for instance, there were organized councils with representatives of labor organizations at the schools, for combating tuberculosis and venereal diseases. The participation of the population in medical and sanitary measures became necessary when the spreading of epidemics to unheard-of proportions, and the special conditions under which they had to be combated made it obvious that the old methods of organizing this campaign were useless.

Not only in the provincial capitals, but almost in all district cities, there were organized so-called labor commissions, and similarly in many villages. Their task was to look after the sanitation of the town or the village, to see that the public hygiene measures were enforced, to keep clean all places of public assemblage, such as railroad depots, prisons, dormitories, schools, etc., and also to safeguard the water supply, bath-houses, laundries, etc. Besides these there were commissions to teach the population cleanliness, and an understanding and respect for the regulations on sanitation. Women workers and physicians were drawn into this work.

A Work for Mothers

In the campaign against venereal diseases the mothers' organizations were relied upon, the Communist youth, and the commissions for the preservation of maternity and babyhood. In all departments of public health work the Union of Medical Sanitary Workers—Vsmediksantrud—took the most active part. A device to interest the people in the work of caring for their health were the special "weeks" devoted to this or that department of sanitation. During these "weeks" the entire population was invited to participate in sanitary and anti-epidemic measures. Thus, for instance, during the spotted-typhus epidemics there were the "clean-up weeks" and the "bath-house week," which were devoted to special sanitation and personal cleanliness. "Water-supply week" was organized to prevent cholera, and during that week it was possible to enforce quickly a series of measures for improving the water supply. Such "weeks" have great educational value. They can be compared to practical exercises in schools. They instill into the population the importance of sanitary measures, and they teach the people that common endeavor is necessary for the preservation of the public health, a thing which in the Western countries has not been recognized at all.

These are the main features of the Soviet medical organization, which enabled the Commissariat of Public Health to come out victoriously from a struggle in which the greatest authorities on all sides predicted nothing but defeat. Life put us through the severest examination and the Soviet authorities passed it brilliantly.

The commissariat itself is divided into separate departments and sections. In each department and section all proposals and measures are subjected to a preliminary discussion at meetings of the workers of the respective department or section. The commissariat debates general questions in a collegium composed of managers of departments and their assistants. Thus all institutions of the Commissariat of Public Health observe the collegiate principle, which holds good with all Government institutions of Soviet Russia. On scientific questions the commissariat hears the opinions of its scientific medical council, composed of representatives of medical scientists elected by the highest scientific and educational institutions of the republic.

In conclusion, we wish to illustrate the results of the work of the commissariat by a few figures bearing on its struggle against epidemics. The number of cases of spotted typhus in February, 1920, was 401,907, in September of the same year it was 16,487, and at the present time [illegible]. During 1919 the entire number of cholera cases was 6000. At the present time this disease has been almost eradicated. The bubonic plague was localized and prevented from spreading from the Urals and the Astrakhan province and Batoum to other parts of Soviet Russia. Likewise the epidemics of typhoid fever, dysentery and smallpox have been halted.

In view of the extraordinary conditions under which this struggle had to be carried on, the results achieved cannot but demonstrate the correctness and the vitality of the principles on which the entire medical work is based.

GOOD UNION OR BAD?

(By George Soule)

On the face of it, the victory of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in the New York market does not look like a victory for revolution. Last fall the union and the manufacturers, operating under the usual impartial machinery which provides for peaceful adjustment of all disputes, began to negotiate about wages, piece work and such matters. After many conferences a settlement seemed in sight when the manufatcurers suddenly issued an ultimatum containing demands which no union could accept—including individual bargaining. The union did not accept them, whereupon the manufacturers refused to negotiate further, broke up the arbitration machinery, locked out their employes and entered upon an attempt to destroy the union. Now, after six months, the few irreconcilables have resigned from the manufacturers' association and the rest have capitulated. What is the result? Does the union march in with red flags and take possession of the factories? Does it throw bombs into the City Hall? No, it simply restores constitutional government in the clothing industry, and proceeds to negotiate at exactly the same point where it left off six months ago. There will be a reasonable settlement, arrived at in view of the facts, about wages, piece work, production standards, and so on.

But Senator Lusk tells us that the Almagamated Clothing Workers of America is a very, very bad union. It is industrial. It is radical. It is revolutionary. The New York manufacturers, when they precipitated the recent struggle, told us the same thing. They did not really care much about lowering wages, increasing profits, and all that sort of thing. They were fighting for a principle. They were protecting Americanism against the encroachment of "sovietism." They even entered a suit for dissolution against the union, asking at the same time for damages of half a million dollars, on the ground that it was a conspiracy to seize their property and destroy their business. In view of the events which led up to the trouble this would seem like an unwarranted assertion. It would seem as if the class of employers were quarreling with the class of employes about the processes and proceeds of industry, and as if the class of employers had said, We insist on our own absolute rule in this matter, and as if the employes had said, We insist on the preservation of an industrial government which gives us a voice. Nevertheless, the manufacturers pointed not to what the union had done, but to what it had said. First of all, they pointed to the preamble of its constitution. This preamble begins with a few general statements.

"The economic organization of labor has been called into existence by the capitalist system of production, under which the division between the ruling class and the ruled class is based upon the ownership of the means of production. The class owning those means is the one that is ruling, the class that possesses nothing but its labor power, which is always on the market as a commodity, is the one that is being ruled.

"A constant and unceasing struggle is being waged between these two classes. In this struggle the economic organization of labor, the union, is a natural weapon of offense and defense in the hands of the working class."

So far one would almost suspect that the action of the employers had been carefully designed to demonstrate to the backsliding members of the union the truth of their preamble. The union had been acting as if the struggle between the two classes were not "constant and unceasing." It has been doing its best to perpetrate a peaceful means of settling disputes. But the employers would have none of that. Labor being "on the market as a commodity," and the supply of that commodity being in excess of the demand, the employers had deliberately renewed the struggle, intrenched as they were in "ownership of the means of production," and resolved as they were to rule. This action led the workers to use their union as a natural weapon of defense. It proves out like a problem in geometry.

The preamble then goes on to point out that, in order to be effective, unions must have a structure corresponding to the structure of industrial organization, that modern industrial methods have largely wiped out demarcations between crafts, and that unions must therefore be organized by industries rather than by crafts. That seems like a reasonable inference. And recent events would also tend to support the following statement: "The same forces that have been making for industrial unionism are likewise making for a closer inter-industrial alliance of the working class." Then comes the paragraph at which the employers raise their hands in horror.

"The industrial and inter-industrial organization, built upon the solid rock of clear knowledge and class consciousness, will put the organized working class in actual control of the system of production, and the working class will then be ready to take prosession of it."

Just what does that paragraph mean? The employers, through their counsel, said it means that the members of the Amalgamated have associated themselves together in a conspiracy, plotting at some time in the future to seize their factories. Justice Bijur of the New York Supreme Court, denying the motion for injunction and dissolution, dismissed the sentence as little more than a verbal flourish.

"I think the phrases quoted are quite innocuous. They express some ideal which it is hoped may at some time be achieved. But even if we do violence to its plain intendment and endeavor to read into the literal words a suggestion that it is hoped that the working class shall be put into actual control and possession of the instrumentalities of production rather than of merely the 'system' of production, as actually expressed, there is still absent any statement or even implication that this is to be accomplished by forcible or other unlawful means."

So far as the legal implications of the matter go, Justice Bijur is undoubtedly right. But we shall not understand the Amalgamated and its activities, or any similar union, unless we go a little deeper. There is a real difference between most of the labor organizations which Senator Lusk would ignorantly denounce and the old-fashioned unions which by contrast he approves. It is a difference perhaps not in kind, but in degree of self-consciousness, in maturity. What is it that kept the clothing workers struggling year after year against seemingly impossible odds until they finally were able to build a great industrial union which raised them out of the sweatshops and introduced some kind of order into the former industrial chaos of their lives? What is it that has made them stand by this union and render it victorious in a bitter struggle such as the one just ended? For surely no union ever went to battle under more unfavorable conditions and came through with so few casualties. For months before the trouble broke out there had been a severe depression in the industry, and at the moment of the breach there were not only thousands of unemployed, but those who had work had eaten up most of their savings. The vigorous open-shop campaign led the employers to make a determined attack. And to the conflict on the industrial field was added a shower of injunctions, arrests, and suits against the union for sums aggregating millions of dollars. The lockout lasted nearly six months, including the coldest weeks of winter. Yet there were no desertions of consequence from the ranks of the strikers; in spite of all, the employers could not operate their factories. The quality of courage and determination that is required among thousands of workers to endure a long and heart-breaking test of this nature implies something more than the kind of emotion which would be aroused by a quarrel over a few dollars more or less a week. It implies a superb morale, the sort of morale which can exist in any army only through the consciousness of a great cause. There must be here one of those imponderables which give life to patriotism or religion.

At the basis of this morale is an aspiration for a more just social order, which can grow only from a more just government of industry. Like the American Colonists of 1776, the clothing workers object to autocratic rule. They recognize the class conflict in their preamble, not because they like it, but because they dislike it and intend to do away with it. They know they can never do away with it by submitting unconditionally. The form of collective adjustment which they have won is like a constitution wrested by a people from a ruling class. To preserve this constitution they are willing to undergo untold sacrifices. As long as they can preserve their constitution, they intend to use it for progressive improvement of the industry which they feel by right is theirs.

It is stupidity of the crudest sort to believe that a deep motive of this sort is destructive and can in the long run injure the people or the culture of America. On the contrary, it leads to trouble only when it is thwarted. Given a chance to grow and function, endowed with recognition and responsibility, it will flower in a higher technique in industry, in a finer spirit in society. It is infinitely more hopeful than the trading instinct, the demand for a few dollars more and a few hours less, to which, according to our Luskers, "good" unions must confine themselves.—The Nation.

UNTANGLE TAX TANGLES

"Teachers are coming to realize that the tax question is one of the most serious of present day problems," says the bulletin of the American Federation of Teachers.

"It is closely related to school problems. Teachers can serve the public in no better way than by familiarizing themselves with the present tax system and its failure to provide adequately for the maintenance of a school system in keeping with our national life. The real sources of wealth are practically untouched. Reforms in taxation must take place. In what direction these reforms are to be made, needs careful consideration. In this let the teachers take their part."

Comment from the Antipodes

Viewpoint of Our Australian Fellow Unionists

The power that gives us the gift to see ourselves as others see us is the Australian labor press.

We'll Say They Know US

A recent issue of the Maoirland Worker contained the following breezy comment regarding the New Zealand Alliance, which is strongly urging the adoption of prohibition on the American plan:

"The N. Z. Alliance has a very peculiar idea of propaganda on behalf of its Cause. In the latest issue of the 'Vanguard' appears a half-page advertisement headed

"LABOR UNREST AT HOME
"PEACE AND PLENTY IN UNITED STATES
"TURBULENT TIMES IN THE BRITISH BEER GARDEN
"U. S. A. WORKERS' SAVINGS NOW HELP THEM

"All of which is, of course, so much twaddle. Unemployment is greater in U. S. A. than in Britain with a greater ruthlessness in exploitation. So far as Labor is concerned, it has nothing to learn from America, and if prohibition means the introduction of American industrial methods in New Zealand, we will be well advised not to touch it with a forty-foot pole."

We heartily agree with the sentiments expressed by our Maoriland comrades in toil. They know how to fight for a free press and speech, and how to keep it.

Their hostility to the introduction of "American" industrial methods reveals commendable perception. However, it is nearly time for some of us to take a lesson from the workers of the Antipodes.

The American Model

The Australian Worker says: "For some time past America has been lauded to the skies by the daily press of Sydney as a glowing example for Australia to keep in mind.

"Particularly do the relations between Capital and Labor in the land of the Pinkerton strikebreakers and Cripple Creek massacres appeal to the finer feelings of these notoriously democratic journals.

"They are filled with admiration of the refusal by the American Federation of Labor, under Samuel Gompers, to endorse the principle of direct action, and the wholesale lynching and deportation of American citizens who cannot see eye to eye with the complaisant Samuel in this regard adds fuel to their fiery enthusiasm.

"To them, the United States is the paradise of the toiler, who spends much of his vast earnings on motor cars and fur coats for his wife and daughters.

"Mr. Gompers, too, has denounced the methods of Lenin and his followers in Russia as bloody and brutal, and has bidden his henchmen to have nothing to do with the Muscovite heresy.

"He is, as a consequence, highly popular in America and Australian capitalistic circles. That other leader of Labor, Eugene Debs, whose opinions are at the other end of the scale, is safely tucked away in jail, and likely to remain there, the which is, no doubt, all for the best, in this best of all possible worlds—for the capitalist.

"But alongside the eulogies of American labor conditions have lately appeared several cables announcing the exposure of a ghastly system of peonage in the Southern State of Georgia.

"Peonage is a delightful institution in some of the American States, whereby people, unable to pay fines or debts, or—what is much more important—to grease the palm of authority, are hired out involuntarily to contractors, to work out the fine or debt.

"Naturally, the contractor, by various means, retains his free labor as long as possible, and discourages attempts to escape with shotguns, bloodhounds and 'blacksnakes,' the latter an extremely effective flogging implement popular in the 'Old South.'

"As the contractor has the feeding of his charges, as well as the disciplining of them, it is not surprising to hear that deaths among the peons are quite frequent.

"Of late years, owing to previous exposures in Alabama, the pleasant custom is mostly practiced on negro offenders.

"It is the irony of fate that Georgia, devastated by Sherman to set the negro free, seems to have turned again to her old-time idols of negro slavery, with the vilest and cruellest accompaniments.

"Yet in the United States the negro is a citizen and a voter. When he has tired of denouncing the bloody and brutal Soviet, Mr. Gompers might turn his attention to the cultured South and its peonage pastimes.

"And our admiring daily press could tell us, at the same time, whether their admiration of the American methods of 'blacksnake' and bludgeon isn't really rooted in an intense desire to get those methods introduced into the Australian 'industrial turmoil'—the employer wielding the 'blacksnake' and bludgeon, of course."

It is, perhaps, well for the tranquility of our Australian comrades that they have overlooked a few trifling (?) incidents which mean nothing in our young lives. There is the black hole of Ludlow; the Bisbee deportations, and the Mooney case which furnished food for reflection. In addition there is the glaring fact that over forty thousand miners in Alabama have been deliberately brought to a stage of starvation by the coal barons, aided by the State government. Thousands of our school children are reported—even by our reluctant Associated Press—as going through school undernourished. Even at this time, corporation thugs, supported by State cossacks and militia, are drawing a ring around the devoted band of miners of Mingo County, West Virginia. The miners' little tent colonies are being subjected to the attacks of ruthless hirelings employed by mine operators, and it is only a matter of time when these aggressions will force them from their homes forever, or subjugate them to the most unscrupulous exploitation.

The seamen of the Antipodes are not yet acquainted with the fact that the United States Shipping Board—which has cost the taxpayers in excess of $3,000,000,000—has recently been used as an instrument for destruction of our marine unions and degradation of our seamen. They are not yet aware of the fact that the pennies which were mulcted from the suffering children of our tenements, in tax upon their cornucopias, has been spent, through the agency of the Shipping Board, for strikebreaking purposes.

The Australian Worker has good reason to view with suspicion the introduction of propaganda for institution of the American plan in that country, and when he realizes what it means, he will understand the necessity to oppose it with all the resources at his command.

The Same Everywhere

According to the Maoriland Worker, "Farm and station workers who had their wages cut as the result of the decline in the prices of agricultural and pastoral produce are not to be isolated in their enjoyment of the benefits of the Treaty of Versailles, which has disorganized the industrial and commercial life of Europe, thrown millions of its populations out of employment, and so destroyed the market for New Zealand wool. The seamen are now to join their happy band. According to the New Zealand Times, 29/4/21, there is now a shipping slump, in consequence of which several coastal steamers are to be laid up. It seems that cargo is neither coming from Britain nor leaving New Zealand, and in the circumstances of capitalist industry the seamen are to pay for this by a period of unemployment, during which, of course, the advantages of lower wages will be seductively placed before them. Glorius result of the war for democracy! When will the wage-earners realize that if they allow their jingo politicians to smash the market for the goods they produce to gain an illusory indemnity they are simply bringing unemployment and wretchedness upon themselves? When?"

We Admire His Judgment

The cables announced the other day that W. D. Haywood, formerly general secretary, I. W. W., and the Western Federation of Miners, who was sentenced to twenty-five years' imprisonment under the Conspiracy Laws of America, was missing from America and was reported to have been seen in Riga, en route to Moscow. Haywood was out on bail to the tune of $25,000 and decided that the "tyranny" of Moscow was preferable to the "freedom" of the United States, so got a move on whilst the going was good.—Maoriland Worker.

OIL IN PHILIPPINES

There has been one thousand tons of oil-drilling machinery and supplies landed on the Bondoc Peninsula in the Philippines recently, and it is expected that oil-drilling operations will soon begin. A special road is being constructed to transfer the machinery to a point three and one-half miles inland, where the petroleum deposits have been located.

SURE CURE FOR PROFITEERS

An English news exchange tells of a severe law against profiteering, recently instituted in Persia. In one case, prices of bread were so high in a southern Persian town that the Governor haled out the chief baker and nailed his ears to a tree in the market square. Prices fell rapidly after that!

Pacific Coast Marine

Extensive repairing on the big liners "Keystone State" and "Wenatchee" will be undertaken at Seattle, Wash., when the vessels arrive from their present voyage. The "Wenatchee" was seriously handicapped on her maiden voyage across the Pacific by the failure of her present condensers to assimilate salt water.

The new liner "Silver State," of the Admiral Line, collided with the schooner "Elizabeth Ruth" when about seventy miles from Havana. The "Silver State" is a new vessel built by the Shipping Board, and is making her initial appearance on the Pacific Coast.

The steamer "Queen," of the Pacific Steamship Company, arrived in San Francisco, in tow of the steam schooner "Johanna Smith." Following accidents to feed pumps and inability of inexperienced engineers to make the necessary repairs, the vessel with 140 passengers aboard was picked up, drifting helpless off the Oregon Coast, 397 miles north of San Francisco.

Bound for Coronation Gulf, far to the eastward in the Arctic, the Canadian motorship "Lady Kindersly," of the Hudson Bay Company, sailed from Seattle recently laden with supplies for the stations of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the trading posts of the company on the northernmost rim of the North American Continent.

The United States authorities in the Northwest are looking with suspicion on the placing of sealing craft in commission, which have laid up in British Columbia waters for a number of years. Many officials are of the opinion that the object of these small craft operators is to smuggle booze into the United States. A thriving bootleg industry can be established in this manner.

The steamer "Admiral Evans," which was picked up disabled off Crescent City, California, by the steamer "Admiral Schley," arrived at Astoria in tow of the tug "Wallula." E. E. Johnson, temporary Portland manager for the Pacific Steamship Company; J. G. Gilmour, port engineer from Seattle, and Captain W. C. McNaught, marine surveyor, inspected the vessel which was the first of the company's intercoastal fleet to leave San Francisco for Portland since the strike.

Fire that was discoverd on the new liner "Buckeye State," while the vessel was off the coast of Maryland en route to San Francisco, is believed to have damaged the craft considerably, and the vessel has put into Baltimore for repairs. Officials of the Matson Navigation Company state that in the event that the damage is such it will delay the craft more than a few days, arrangements have been made to place the steamer "Hawkeye State" on the "Buckeye's" run. The "Hawkeye State" is at present nearing completion in Baltimore for repairs and alterations. There are about 170 passengers on the "Buckeye State" coming out to this port, and a heavy shipment of Eastern cargo for here and Harbor delivery. Both passengers and freight will be taken by the "Hawkeye State" if the change is found to be necessary. The "Buckeye State" sister ship of the "Hawkeye" met on her maiden trip to the Coast when a breakdown caused calls for repairs.

Despotism Sustained

The Kansas Supreme Court has upheld Governor Allen's "can't-strike" law on the theory that the Act "is a valid exercise of the police power of the State" and that it does not violate the Federal Constitution, which prohibits involuntary servitude.

This use of a State's police power indicates the length some Courts will go if special interests were unchallenged in its manufacture of an artificial public opinion.

Health laws, the destruction of diseased food, protection of public morality and all forms of social legislation and regulation are functions of police power of the State.

This power has never been rigidly defined. Courts decline to set its limitations, for the very good reason that it rests on education, experience and the people's welfare.

It is a common-sense fiction that must be supported by a strong, solid, enlightened public opinion before Courts apply it.

In short, the police power of a State legalizes what the public as a whole accept.

The Kansas Supreme Court now declares that the "can't-strike" law can stand this test. The Court necessarily gets into deeper water when it takes this position, and rules that it is not involuntary servitude when workers are jailed if they quit their employment.

It seems incredible that a Supreme Court would say this law is sustained by public opinion, as understood and defined.

This view might be expected from a police magistrate or a village justice of the peace, whose viewpoints are limited to their jurisdictions and to the views of secret political backers.

A State Supreme Court, however, is not supposed to ignore facts.

This Court is blind to the unanimous rejection of "can't-strike" laws by every other Legislature that has been asked to approve same.

It overlooks opposition to the law in its own State, where organized labor, organized farmers and an increasing number of business men refuse to accept the Act.

It takes no notice of hostility of many Kansas legislators and the growing conviction of thinking Kansas citizens that the Act was inspired by big business, and that the numerous increases in rates charged by public utility corporations sustain their suspicion.

The Court failed to balance these facts against the tom tom beating of Allen cohorts, the sophistry of special interests and the shrieks of tis venal press.

The Kansas State Supreme Court has failed to interpret sound public opinion of that State and when the "can't-strike" law is repealed this estimate will be verified.

Labor can hasten this day by greater agitation for human liberty and social justice.

The police power of the State is an educational process that wage earners must assist in developing. This power must never be used against human liberty.

It must not be a defense for slavery.

If this educational process is surrendered to special privilege and its political agents, decisions like the present one will result.

Agitate! Educate! Organize!

Burlesonism Jolted

Postmaster-General Hays has jolted Burlesonism and post office autocracy by this order:

"Postmasters are authorized to grant hearings to employes or representatives of employes who may so desire in connection with the remedying of local conditions in the service which are in the interest of the postal service and the welfare of the employes, and to take such action as may meet with their approval and be within their authority to correct.

"If departmental action is necessary to change practices or policies, or to correct abuses, of if the postmaster is in doubt as to the procedure in the circumstances, prompt report of all the facts should be made to the proper bureau officer with appropriate recommendations.

"No discrimination should be made in favor of any particular individual employe, any particular group of employes, or any particular organization, but all should receive like treatment and consideration."

West Virginia Probe Blocked

A probe of mining conditions in certain sections of West Virginia was postponed by senatorial oratory that made scant attempt to conceal oppositon to the plan.

The resolution was presented by Senator Johnson. West Virginia coal owners profess friendship for the probe, but certain Senators who are not unfriendly to big business suddenly awoke to the need for economy. They also deplored the tendency of "Federal interference."

Senator Johnson insisted that sections of West Virginia maintain a supergovernment in defiance of the Federal Constitution, and that anarchy is along the Tug river, which divides Kentucky and West Virginia. The talk continued until the time for unfinished business when the resolution was laid over.

Out-of-works Increase

Manufacturing operations in New York continued to decline from April to May, reports the New York State Department of Labor. The May decrease in employment for the manufacturing industries as a whole was 2 per cent. During the period from March, 1920, to May, 1921, employment in factories declined 27 per cent. This would indicate that the numbers of factory workers employed in the State in May was at least 400,000 less than in March, 1920. The May number of workers was slightly below that reported in January, 1915, when employment reached its lowest level during the depression of the winter of 1914-1915.

The necessity of industrial organization knows no law except that of human progress.

BENSON'S RESOURCES OPERATE

According to press statements, the C. C. Thomas Post (Navy) of the American Legion, has promulgated resolutions asking that former service men be given preference in the U. S. Army Transport Service, Shipping Board vessels and Government harbor craft.

The resolutions call for the manning of these vessels with crews of which 75 per cent are ex-service men, when such proportion are obtainable.

Care has been taken by the proponents of the resolutions to assert that the action has no reference to the marine strike, but in spite of his fact the strike-breaking nature of this recent action—timely for the shipowners in their lockout of the Marine Unions—is too well evidenced to be covered.

The action taken by the Legion Post is in conformity with, and direct answer to, Admiral Benson's appeal for loyal and Patriotic seamen to man Shipping Board vessels—which means also vessels operated by private shipping interests, inasmuch as the operations are co-related and in most instances interlocked to such extent as to be one.

Admiral Benson has capitalized the patriotic sentiment and spirit for recruiting in Government service as an instrument with which to crush the seamen of the American Merchant Marine.

This situation, being thoroughly understood and well credited throughout all the ports of the seven Seas, it cannot fail but injure and finally destroy the prestige of American seamen abroad, both naval and merchant. The fact that the recruiting service spirit has been exploited even in [illegible] a quasi naval aspect to the operations, and the boys of the Navy have placed upon their reputation a stigma which they do not rightfully deserve. In the many foreign ports to which they will go a reputation as strikebreakers will have preceded them. American seamen will be reputed and despised as scabs in all the ports of Europe, Africa, Central and South America and Australia.

In Australia, New Zealand, Central and South America our reactionary and intolerant tendencies are already regarded with suspicion by the workers, and it is not fair to our naval personnel to place an added stigma upon them.

The Shipping Board, as operated under the present administration and under the dictatorship of Admiral Benson, has not only destroyed the possibility of maintaining an American personnel, but it has brought everlasting discredit upon the reputation of our seamen. The Shipping Board impregnated maritime workers of the whole world with the belief that the quality of American patriotism is strike-breaking; and that to be a strikebreaker is the highest aim and ambition of all who desire to style themselves Americans.

There is no doubt that the history of the Benson dictatorship will be spread throughout every country where seamen travel; because it is not natural that such grievous wrongs as they have suffered will be concealed in the breasts of those upon whom they were exercised.

It would be much more to the credit of the American Legion (Navy Post) if they would discover the source of agitation for the passage of resolutions which tend to reflect upon the manhood of its members. They should note the individuals responsible, their connections and the possible impelling motives for their actions. If they do not take time by the forelock and give the lie to the present belief, that their movement can be exploited by organized greed, to degrade the maritime workers; they are likely to carry down through several decades a reputation as scabs, which a more enlightened working class in the ports of the Seven Seas will fasten upon them.

TIME FOR SELF-APPRAISEMENT

Evidence continues to accumulate which leads to the belief that recent legislation for restriction of immigration into the United States was entirely unnecessary. That the peoples of foreign countries no longer desire to partake of our hospitality (?) is becoming more and more manifest.

The United States, at this present date, has no real friend in any of the European nations. We are cordially hated by the Central and South American Republics, and finally subject to caustic comment from the Antipodes. With the possible exception of China, we, as a nation, have not a friend in the whole world.

There must be very substantial reasons for this situation, and the sooner we recognize and endeavor to remedy the evil the better for our general prosperity and happiness.

Perhaps two of our most glaring faults is the pronounced arrogance of a few new-made money hogs while traveling abroad, and our intolerant attitude towards many strangers within our gates.

Unless we desire to become a people separate and apart from the rest of the world, at least, a limited measure of consideration must be given to the sensibilities of others. We should recognize the fact that they also are human and are possessed with the same feelings and rights as ourselves.

The various brands of so-called Americanism which are each racing and struggling for their own supremacy, coupled with a certain disregard for that which is strictly just and right in our national dealings with weaker peoples, has tended to bring upon us universal dislike. It might be a good plan for us to discover the exact nature of the faults before feeling against us becomes more intense. If it lies with ourselves, we must discover a method of cure, if with others, and they happen to be weaker as a nation, we could easily afford to seek a way to better understanding.

Since our war with Spain we have not sufficiently checked our tendency to swagger. The swash-buckling to which we have been disposed needs to be curbed, because the display of such characteristics is not worthy of Americans, neither does it represent the spirit of true Americanism.

It is unfortunate that our political field has been unable to develop a statesmanship qualified to meet big problems in proper manner. Our politicians seem to be more concerned with pork-barrel issues than capable of meeting the large questions.

In order to enjoy that happiness which is rightfully ours, we must be true to ourselves as Americans in every sense that the term was intended to imply.

Therefore, let us take appraisement of our national characteristics and see if they measure up to what should be the standard.

While the brutal indignities to which the crew of the "Rolph" were subjected are regrettable, it is hard for us to feel a maximum of sympathy for the victims. It is almost beyond belief that in these days of enlightenment a body of men can be found who would tamely submit to the aggressions of such brutes as the mate Hansen. If all seamen had displayed the same quality of spirit as embodied in the crew of the "Rolph," the shipping interests would not at present be concerned in efforts to destroy our unions, because there would not have been any for them to attack.

It must be a cold, clammy fear that will hold men trembling in a forecastle while listening to the cries of the cook and an old carpenter as they are tortured by a human gorilla.

It is hard to understand how sailors, worthy of the name, could permit themselves to become overwhelmed by craven influence. Their failure to go to the protection of the old carpenter, cook, or each other, stamps them as falling short of those qualities which should be embodied in American seamen. They should have met the savage aggressions of the mate and subdued him irrespective of what consequences might follow.

Perusal of the statements, as told by the victims leads to the belief that the non-resistance of the mixed pick-up crew invited further and continued aggressions by the "bucko."

It would have been much better for the world at large and more credit to the crew if the brutal mate had been observed taking off his oilskins in the water instead of the unfortunate young sailor.

Admiral Benson must realize by this time that he undertook a man-sized job when he ventured out to subjugate the organized seamen of the country.

FIGHT U. S. SEDITION BILL

A campaign against efforts to fasten a peacetime sedition law on the country was announced recently by the American Civil Liberties Union in an appeal "to the friends of free speech" to help defeat the Sterling Bill in the United States Senate, where it has just been favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee. A similar bill was passed by the Senate a year ago and defeated in the House. Opponents of the measure believed that the issue was dead. The report bringing the Sterling Bill before the Senate came unexpectedly without hearings or agitation for its passage.

The bill punishes the advocacy in speech or print of the "overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence," forbids the distribution in any manner of matter construed by the Post Office Department to advocate it, and prohibits the display of any flag intended to symbolize it.

The Civil Liberties Union's attorneys assert that every offense at which the bill aims can be effectively reached under present provisions of the Criminal Code, and that the bill in practice would be used chiefly against persons advocating radical ideas in general, and not merely against the advocates of violence specified in the bill. "The history of prosecutions for the use of forbidden language," says the statement of the Civil Liberties Union, "proves conclusively that they can never be confined to the language of the Act. They always reach out to jail any person against whom the forces of prejudice, class-interest or hysteria can successfully be brought."

Other objections to the bill advanced by the Civil Liberties Union are:

First—The bill punishes words merely for their supposed tendency, not for their actual meaning. It leaves to prosecutors, judges and juries the definition of what constitutes the crime. That is properly the function only of Congress.

Second—The bill establishes a censorship of the press in advance of publication, which is a violation of all previous laws on the subject and of the constitutional provision for freedom of the press.

An amendment to the bill has just been introduced by Senator Wm. E. Borah to offset its provisions by punishing any officer of the Government who interferes with any person in the exercise of his civil rights. "In view of the illegal practices of the Department of Justice under Attorney-General Palmer," says the Union's statement, "this amendment ought to assume a lively debate in the Senate."

Albert DeSilver, a director of the Civil Liberties Union, in charge of the campaign against the bill, urges "friends of free speech" to protest to Senate leaders at once, addressing letters especially to Senators Wm. E. Borah, Boies Penrose, Geo. H. Moses and Henry Cabot Lodge. The bill is numbered S. 1375.

President Harding has appointed T. V. O. Conner as a member of the United States Shipping Board. The appointee is president of the International Longshoremen's Association. He was recently appointed a member of the New York State Industrial Commission by Governor Miller, but resigned after serving two weeks.

BENSON'S GOLDEN RULE

Ye seamen of the Yankee ports,
In future you'll abide
By Uncle Sammie's shipowners,
When for you we decide.

That your wages need a trimming,
From upward down, I guess;
You'll meet in a respectful way
The Shipping Board's request.

Your hours they will be lengthened
From eight to twelve a day,
To give you all but little chance
To while your time away.

We will insist, just as before,
To work you overtime,
But payment for such little deeds
We will certainly decline.

You still may sail just for awhile,
But then you must be willing,
For there's lots of coolies to be had
Just now for twenty shillings.

You must not be a Union Man,
For that's not to a liking;
If you don't like the Yankee plan,
You'd better go to hiking.

This is for you the Golden Rule,
As we see fit to make it,
So knuckle to our Shipping Board,
For you have got to take it.

—Fr. Harms.

MINERS SHOW DETERMINATION

The bulldog determination of striking British miners has been further exemplified in their rejection of the latest compromise offer by mine owners. The miners have never taken their vision from their cause. They know what they want and are willing to suffer all the hardships that British capitalists can heap upon them in order to obtain justice. This display of solidarity in the face of desertion by those who should have stood with them shoulder to shoulder, is an inspiration to workers in all parts of the civilized world. Labor everywhere owes a lasting debt of gratitude to the British miners. Their fortitude strikes as a star in the darkness of the present tendency towards industrial or group slavery.

When the history of freedom's struggle is written the heroic character and excellent worth of these devoted toilers will stand prominent in the regard of succeeding generations.

MEMBERS ARE INTERESTED

Due to the fact that the lockout has given many of our members more spare time than is usually their lot, those with literary inclinations are shooting in contributions to the JOURNAL, most of which contain the necessary merit for publication.

This week the JOURNAL office has been buried under an avalanche of correspondence, for which we are truly thankful, inasmuch as it shows that the organized seamen are interested in their JOURNAL.

The members of the Atlantic and Gulf branches have displayed a spirit for progress and solidarity which is exceptionally inspiring.

The Denver Convention of the American Federation has been confronted with the knottiest problems that ever disturbed the labor movement of this country. The leaders find themselves up against a situation which calls for entirely new tactics. Old methods which have worked successfully have been proved incompetent to meet the requirements of the present industrial struggle. We trust the necessary changes in mode of operation will be initiated.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

SEAMEN'S JOURNAL:

The delegate from the Gulf Coast Division of the International Longshoremen's Association to the American Federation of Labor Convention goes instructed to make every effort to bring about a closer working understanding with the International Seamen's Union. The union longshoremen who gave those instructions are not so particular as to methods of bringing about a greater solidarity among shipworkers, just so long as the desire is accomplished. What really concerns them as well as the union seamen is getting results.

The out-of-date method of hog-tying ourselves by contracts, that expire for different crafts at different times, might look a whole lot better to the reactionaries in the labor movement than it does to the longshoremen in this port. It should not look any better to union seamen or any other transport or marine workers. This condition must be changed in the interests of all concerned; if ever there was need of unity and joint action it is right now.

The Galveston longshoremen's delegate is instructed to force this matter on the floor of the convention and compel that body to go on record in its attitude towards greater solidarity as well as its attitude towards the American Merchant Marine. In the light of recent events, the time has arrived when the public, and especially organized labor, are justified in demanding a clear-cut expression or declaration of policy regarding the American Merchant Marine, as favored by the A. F. of L.

We desire to know whether the American Federation of Labor Convention will favor operation of the American Merchant Marine for service in the interests of all the industries of this country, rather than for certain profit, in order to insure said industries an equal chance with those of other nations.

The American Federation of Labor should be put on record as to whether it favors the sale of Shipping Board vessels to private operators. The vessels were built with the people's money and should not operate for private interests. Past experience has proven conclusively that no laws can be enacted that can effectually control such interests.

There has been no method devised that will operate with success to prevent private or corporate owned shipping lines from entering into secret agreements as to passenger or freight rates, labor control or other items of operation, and whether these interests are of national or international character makes no difference. This has been proven so often and conclusively that it is a waste of time to corroborate the statements.

Shipping affairs at this time are in a sad tangle, but could be of great benefit to the country at large if efficiently handled; in general, the situation in just this:

The United States Government, by virtue of its control of a large merchant fleet operated by the Shipping Board, has the power to destroy, in a large measure, the actual value of other shipping with which they may come in competition, without regard to the nationality of the shipping.

By retaining this fleet and operating the same under efficient management, it could work more than any other agency in giving stability to values and keeping the industry on a permanent stable working basis.

The effect which goes with the fleet operation touches all other industries and contributes its part to the prosperity or depression of this country. This is the power that big financial interests are so anxious to separate our Government away from, and to appropriate the same to themselves, with all that goes with it.

If the American Federation of Labor intends to ignore the greatness of this question, or is inclined to favor those interests inimical to the American Merchant Marine—therefore, American seamen—organized labor should be informed. We cannot afford to have that kind of misjudgment carry. If they are opposed we ought to know it, and the convention should go on record and place its policy before the whole country.

If the farmers, millers, manufacturers and merchants, outside of the predatory interests, could be awakened to the realization of the insidious designs of those interests now operating for destruction of our national marine, a great number of peanut-brained politicians in the House and Senate would speedily change their attitude on the Shipping Board question. They would immediately stop the attempt to drive Americans from the sea.

It is impossible to ignore the activities or strength of those interests which are so determined to obtain control of our public owned ships; there is no reason or sense in trying to misunderstand the certain danger lurking in their schemes.

Forty-eight stable Railroad Commissions, supplemented by a Federal or Interstate Commission to regulate rates, recognizes the fact transportation rates and conditions affect the country's industrial life. The records of these commissions are additional proof.

The A. F. of L. convention must decide whether to favor retention of the Shipping Board vessels, with their power for good or evil, in the hands of the Government, or whether they shall be allowed to fall into the hands of predatory operators. The American labor movement should go on record at this time for Government ownership of such a powerful fleet and use every effort to block the international conspirators' crafty game. JAMES MURRAY.

HOW THEY FOOLED THE ADMIRAL

It is alleged that the following conversation took place at a meeting of the Shipowners' representatives with Admiral Benson. While this account may not be accurate in every detail, we have not, up to the present time, heard anything to the contrary:

Scene: A large comfortably furnished room with a long table in the center, at which are seated the representatives of the Shipowners' Association. Admiral Benson is at the head of the table, his clerk on the left and the leader of the shipowners' representatives on the right side of the Admiral.

Admiral B. (smiling benevolently at the shipowners' representatives): Well, gentlemen! You are now acquainted with the terms and conditions proposed by the United State Shipping Board, do you agree to them?

Leader of the Shipowners' Representatives (bluffing): Well, Admiral, the working conditions are rather too good; they are better than the conditions they worked under, say, thirty years ago, as any one who has read "Two Years Before the Mast" can appreciate, and a reduction of 15 per cent in wages is ridiculously small when you consider the recent decline in retail price of sugar, and I am sure owners of private vessels will have great difficulty in making both ends meet if we continue to pay such exorbinant wages; we had hoped for a reduction of at least 50 per cent.

Admiral B. (doubtfully): I really don't know what to say. I have had my clerk study the matter and he assures me that the men will not be able to buy even the bare necessities of life if I reduce them any more than 15 per cent. But you surprise me when you tell me that the price of sugar has declined. Has anything else gone down?

Leader of S. O. Rs.: Oh, yes, sir; several things.

Admiral B.: What things?

Leader of S. O. Rs.: Why, er-er (turning hopefully to other S. O. Representatives) what other things have gone down?

One of S. O. Rs. (quickly): Why, shoe polish, Admiral.

Leader of S. O. Rs.: Yes, of course, shoe polish, Admiral.

Admiral B.'s Clerk: That does not help them much, sir. Why, some of them don't polish their shoes at all.

Admiral B. (surprised): What! Do you mean to tell me that there are human beings in the United States of America who never polish their shoes? Good Lord! What are we coming to? Never mind! What else has gone down?

Another S. O. R.: Paper, sir.

Leader of S. O. Rs.: Yes, indeed, Admiral, paper sells for less than half the price it was during the war. Now, supposing it cost a family $60 a year for paper, to light the fire in the morning during the war, they can now buy the same amount for $30. Why, in ten years they can save $300 on paper alone.

Admiral B. (decisively): Enough! You have convinced me, gentlemen. I shall order a 15 per cent reduction to go into effect at once, and shall consider a further reduction to go into effect after thirty days. Are these terms satisfactory to the private shipowners?

Leader of S. O. Rs.: As I said before, Admiral, it will result in great hardship to the private shipowners to accept terms that provide for the slight reduction of only 15 per cent, but the shipowners were ever loyal to their country and their flag in the hour of need, and recognizing the great national crisis in which we are about to be drawn, the Shipowners' Association loyally accepts the terms and conditions laid down by the United States Shipping Board, even though it means the sacrifice, for a period, of some of our profits.

Admiral B. (grasping Leader's hand, and trembling with emotion while tears roll down his cheeks): Thank you, sir. Such loyalty as you have shown I never believed existed. It touches my heart. The country can never repay you.

Leader of S. O. Rs. (anxiously): You will not forget, Admiral, your promise of a further 15 per cent reduction within thirty days?

Admiral B. (still speaking with emotion): As if I could forget a promise to you. Indeed I will not (pulling himself together). Well, all that remains to be done is to order the unions to get back to work under the new terms and conditions.

Leader of S. O. Rs.: I am afraid the unions will not agree to them; they are very stubborn.

Admiral B. (surprised): But I shall order them to agree.

One of the S. O. Rs. (alarmed): But we don't want them to agree; we want to abolish the u———

Another S. O. R. (pulling him aside): Sh,— you fool, there's no need to tell him that.

Leader of S. O. Rs. (to Admiral B.: I am afraid they will not obey your order.

Admiral B.: Nonsense! I am an Admiral; I will have them courtmartialed. The idea! I have been in the Navy all my life. I have never given an order that was not obeyed instantly. I'll put em in the brig over the side, bobtail them, eh?

Leader of S. O. Rs. (wishing to spare the Admiral's feelings): They will pretend not to hear you.

Admiral B. (angrily): I will make them hear me. I will fire a gun to attract their attention. Ho, there, gunner ahoy! (Gunner enters.) Fire the loudest twelve-inch gun you have, first two guns, fire a dozen, make a lot of noise (gunner salutes and leaves at the double). I'll teach them to pretend not to hear me. I'll have them strapped over a cannon and flogged with a cat-o'-nine tails.

(Sound of guns firing is heard, followed by the shouting of an approaching crowd which stops under the windows and gives three cheers for Admiral B.)

Admiral B (flattered): Ah! it is the sailors. I am sorry I was so severe with them, but discipline is discipline. (To clerk) Go out and see what they have to say (clerk leaves). You see, gentlemen, what it is to be an Admiral. They have come to say they are sorry they did not obey me at once, and that they will agree to the new terms immediately (enter clerk).

Clerk to Admiral B: It is the sailors, sir!

Admiral B: Yes, yes. What do they say?

Clerk (hesitating): They heard the guns, sir,——

Admiral B. (impatiently): Yes, go on, go on!

Clerk (desperately): They came to cheer you, sir, because they thought you had agreed to give them the former pay and conditions and were saluting them with cannons.

Admiral B.: God! (falls down in a faint.)

Shipowners' representatives leave highly satisfied, and,——

DIET FOR WORKERS ONLY

The delectable qualities of French dishes has received world-wide renown, but there are some articles of food which might be appetizing in France that do not appeal to the taste of American palates. For example, a special correspondent of the "London Daily Express" states that:

"Ashley, a little hamlet of scattered cottages, well away from the motor highways, is the place where horses that have fulfilled their span of good service, are killed, cut and dressed ready for the tables of the Paris work people. Any sort of horse with 'beef' on it is taken there.

"The business is extensive. A Boulogne firm, with meat shops in that town and in Paris, are responsible for it. More than a hundred horses a month are slaughtered and shipped across the Channel. The French people use the yards and stables of F. C. Spain, a licensed horse slaughterer, who holds the certificate of the Board of Agriculture and Dover for the traffic.

"Horses are brought from all parts of the country to Ashley to be killed.

"Nothing but the 'humane killer'—as painless and quick as any form of death—is used. A Dover veterinary surgeon inspects the live horses and dead meat, and signs a certificate, attached to each carcass, that it is fit for human food.

"The prices paid by the French company for the animals vary from $52.50 to $95 a head, the average being about $65. Each carcass is specially treated. It is 'blown up' by an air pump. This has the effect, it is said, of giving the flesh a good appearance for the retail trade. The meat is then packed in crates and sent by motor lorry to Folkstone for shipment to Boulogne.

"'Our business,' said Spain, 'is carried out on the best possible lines. The French firm rent by premises by paying me a certain sum for each horse killed. I also buy horses for them, mainly working the markets in the Kent district. They have, in addition, another purchasing agent who goes farther afield. The horses are all worn out, old, or in some way unfit for work.'"

It will be noted that the antiquated horse meat is "for the tables of the Paris work people" only, the leisure or parisite class regale themselves on much choicer viands. However, inasmuch as the workers of France are inclined to submit to any form of degradation by their masters since their glorious (?) victory, what could be more appropriate than that worn-out horses should be fed to the long-suffering and much abused working classes?

There is still time to introduce this article of diet to the workers ashore in the good old U. S. A. Seamen have been fed up on it in salted condition for a century.

AUSTRALIAN MANNING REGULATIONS

A Commonwealth "Gazette," issued recently, contained regulations for the manning of vessels engaged in the coastal trade and for the accommodation of crews, which will come into operation under the provision of the Navigation Act on July 1 next.

The number and description of persons to be carried as crew by any ship subject to the provisions of the Act may be specified. In cases where the conditions of employment are, at the date of the commencement of the Act, governed by arbitration awards, the number of crew shall continue the same for six months after July 1, or until a variation has been directed by the Minister.

Applications for variation of the regulations will be received by the Director of Navigation within fourteen days after the date of the notification, and will be referred to the Marine Council for consideration and recommendation to the Minister.

Stringent Regulations

Bunks provided for seamen and apprentices on all ships registered must be constructed of metal throughout, and be as far as possible vermin-proof. Hot fresh water must be supplied to the crew for washing, and the bathroom must be equipped with a salt-water shower in the proportion of one shower for every twenty men. Application for a permit for an unlicensed British ship to engage in the coastal trade may be made, and renewals of licenses may be granted from time to time for a period of one year.

Before a ship licensed to engage in the coastal trade is granted a clearance for any port outside the Commonwealth, the master will be required to produce a statement showing the period during which the ship has been engaged in the coastal trade, together with an acknowledgment by the officers and crew that the Australian rate of wages has been paid to them during that period.

SHERIFF IS ADVISED

Raleigh, N. C., June 18.—In reply to the demand for troops, Governor Morrison notified an excited sheriff to have a lawyer inform him of his duty and his power.

Textile workers throughout the State are striking against wage reductions, and Sheriff Cockran, of Mecklenburg County, wired the Governor that he could not maintain peace. In reply the Governor said:

"It is your duty to have sufficient deputies to discharge the duties of your office, and you can summon for temporary service any citizen of your county, and force him, in the event of threatened riot, to serve. I advise that you consult an able lawyer at once and fully acquaint yourself with your duty and the power given you by law to discharge it.

"I will not hesitate to use the adjutant-general's military force to aid in preserving the peace and protecting the legal rights of the citizens of any county, but it has too often occurred in the past in this State that the local authorities, in vacillation and weakness, failed to perform their clear duty, and thereby made necessary the use of State troops."

CONVENTION LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

What about the railroads?

What about Ireland's independence?

What about Russia?

What about American bullying of Mexico?

What about the open-shop drive?

These are five questions in the mind of every delegate arriving for the forty-first annual convention of the American Federation of Labor.

There will be resolutions in plenty, touching upon all of these things, just as there will be resolutions upon all of the score of jurisdictional disputes in which the individual delegates are interested. But the first word on each important topic is looked for in the report of the executive council of the Federation, presented to the convention on the opening day.

This report, approved at the recent Cincinnati meeting of the council, gives no comfort to the railroad labor organizations affiliated with the Railway Employes' Department of the A. F. of L., because it does not support the Montreal resolution, which instructed the executive council to "use every effort to have . . . legislation enacted providing for Government ownership and democratic operation of the railroad systems and necessary inland waterways."

While the report declares in its opening sentence that the council has "earnestly sought to find means of giving effect to the terms of this declaration" of the Montreal convention, it does not mention Government ownership and democratic operation, and it makes no pretense of having drafted, endorsed or demanded, during the past twelve months, any legislation of the sort. On the contrary, it says that "Organized labor is open to the consideration of all serious proposals" for settling the railroad problem.

Injurious Injections

On the issue of Ireland's independence, and of support for the Irish struggle through the American labor movement, the report contains not a word at any point, so far as discoverable from the index or from a hasty reading.

This neglect of the Irish cause, in view of the warm endorsements voted at Atlantic City in 1919 and at Montreal in 1920, has aroused much feeling. Argument is offered that the council probably feels that the Irish war is a matter likely to antagonize large elements within the Federation; but this is met by the answer that the council is without authority to overrule the policy repeatedly laid down by the conventions of the movement.

There is an unfortunate intermingling of the Mexican and the Irish issues, in that some of the most vigorous journalistic support of Ireland's independence comes from men who are shouting for a war of conquest against Mexico. The Irishmen in this convention will have to meet that fact by making it clear that the Irish cause is not the private possession of any editor or politician, and that as a matter of fact the American labor movement got behind President De Valera and the Irish Republic long before the newspapers did. As to Mexico, the friends of Ireland are just as eager to safeguard the independence and integrity of Mexico as are the men who look upon Ireland as a British possession.

Must Protect Mexican Labor

This convention will adopt resolutions upholding the right of Mexico to maintain her constitution regardless of the greed of Wall Street oil speculators and mining investors. It will appeal for a policy of good-will toward Mexico on the part of the Harding administration, and it will point out to the American public the sinister influence in the Harding regime of the special interests that have for years been striving to reduce Mexico to a state of political anarchy through counter-revolution, foreign intervention and the overthrow of the power of the Mexican wage-workers and agricultural producers.

Russia Needs Assistance

On the subject of Russia—inexhaustible and always changing in its reflections through the prejudices of press and diplomats and refugee landlords—the council is eloquent and wordy. Thirteen pages of small type are consumed in an effort to prove that the Russian people are suffering from slavery at the hands of a small group of working-class dictators, and that the Socialist Party in America is aiding and encouraging this tyranny. The usual document from the State Department, followed by the familiar series of quotations from alleged statements by Communist leaders, reaches the expected conclusion—the assurance that when the Russian people make "freedom, justice, democracy and humanitarianism the guiding principles of their every day lives"—American labor will welcome them to friendship.

The report deals with many other subjects of general interest to the movement. For example, directly following the Russian discussion, there is this paragraph:

"Organizing Campaign, Iron and Steel Workers.

"We have been helpful to the fullest extent of our power in the reorganization of the campaign for the organization of the iron and steel workers. The chairman and secretary of the former special committee resigned. Several conferences were held between the representatives of the various national and international unions having members employed in the iron and steel industry. A new committee was finally organized. The funds remaining in the hands of the former committee were turned over to the new committee. That committee is now functioning and in full co-operation with the officials of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers."

Workers Have the Power

On disarmament the council is definite in its conclusion that "The working people, the masses of the world population, can end wars if they but have the independence to think and to give their convictions reality by daring to do.

"For this and many other obvious reasons we recommend to this convention to call upon the Government of the United States to take the initiative or to co-operate with any other nation or nations for the purpose of a general agreement for disarmament both of the army and naval affairs of the world, and that it shall be the duty of the executive council to call upon the workers and the people to aid in every way within their power and to have translated into action the sentiments as in this report recommended."

In other words, the council favors general disarmament.

Government Ownership an Issue

While predictions as to the course of the majority in any convention so large as this are made at great risk of error, it is fairly safe to assume that the railroadmen's delegations will insist upon a quite different statement upon the railroad issue than the one made by the executive council. It is almost equally certain that the council will accept, rather than fight through a roll-call, a resolution on Government ownership and democratic operation which will be even stronger than that of last year. Moreover, the convention may take steps to enforce upon the council the carrying out in good faith of the instruction.

Ireland's cause is in good hands. Probably five-sixths of the delegates stand ready to sign resolutions which will notify every son and daughter of Ireland that American labor is with them in their struggle for freedom. Debate upon this part of the program is bound to develop thrills, and probably engender some personal dispute which the prevailing calm temper of the gathering will hold within bounds.

Interest in the case of the iron and steel workers is at a low ebb, due to the heavy cost of the defeated strike of 1919, and due also to the depression in the trade. For the same reason some of the jurisdictional quarrels which in prosperous times might have led to oratorical duels on the floor will be smoothed out in conference. This is a time when resources must be hush-handed, waiting the turn of the economic tide.

Cause That Needs Support

Senator La Follette's resolution of inquiry by the Senate into the cause of the locking out of the seamen and the marine engineers by the shipowners and the Shipping Board was welcomed by the delegates here. It is fully understood by the responsible officials of American labor that back of the Shipping Board in this affair is the Morgan influence, which has operated against the coal miners in West Virginia and Alabama, and for the destruction of the unions in the railroad shops and in a score of manufacturing industries in the East and the Middle West.

Action on the merchant marine lockout will probably be taken by this convention upon lines to be suggested by Andrew Furuseth.

BUCKING THE JAZZ

The acme of intolerance has not as yet been reached in this country. Those who enjoyed delights of the Texas Tommy, Bunny-hug, Shimmie, Toddle or any other favorite, danced to jazzy music, must forego their pleasure if they desire to continue to be "100 per cent."

J. Louis Guyon, a dancing master of Chicago, Ill., has condemned jazz as "Bolshevist music," and our modern dances to which it is attuned, "dances of savagery." Hundred per centers can be expected hereafter to mob the orchestra of any public place of amusement where this unpatriotic (?) music is dispensed.

Always demand the Union Label!

DISHONORABLE METHODS

Substantial proof is constantly furnished which elucidates the significance of Admiral Benson's declaration that "the Shipping Board will continue to use all the resources at its command" in dealing with the present lockout.

Flagrant violations—by operators of Shipping Board vessels—of U. S. Statutes for regulation of ocean home commerce, have been ignored, and a number of minor Government officials have been permitted to engage in the most criminal and lawless acts, where these operations conformed to the policy of destroying the marine unions.

A number of astounding facts were recently brought to light at Portland, Oregon, during a hearing before Federal Judge Wolverton, for a decree vacating the temporary restraining order now in effect at that port against the locked out mariners.

One of the Portland papers, in giving details of the hearing, stated:

"Allegations that officials of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation hired detectives, thugs, agents, friends and strikebreakers to set upon and beat striking seamen and picketers for the seamen's unions, assaulted them with dangerous weapons and in one case shot at and stabbed union men, were made by W. S. U'Ren, attorney for the seamen's unions, in his arguments before Federal Judge Wolverton for a decree vacating the temporary restraining order now in effect against the strikers.

"'These sailors may not have been perfect gentlemen at all times,' declared U'Ren, 'but they have been Chesterfields as compared to W. R. Byron, head of the Department of Justice, and J. P. Byrne, port superintendent for the Columbia-Pacific, who, as agents of the Government, were bulldozing in their treatment of members of the unions. These men did not go where the strikers could be found, but instead they went to the homes of the strikers and terrified women and threatened arrest if the men would not return to their ships.'

Affidavits Read

"U'Ren read a large number of affidavits, presented by both the Government and the unions, to argue his case. One of the affidavits, sworn to by R. W. Turpin, a licensed engineer and member of the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, charged F. F. Smith, port superintendent of the Shipping Board, with offering a job on the steamer 'West Nivaria' as chief engineer that would net large returns through the sale of liquor.

"In the affidavit, Turpin said that on May 22, Harold C. Jones, chief of the Sea Service Bureau, arranged for a meeting between Smith and Turpin at Turpin's home.

Tells of Offer

"'Smith wanted me to take a position as chief engineer on the 'West Nivaria,' the affidavit said. 'I answered that I had papers of only three thousand tons, but he said it didn't matter. You can quit work in a year. I have got eighty-five cases off the 'Bearport' in the after peak tank. You know, Dick, you never use the ballast pumps. Pull the pistons out and fill them full and put the heads back and they will never find it. I can handle it; you can get it for $18 and I can get $130 a case. I've got a way of getting it off. We'll go fifty-fifty. You can have the job as long as you want it.'

"Turpin said that he refused to accept the job during the strike.

"'That's a fine way for an officer of the Shipping Board, who represents himself to be an agent of the Government, to act,' declared U'Ren.

"'In my arguments, I am speaking of the Shipping Board as a corporation, not as an agent of the Government,' said U'Ren. 'I expect private employers to do anything they can to break strikes. I expect them to assault and batter and drive out the strikers and picketers, but I do not expect the United States to resort to such tactics.

"'They deny our right of collective bargaining. They say, 'Here are your wages, take it or leave it.'

Assertion Denied

"U'Ren denied that a large proportion of the seamen's unions are aliens. He said that a man must have declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States before he can become a member of the organization.

"Affidavits of George T. Goodell, Sr., George Goodell, Jr., A. La Brance, R. W. Turpin, Lulu May Turpin, Barney Dionne and George Brawn were presented. Each declared that Byron threatened them with arrest and the loss of their licenses as engineers if they did not return to their ships at the reduced wages.

"U'Ren declared that of all the affidavits of men who were attacked and beaten by alleged members of the striking unions or picketers, none were able to prove that the attacks had been made by union men.

"'There is no evidence that this work was done by any members of the defendant associations,' said the attorney. 'If these things were true, they should have prosecuted some one. Why not use the machinery of the State to prevent these violations?'

"U'Ren declared that mail was placed aboard the 'West Nivaria' for the preparation of the Government's suit against the unions.

Mail Used as Club

"'They would use the mails as a club to break this strike,' he said.

"He then read the affidavit of A. S. Rand, chief clerk of the Railway Mail Service in this district, which said that first-class mail was placed aboard the vessel and that this fact was known to the striking seamen. U'Ren held that inasmuch as the 'West Nivaria' was scheduled to sail about the time the strike began, the placing of the mail aboard was proof enough to show that it had been done intentionally."

It is sufficiently of evil when private operators wilfully violate the law, but when such violations are aided and abetted by Government officials or quasi Government agencies, supported by bureaus which are purposed to maintain "law and order," the viciousness of attacks launched against the marine unions are beyond all semblance of justice or decency.

If the facts pertaining to this situation were possible of revelation to the American public they would arise in righteous indignation at the abuse of authority by unfaithful public servants.

Labor News

The building trades unions of Alameda county, Calif., are on strike against the open shop.

At San Francisco the fur workers have defeated the employers' efforts to re-establish the forty-eight-hour week.

The wages of bricklayers and plasterers at New Haven, Conn., have been raised from 95 cents to $1 per hour.

Union painters of Tacoma, Wash., have signed a union shop agreement with the Master Painters' Association of that city. Rates will be $7.20 per day of eight hours.

In his opening address to the annual convention of the A. F. of L., President Gompers urged a closer alliance between organized wage-earners and farmers.

Trade unionists at New Orleans, La., are vigorously protesting the despotic "work or jail" edict by Superintendent of Police Molony. This order, which violates all constitutional rights, is aimed at the locked out seamen in the port.

Union job printers in the largest establishment of Reading, Pa., have returned to work under a compromise agreement. They will work a forty-four-hour week instead of forty-eight and accept a reduction in wages from $38 to $35 per week.

At Fresno, Calif., the Culinary Workers' Union has renewed its agreement with hotel and restaurant men. Chief cooks will be paid $7.50 a day; other cooks, $5.50; counter waiters and waitresses, $4, with overtime $1 an hour. A rate of $3 a day will be paid pantry employes.

Officials of the State of California have been accused of criminal conspiracy against Thomas Mooney in an address before the A. F. of L. convention at Denver. John Mooney made an eloquent appeal for continued efforts by labor to right this glaring travesty on justice.

In accordance with previous declaration, the building contractors of San Francisco initiated their efforts to establish the open shop. Several employers who were able to obtain material are operaitng under union conditions, and with these few exceptions building generally is tied up throughout the city.

It is stated that the steel trust is operating on a basis of 25 per cent of its production, and that independent mills have fallen below 20 per cent. This statement must be of interest to unorganized steel workers, who were told that their recent 20 per cent wage reduction would re-establish prosperity.

Organized railroad shop employes won their fight for negotiation of agreements with the railroads by system federations in a decision handed down by the United States Railroad Labor Board. Several railroads have refused to negotiate with these federations and insist that each craft union be dealt with separately.

Timber workers throughout the Northwest are conducting a vigorous organizing campaign despite handicaps in the form of a company "union." The company "union," known as the Loyal Legion of Loggers and Lumbermen, is being discredited among timber workers, although the bosses are making frantic efforts to keep this wage-reduction aid alive.

World's Workers

Late consular advices state that there has been little or no change in the French standard of living due to the war. Certain industries which paid higher wages to workers are readjusting downward. The farmer is incontestably better off and shortage of farm labor is causing increase in the use of machinery.

After practicing every device and using all means—even to the extent of placing their vessels under German registry—the shipowners of Sweden were finally compelled to negotiate with the Marine Engineers' Association and to settle, upon terms substantially identical with those originally demanded by the engineers. The original demands provided several wage advances, which were granted by the owners when the futility of resistance was realized. The lesson, however, seems to have had no effect, inasmuch as the Swedish shipowners are drifting into another tangle by an attack upon their sailors and firemen.

So many so-called investigators returning to the United States from Russia have violated the confidence of Bolshevik leaders, and have hired out to certain interests—which have vowed to stifle enlightenment—for the purpose of defaming Soviet rule, that the Bolshevik Government has been compelled to adopt protective measures. This has resulted in operating against possible friends as well as cunning enemies.

W. H. Johnston of the International Machinists has been made a victim of this new rule, but all intelligent workers realize that the actions of the Soviet Government were altogether necessary as a measure of defense against insidious opposition.

Gunnar Knutsen, chairman of the Sborthing, declared the attempts to cut seamen's wages unjust and unwarranted by present conditions, and the Storthing appropriated the sum of 2,000,000 kr. for the seamen of Norway (who were practically all strikers), in recognition for their services to the country during the war.

The 2,000,000 kr. appropriation was provided for from excess profits on coal.

When the general strike in support of the seamen's unions was called in Norway, May 26, incipient riots in Christiania prevented the conservative press from going out on the streets. The "Tidens Tien" (conservative daily) and "Morgen Post" (Government organ) were suspended. The Social Demokrat and Syndicalist Press printed extra editions.

During the strike the seaports were completely tied up. In Christiania customs officials and other Government workers were kept out of the strike zones on the waterfront by the seamen's pickets. At Hammerfest and other ports of some importance all persons, Government officials included, were compelled to carry regular passes supplied by the strike committee in order to pass through the picket lines to the docks. The thorough organization and determination of the workers warned the Government against taking sides with employing interests, with the result that the strike was brought to a successful conclusion on June 10, 1921, after operating over two weeks. Government arbitrators are adjusting minor details which remain at issue.

Domestic and Naval

Company thugs continue murdering the union miners of Mingo County. Last week several more miners were made the victims of capitalistic despotism in West Virginia.

The "West Kedron" recently reported sighting wreckage, which appeared to be the side of a wooden ship, floating off the Oregon coast. No further information has been obtained to date.

Captain Cyrus W. Cole, naval recruiting inspector for the Twelfth Naval District, will command the receiving ship at San Francisco, vice Commander M. J. Simmons, who will join the fleet.

A Senate amendment to the naval appropriation bill provides for $1,000,000 toward the construction of a naval hospital at San Diego, Calif. The cost of the hospital is not to exceed $1,975,000.

All steamers which have departed foreign ports prior to June 4 and due at American ports will not come under the scope of the new immigration law, which permits only a certain percentage of aliens per month.

Recently General Pershing told National Guard officers and men at Camp Edwards that the illiteracy of the young manhood of the country was a disgrace and he hoped the nation would never again have to pass through such an experience with untrained minds and bodies as it did in the last war.

The trial trip of the twelve thousand ton tanker "Swiftwind" was the last on the program of the shipbuilding started at Portland, Ore., when the United States entered the war. The vessel is one of the seven tankers built for the Swiftson Oil Transport Company by the Northwest Bridge and Iron Company.

By a vote of twenty-five to six the Connecticut State Senate defeated a "can't-strike" bill that had been approved by the House. Senators declared that the Act would foment strikes and that it was an attempt to coerce labor. One Senator frankly stated that its passage would be bad politics and would imperil his party's success at the next election.

The steamer "Pere Marquette," which has been lying at a depth of six hundred feet on the bottom of Lake Michigan since 1910, is to be raised by the Cowles Marine Salvage and Manufacturing Company in the near future. John T. Cowles, president of the company, is the inventor of [illegible] for raising sunken vessels and these will be employed in salvaging the "Pere Marquette."

Lieutenant Pollock of the United States [illegible] evolved a plan whereby destroyers docked in the dry dock of the Los Angeles shipyard [illegible], were cleaned and given two coats of paint, and returned to the water within a space of [illegible]. The second boat made ready was the destroyer "Farquhar." She was docked at 10 P. M. on the following day, in position around the destroyer, scraped, cleaned and given her coats of paint before being raised. As she dried, the first paint coat was applied to the entire hull, a new water line cut in, draft marks repainted, then a second coat of paint applied, and at 4 P. M. she [illegible] was afloat.

News from Abroad

Strong earthquake shocks have been felt at Messina, Reggio and Calabria, Italy, according to a Havas dispatch, dated June 20.

Reports from Manchester, England, state that the cotton workers' strike has been settled by compromise between operators and the United Textile workers.

The attitude of Great Britain with regard to the conflict between the Greeks and the Turkish nationalists will be one of strict neutrality, according to Austen Chamberlain, Government leader in the House of Commons.

As a result of the coal strike London air is now remarkably clear, according to Dr. J. S. Owens, the city smoke recorder. "In fact," he said "our instruments have not been able to detect air impurities lately and we have had to make them finer."

The Rome Tribuna says it understands the Government is taking steps to check another expedition to take over the government of Fiume, which it is alleged Lieutenant-Commander Luigi Rezzo, former commander of D'Annunzio's naval forces, intended to head.

Announcement was recently made in the British House of Commons to the effect that an official delegation was shortly to be sent to Russia, opening complete trade relations.

The newest and biggest French liner, "La Paris," left Havre, June 17, for her maiden trip to New York, with sufficient cheers, music and waving of flags, and also such a distinguished passenger list aboard as to mark one more definite step in the new era of peace and a distinct reason toward conditions of the "good old days before the war."

Thousands of unemployed workmen entered the Labor Union Assembly at Berlin, on June 20, and demanded that all employed workmen give up their jobs to the idle. The president of the Assembly was badly beaten with blackjacks and left bleeding on the floor. The fight spread until five thousand persons were embroiled, using fists, chairs and sticks. Repeated alarms brought several hundred police, who cleared the building after the uproar had continued two hours. The injured president was taken to a restaurant, the doors of which were locked. The demonstrators, however, attacked this building, broke in the doors and windows and demolished the furniture. The president was taken out by the back way.

Honors such as are usually accorded to royalty or to officials of high rank were given the Dutch steamer "Alexander Polden" when she arrived at Petrograd recently, says the newspaper Izvestia of Moscow. The steamer brought the first large cargo of food that has entered the harbor for about three years, and as she passed Kronstadt she was saluted by the battleship "Marat," while Russian sailors lined the decks and cheered. With years of starvation behind them, dock workers, by day and night shifts, unloaded 5350 barrels of the ship's cargo of herring so swiftly that the next day twenty carloads of herring were dispatched to Moscow, while the rest was left for distribution in Petrograd. Since the "Alexander Polden" made port two more steamers have arrived at Petrograd, carrying seventeen thousand barrels of herring, which were quickly unloaded.

With the Wits

"Is she very pretty?"

"Pretty! Say! When she gets on a street car the advertising is a total loss."—Boston Transcript.

A very dependable and useful porter was an old colored man who exclaimed: "Carry yo' bag, boss? Never bust a bottle yet."—Ex.

Minister—Would you care to join us in the new missionary movement?

Miss Ala Mode—I'm crazy to try it. Is it anything like the fox trot?—Chapparral.

Reginald was trembling, but he knew the music must be faced.

"Shall I ask your father for his consent tonight, darling?" he inquired.

"You had better," spoke up the small brother, unexpectedly from behind the sofa. "Pa's in his stocking feet."—American Legion Weekly.

Bessie had a new dime to invest in ice cream soda.

"Why don't you give your dime to the missions?" said the minister who was calling.

"I thought about that," said Bessie, "but I think I'll buy the ice cream and let the druggist give it to the missions."—Christian Herald.

A lusty lunged auctioneer was holding forth in the market place of a small town. Taking up a box of cigars, he shouted:

"You can't get better, gentlemen. I don't care where you go, you can't get better."

"No," replied a cynical voice from the crowd, "you can't. I smoked one last week and I'm not better yet."

"Do you know how high the tide is in the Bay of Fundy?" asked the superintendent of a street railway company.

"No, sir," said the applicant for a job. "I never heard of the Bay of Fundy."

"I can't employ you, then. You would never make a competent motorman." — Birmingham Age-Herald.

A little girl heard her father call the maid "a darling little angel."

"Mamma," she asked a little later, "what's an angel?"

"An angel," explained the mother, "is something that flies, and—"

"Well," interrupted the little girl, "papa called Julia a darling little angel just now. Will she fly?"

"She certainly will," replied the mother, "the first thing in the morning."—Examiner

A man from the North was driving in Florida when an alligator slid across the road in front of him.

"Sam, what was that?" he asked the negro driver.

"That's an alligator, boss."

A little further along as they were turning a bayou, the man saw something out in the water making a great fuss, splashing and splashing.

"Sam, what is that?" he asked again.

"Another alligator, boss."

"Why, Sam, is an alligator an amphibious animal?"

"What's that, suh?"

"I say, is the alligator an amphibious animal?"

"Yaas, sah, he'll eat a white man just the same as a nigger."

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

VICTIMS OF GREED

Marine Workers Pay in Full the Price for Freedom

The funeral of our late comrade, Axtel Herman Ohman, was held in Port Arthur, Texas, May 30, 1921.

Ohman was murdered by one of the employers' hirelings May 28, 1921, and his brother members of the Atlantic and Gulf Sailors' Association honored their dead with public ceremony.

With belief in their own security, and with their own conception of law and order, the shipowners are taking ruthless toll of the seamen in their struggle.

Members of the Marine Unions were murdered and imprisoned in many other ports of the Atlantic and Pacific.

The lists are not yet complete, therefore the record for Comrade Ohman is incidental to our feeling of sympathy and respect for all.

LAKE'S DISTRICT ACTIVE

Realizing the importance of the Seamen's Act as a protection to passengers on vessels of the Great Lakes, as well as ocean liners, organized labor of Illinois has adopted strong resolutions of protest against the Scott Bill (H. R. 3716).

In addition to the resolutions passed by the Chicago Federation of Labor, Victor A. Olander drafted the following letter, containing enlightening information, which was placed in the hands of prominent and public-spirited citizens of Illinois.

"An attempt is being made in Congress to pass a bill which, if enacted into law, will legalize the extremely dangerous conditions which existed on excursion steamers and other vessels prior to and at the time of the Eastland disaster.

"The Seamen's Act, which went into effect about three months after the disaster, compelled excursion steamers operating more than three miles from shore to practically double the amount of life boat and life raft equipment they carried, and this had the effect of reducing their passenger-carrying capacity by approximately one-half. The new law also compelled them to carry a larger number of skilled seamen in the deck crew, that is to say, able seamen who could prove definite experience which entitled them to that rating.

"The bill now pending in Congress to restore the old dangerous conditions of overloading and undermanning is known as the Scott Bill (R. H. 3716), and is at present being considered by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of the House of Representatives. Hearings were held a few weeks ago, at which there appeared in support of the measure, delegates from a number of business organizations in Detroit, Michigan, and representatives of ship owners from Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and Buffalo. They are making a very vigorous effort to secure its passage. The bill provides, by the insertion of a clause that 'certified life-boat men' may be employed in lieu of able seamen, that no able seamen need be carried on any vessels on the Great Lakes. The so-called 'certified life-boat men' are bell boys, waiters, cooks, stokers, etc., who obtain the so-called life-boat certificates by pulling an oar in a small boat for two or three minutes in the Chicago river or some other sheltered spot. Provision for these men was put into the Seamen's Act by the forces that attempted to prevent the passage of that Act, and were used as an excuse to cut down the number of able seamen provided for by that law. They are now being used as an excuse to totally abolish the requirement for experienced men in the deck crew. The bill would also abolish the eight-hour day which now prevails for the men engaged in the hot fire holes and engine-rooms, and on a very large number of vessels would restore the old twelve-hour day and eighty-four hour week. Not content with this, however, ship owners have proposed in this same measure that excursion vessels operating within ten miles off shore may operate with life-boat and life-raft equipment for only 25 per cent of the passengers. The present requirements compel them to carry life boats and life rafts sufficient to accommodate 50 per cent of the passengers. Surely, present conditions are bad enough. To understand what this section of the bill means, it is necessary to know something of the manner in which the carrying capacity of excursion vessels is determined. The capacity depends largely upon the amount of life-boat and life-raft equipment carried. There is, of course, a limit to the amount of such equipment which may be placed upon a vessel. The Inspection Service also has some regulations regarding deck space, which is also used in computing the number of passengers to be allowed, but this requirement has comparatively little effect. For all practical purposes in nearly all cases the capacity is determined by the available life-boat and life-raft equipment. So that you may have a clearer idea of what the Scott Bill means, please note the following:

The Eastland Disaster

"At the time of the Eastland disaster that steamer was required to carry life-boat and life-raft equipment for 30 per cent of the total number of persons allowed on board. She had such life-boat and raft capacity for 771 persons and was permitted to carry 2570 persons. When the Seamen's Act went into effect such vessels were required to carry boat and raft capacity for 50 per cent of the passengers, and those having such accommodation for 771 persons were permitted to carry a total of 1542 persons. The Scott Bill provides that they shall be allowed to operate with 25 per cent boat and raft capacity, and a steamer having such capacity for 771 persons will then be allowed to carry 3084 persons, or 500 more than the overloaded Eastland had on board. The proposal is appalling. Yet, it is being made very seriously, and there is danger that Congress may enact the bill unless citizens interested in the conservation of human life take some action that will arouse public opinion.

Overloaded and Undermanned

"The Eastland capsized because she was overloaded and undermanned. She had too many people on her upper decks, the weight of which made her list badly. Being undermanned, the ship was not being watched closely; deadlights, port holes and gangways on her side were wide open, and as she listed water poured in and she capsized. With a proper crew on board, performing their duties in the right way, her sides would not have been opened to the extent that they were and the vessel would have presented a greater resistance to the water as her list increased, and she finally would have stopped, perhaps at an angle when many people had slipped off into the water, but she never would have capsized. That this is a correct statement is easily proven by ascertaining the manner in which she was raised after the accident. Divers simply closed up various openings in the vessel's hull, the water was then pumped out and the vessel straightened herself and raised up out of the water through her own buoyancy. I am giving you these details so that you will understand clearly that overloading and undermanning formed a combination that brought about that horrible disaster.

Seamen's Act Protection

"The Seamen's Act, you know, was passed largely as result of the agitation carried on by the International Seamen's Union of America and its various district organizations. For this reason the law is considered by many as pure labor legislation having for its purpose the protection of the men engaged in seafaring industry. Just now it is the fashion in many quarters to sneer and ridicule at everything which bears the mark of labor—especially organized labor. The ship owners, who appeared before the committee in Washington, therefore argued with much confidence that the Seamen's Act was a labor act and, therefore, was a dangerous law. On this basis they pleaded for the right to drown women and children. Do you know that under the limited liability law, which protects the ship owners, it has been impossible for any of those relatives of the victims of the Eastland disaster to collect any damages. That limited liability law is still in effect.

Repeals Life Saving

"May I point out also that the section of the Scott Bill permitting the so-called 'certified life-boat men' in lieu of able seamen would serve to reduce the crews below even the very low standard which existed at the time of the Eastland disaster? At that time such vessels carried four or five able seamen in the deck crew, and if these were omitted there was some chance to secure damages in case of disaster. The Scott Bill would provide by statute law that even these four or five skilled men need not be carried, because it authorized the employment of unskilled men in their places, and this relieves the ship owner from any liability in event of accident resulting from such improper manning of the ship. The present law requires that at least 65 per cent of the deck crew shall be skilled men holding certificates as able seamen, which may be obtained only after definite experience on board ship. It further provides that on passenger vessels there shall be at least one such able seaman or licensed officer for each life-boat and for each raft having a capacity of more than fifteen persons, and also provides that only a portion of the rafts shall be of such small size as to carry only fifteen or less persons.

"Please understand that in the abolition of the use of skilled men in the deck crew of the ships the Scott Bill would abolish practically all regulations as affecting all vessels in all trades on the Great Lakes. The reduction of the life-boat and raft capacity which the bill proposes is limited to vessels which do not operate more than ten miles offshore. This would include the route between Chicago and Milwaukee and other ports along this shore; the route between Chicago and Michigan City, over which the Eastland traveled (by a very slight change of the course which would not reduce the running time of the vessels more than ten or fifteen minutes), and certain routes out of Buffalo, Cleveland, Toledo and Detroit.

"During the war the Government took a number of vessels off the Great Lakes for war purposes. These have not been returned, and the supply of excursion vessels for excursion purposes is now somewhat limited. The ship owners now aim to reap a harvest in this situation by securing the enactment of the Scott Bill to allow them to overload—legally overload—and thus secure substantial profits for themselves before the fleet is again increased to normal capacity by the return of vessels now on the Coast or by the building of new ships.

"The people of Chicago should be informed of the situation and should be urged to communicate with their congressmen, insisting upon the defeat of the Scott Bill. Its enactment into law means death and disaster, without a doubt, to many pleasure seekers. An effort to defeat it is, therefore, an effort to save human life. I know that you will do everything you can to be helpful in this respect, and I hope that you will immediately write to Chicago congressmen urging them to work and vote against the bill."

A GREAT LABOR EVENT

The following manifesto of the Australian worker proves that the labor movement in the Antipodes has developed considerably beyond the stage where wages and hours are the only consideration:

"The All-Australia Congress of Trade Unions, which will assemble in Melbourne on Monday, June 20 next, will provide an opportunity for the rank and file of Labor to lay down the principles and frame the policy which is to govern the movement in the future.

"The Trade Unionists of the Commonwealth, in conjunction with the Australian Labor Party, will be given an opportunity to say exactly what they want. That one fact alone marks out the All-Australia Congress as the most important in the history of the working class in this country.

"The time has come when the forces of labor must be united. Great problems confront the workers of all lands. Labor in Australia cannot afford to be out of step.

"This Congress comes not a moment too soon. Already the capitalists of Australia have started an offensive. They scheme to weaken Labor's forces by wholesale sackings. They aim at a reduction in wages, with a consequent depreciation of the standard of living. They want bigger profits for themselves.

"Labor has to meet its enemy's offensive as a united body. It must answer the capitalists with one voice.

"In another way, danger threatens the workers. We have seen the plot, happily defeated for the present, to fasten conscription on this country and deny the people the right of saying whether or not they should fight in wars in foreign countries. An insidious propaganda for Imperial Federation is going on around us. The liberties of the people are being sold behind barred doors at the Imperial Conference in London. If the Imperialists win the day, every vestige of liberty will have vanished from Australia.

"Labor must speak in the firm accents of Unity. It must demand the right to complete self-determination. It must say definitely that Australia shall not be committed to imperialistic schemes.

"It must say, too, that having helped to make the world 'safe for democracy,' Australia must be made a fit land to live in. The time has come for an industrial and political revolution by constitutional methods. There must be big changes in the industrial and political life of the country.

"Here are a few of the matters that demand immediate attention:

"A new standard of living.

"An adjustment of the basic wage.

"Workmen's compensation.

"Unemployment and sickness insurance.

"Housing.

"Representation of employes on the committee of management of industries.

"There are still bigger issues—such as the abolition of middlemen, the participation of the workers in the control of industry generally, and the greatest issue of all—the socialisation of industry. And there are other matters too numerous to mention—all vitally important to the welfare of the workers of Australia.

"Every Union should see to it that its representatives are present at this all-important Congress in Melbourne next month. Too long have they delayed in arriving at a common understanding and preparing for a forward move on a vast scale.

"Political and industrial co-operation, such as is planned by the All-Australia Congress, will place this country where it ought to be—in the van of the world's progress.

"The hour for action has struck!"

The number and character of the questions which workers of the Commonwealth believe are of vital importance to their welfare shows that the labor movement in that part of the world, at least, is in a very healthy condition.

"The Guide" listed 150 foreign and offshore vessels and 174 coasters in port, including vessels now building. Of the offshore vessels, sixteen were flying foreign flags, British, Dutch, Norwegian, French, Japanese, Philippine and German. The German craft is the ship "Orotavo," one of the fleet interned at Santa Rosalia, Mexico, during the war. Others of this fleet have been transferred to the American and British flags.

While there is a sprinkling of sailing vessels in the off-shore list, for the most part the bottoms are steamers of from two thousand to five thousand tons net. There are thirty-six Shipping Board steel vessels, mostly of the 8800-ton and 10,500-ton deadweight class, moored at Benicia. There are a few other Shipping Board freighters moored at Alameda, as well as privately owned vessels tied up at Sausalito, Oakland Creek and other moorings about the bay. The Army transport "Great Northern" and the passenger steamer "Santa Cruz" are among this number. In addition to all these vessels temporarily or permanently laid up, there are numerous steamers lying idle at their piers because of the strike.

For the most part, the coasters are lumber schooners, fishing vessels and oil tankers.

"The number of vessels in port at other harbors is startlingly large, but the situation is much worse here because this is the home port of most vessels operating along this coast," said Empey. "It does not mean that shipping conditions are worse here, for they are not. The Shipping Board boneyard at Benicia, and the strike are the main reasons for this vast amount of tonnage in port. Never before, even when many vessels used to lie here awaiting wheat cargoes, has the tonnage in port amounted to half what it has grown to recently."

NEW THOUGHT IN RUSSIA

In the schools of Russia, the children are taught to believe from the very beginning that it is dishonest in the last degree for a person not to be a productive worker and not to pay his way in society.

Pacific Coast Marine

The schooner "Rosamond," 985 tons. has been chartered to load lumber at Puget Sound for Callao, under private terms.

The schooner "Rose Mahoney" is undergoing repairs at San Francisco, preparatory to leaving for Puget Sound to load lumber for San Pedro.

The schooner "Alumna" arrived at San Francisco, last week, ninety-three days from the Tonga Islands. Light winds were responsible for the long trip.

Fifteen sailing vessels and barges have been chartered within the past two weeks for operation in the coastwise lumber trade transporting materials from northern mills to San Francisco and San Pedro, and other vessels are being sought.

The great injury to American industry and small American shipping concerns, caused by the lockout, is evidenced by the fact that the Robert Dollar Steamship Company, operating out of Vancouver, B. C., are carrying millions of feet of lumber from that section to San Pedro, California.

Fifty-six days from New York, the steamer "Harry Luckenbach" was towed into San Pedro, June 24, by the steamer "Lewis Luckenbach." The "Harry Luckenbach's long voyage was due to salt water in her boilers. She was forced into Magdalena Bay, where she lay until picked up by the "Lewis Luckenbach."

The Los Angeles Steamship Company operators of the steamers "Yale" and "Harvard," has announced an interchange of service between lines plying between the Columbia River and Puget Sound ports and San Francisco with the local company. Through tickets now can be sold from San Pedro to the North and from the North to San Pedro.

Two Peterson launches towing in tandem the four-masted schooner "Rosamond" out through the heads at San Francisco recently, created unusual interest in local waterfront circles. Due to the strike of marine engineers on Peterson tugs the launches were utilized in taking the wind-jammer to sea. The schooner is en route to Puget Sound to load lumber for San Pedro.

Average running time of 18.4 knots, while under way, was maintained by the new Shipping Board "535" liner "Silver State" on her maiden voyage. Engine trouble was experienced for only three hours, just out of Balboa. The "Silver State" made the run from New York in eighteen days, calling at Havana and San Pedro, and losing one day each at those ports and at Cristobal. This is considered a remarkable run under these conditions.

Representatives of Pacific Coast shipyards will leave for Washington within a few days to sit in consultation with Chairman A. D. Lasker of the United States Shipping Board. According to unofficial reports the shipbuilders were asked by Chairman Lasker to confer with him in reference to the shipbuilding situation on the Pacific Coast. Not alone have Pacific Coast men been asked to meet him, but it is understood that invitations have been sent out by the new Shipping Board head to builders on the Atlantic, Gulf and Great Lakes.

Demagogue's False Terms

Judge Gary, of the steel trust, has declared for "the regulation of capital, if labor, also, is regulated."

Why not use correct economic terms, Judge?

Why say "capital," when you mean capitalists?

Capital cannot be regulated, because it is an inanimate thing. A steel mill cannot be regulated, but the capitalist—the owner of the steel mill—can be.

There is no comparison between a handful of steel capitalists, for instance, and organized labor—what Judge Gary has in mind.

One has a monopoly of a natural resource and levies tribute on the public. The other urges all wage-earners to join with it.

One confines its benefits to the few; the other would extend its benefits to society as a whole.

Monopolists are given corporate life by the State. Their corporations could not function without the consent of the State. As individuals they could not enjoy limited liability for debts if they were not incorporated.

After they seize a natural resource, secure privileges from the State and create a monopoly in defiance of law, they insist that they be accorded the same treatment as a voluntary association of citizens who ask nothing from the State except what they are entitled to as citizens.

When the steel monopolist—as a monopolist—is regulated, his personal liberty is not interfered with. He may take his usual vacations or close his plants, if he is so inclined.

But if the State denies workers the right to strike, or compels them to accept an award by a compulsory arbitration court, the personal liberty of these workers is involved.

The capitalist sells steel, which is no part of his life. It is separate and distinct from his life.

The worker cannot separate from himself his power to labor. This power is another name for mind, will, spirit, knowledge and muscle—all that make a complete man.

The capitalist can sell his steel while a thousand miles from that commodity. He may have never seen it and may know nothing of the various processes of its manufacture.

Capitalists and their retainers would have us believe that labor is a commodity like their steel—that the power to labor can be separated from the individual, and that this compressed energy, wrapped in tin foil, can be hawked in the market place as other commodities.

Banquet talks, gabfests before students and other forms of publicity is designed to create an artificial public opinion in favor of this theory, supported by Judge Gary and his kind.

The settlement of the labor question will be slow, indeed, while capitalists, injunction judges, editors, statesmen and publicists indulge in such glaring demagogy.

Farmers Give Warning

Organized labor was warned against fake farmers' organizations by the Farmers' National Council in a telegram to the annual convention of the A. F. of L. The message, received from the Council's headquarters at Washington, urges co-operation of the farmers with organized labor.

"The Farmers' National Council welcomes your indorsement of its program for active working together of farmer and labor forces," said the telegram, "to achieve the ideals of economic—industrial and agricultural—as well as political freedom, for which our country was founded.

"We have been working to this end and will be glad to join hands with you to stop the present control of our railroads, natural resources, ships and banking and credit system in the interest of a little clique of investment bankers and selfish, un-American citizens of great wealth, and to secure an honest tax system and control of the meat packers.

"We warn you against false spokesmen of farmers' organizations, who denounce the getting together of farmers and other workers. Only by uniting upon a common basis of fundamental justice can we achieve real freedom of all workers. The interest of farmers as workers is four times as great as their interest as capitalists.

"The laborer is worthy of his hire, but he has not received it in this country on farms, in factories, mines, trade or transportation, and cannot receive it until privilege and monopoly is ended. To achieve that end joint action of farmers and other workers is essential."

Government Bars Unionists

Efforts of the United States Shipping Board to establish anti-union conditions on government-owned vessels has made a settlement of the seamen's strike impossible.

The Board insists that representatives of the seamen be barred from all docks and ships, and that an agreement be signed for only six months. The first demand is aimed directly at the Seamen's Union, and is of more importance to these workers than a proposed 15 per cent wage decrease. The union's representatives show that seamen live on the ships, and to prohibit visits to them is to reveal a purpose most transparent.

The Union does not ask that these visits be made when work would be interfered with, for the plan submitted to the Shipping Board provides that the visits shall be made at time of paying off "and at such other times as are agreeable to the representatives of the owners, but under no consideration shall representatives of the organization interfere with the men at work."

Heretofore, union representatives have been permitted to visit the ships.

AUSTRALIAN SEAMEN GAIN

The offer of the Australian shipowners in regard to wages and conditions has been accepted by the Seamen's Unions. The new agreement, which provides for an increase of 10/- per month, will remain in force until the end of the present year, taking the place of the old agreement. Material gains have also been made as regards working conditions. The new rates are:

A. B., £14/10/- a month; if employed as a lamp-trimmer, £15/10/- a month. Ordinary seamen, under eighteen years of age, £8/10/- a month; eighteen years or over, £9/15/-. Bo'sun, £15/10/- a month; trimmers, £14/10/- a month; greasers or firemen, £16/10/- a month. A fireman and greaser on a vessel carrying one engineer only will be paid 10/- a month extra. Donkeymen, £17/10/- a month. Storekeeper, £16/10/- a month. Special provision is made regarding holidays.

These conditions were not handed to the seamen on a platter; on the contrary it was only after the stewards' strike, and the seamen had withstood a prolonged lockout, that the agreement was made possible.

Our Australian comrades had not been suffering the privations of hunger and unemployment long before they awoke to the realization that their system of craft unity needed substantial improvement and reenforcement; therefore, they proceeded to link up.

A conference was held at the Trades Hall, Sydney, which lasted over a period of two weeks; where a scheme was drawn up for the establishment of what is to be known as the Transport Workers' Industrial Union of Australia. The new organization will comprise the seamen, waterside workers, marine cooks, butchers, the harbour rivers, and Coastal branch of the Merchant Service Guild, trolly, draymen, and carters, ship painters and dockers, Newcastle coal trimmers, and the Syndney coal lumpers.

It is anticipated that the new Union will embrace between forty thousand and fifty thousand men employed in all the Australian States. There is to be a secret ballot of the various organizations affected as to whether or not the proposal will be accepted. The ballot will be taken at once, though it will be some time before the final result will be known. The following temporary officers have been appointed: President, Mr. A. J. Tudehope; vice-president, Mr. E. Miller; secretary, Mr. A. S. Wheeler.

It appears to be in order at this time for the seamen of America to review their present situation. We are confronted with a pressing necessity for a change in our system of organization, or at least of policy. Instead of present isolation we must seek closed affiliation with, and more thorough understanding of the longshoremen, who in the final analysis, are our nearest coworkers. The spirit of solidarity must be cultivated and fostered amongst all port and marine workers, and in such manner as to safeguard our autonomy and rights as sailors.

We must learn to understand that our conditions will be such as we ourselves make them. With workers of all crafts the welfare of one is the concern of all. In several different ways, although not in shape to respond effectively, longshoremen in some of the Pacific ports have displayed a strong sympathy with us, and concern for our cause. These sentiments call for encouragement, and are prophetic of closer relations in the near future.

CRIMINAL CARELESSNESS

Consul General Thomas Sammons has transmitted copies of letters from the office of the Chief Inspector of Explosives of the Government of Victoria, Australia, in regard to the dangerous stowage of explosives and high-test gasoline on a sailing vessel from the United States that recently arrived at Melbourne. In a letter reporting the case to the Victoria Marine Board, the Chief Inspector of Explosives says: "No provision has been made for a magazine, the explosive cases being stowed against the ship's sides, on which the iron-bolt ends were unprotected. These conditions of stowage would not be permitted in ships loading at this port, nor would they be permitted under Board of Trade regulations, which, in the interest of public safety, necessitate the consruction of suitable magazines for the protection and better isolation of explosives in ships."

It was decided in the case under review to permit the discharge of the cargo in the special anchorage for vessels carrying explosives, under the supervision of the officer in charge of the powder anchorage and under other specified conditions. The expenses incurred by the Victoria Department of Explosives were charged to the ship's agents.

There is no law of the United States governing the transportation, stowage, or discharge of dangerous articles in sailing vessels. The only laws we have are the Federal law applying to "steam vessels carrying passengers," and such municipal ordinances as have been enacted by the authorities of the various ports. The Consul states that "it is obviously to the advantage of American shippers to take such precautions in stowing dangerous cargo as will conform to the regulations in force at the foreign ports of destination and thus avoid the delay and expense incurred in the Australian case cited," which, of course, only concerns profits.

The foregoing is an instance of a few of the perils of the deep, as permitted by our obsolete navigation laws.

Such practices as quoted above are common with American ships, due to the fact that there are not sufficient protective measures.

American ship owners have advantage of a cheaper cost of operation, although they everlastingly contend that they suffer under laws which work to their disadvantage, as regards operating costs.

These conditions are deplorable under ordinary circumstances, when only the ship owners are concerned, for their profits. But, when all maritime rules and regulations are ignored by our Department of Commerce, set aside or violated flagrantly by the Shipping Board and auxiliaries in efforts to compel submission to the dictatorship of arrogant beaureaucrats, the situation becomes alarming. The lawless manner in which vessels have been operating since the inception of the lockout of marine workers is liable to result in a calamity or series of disasters, inasmuch as every measure for prevention of accident, or efficient handling of ships and cargoes have been set aside.

FARES AND EMPLOYES

In a recent issue of "The New Freedom," published at Honolulu, the Matson Line is given a few jolts of high life, which must be bitter medicine because of so much truth, and the realization that the public are awake to a few of their cunning operations. "The New Freedom's" editorial comment follows:

"A desperate fight is now being put up by the Matson Company in its efforts to force a 15 per cent reduction in the wage rate of its employes, but as an offset or excuse for this it is to be noted that the company has as yet made no move to give the public a reduction in the exorbitant fares now charged for transportation to the coast. And it is a safe bet that the company will not do so. It seems to be all right to demand a 'return to normalcy,' so far as wages are concerned, but when a 'return to normalcy' is demanded in the attitude of the big corporations towards the public—well, that is an entirely different matter.

"A few years ago (in the beloved 'normalcy' period) first-class fares to the coast on the Matson boats cost $65 to $75. The same accommodations now cost from $125 to $135, an increase of 100 per cent. Of course, in wartimes, there may have been some excuse for such a big increase in transportation rates, but certainly there is at the present moment no legitimate excuse for the maintenance of such high rates, because foodstuffs and practically all the supplies needed in running the steamers have decreased greatly in price, the tendency still being downward. Also, there are now no war risk extra premiums on steamers and the excess profits tax is a thing of the past. All these items tend to enormously reduce the operation cost of the steamers, and the public naturally has a right to expect a proportionate reduction in the steamer fares. Under existing conditions, however, there is little hope of any such reductions, simply because of the iniquitous coastwise laws and the fact that all the steamers operated on the Pacific are in the steamship combine, and that that combine is endorsed and supported by the United States Government.

"If there was any desire on the part of the Government to bring these robber steamship companies to time, it would be the easiest thing in the world, simply because Uncle Sam has many hundreds of vessels lying idle and rotting in almost every large harbor up and down the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Even if any of these vessels are put into trade they are leased out to private companies, and so are of no use in breaking up the steamship combination.

"In the meantime this precious Matson outfit, which continues to rob the public—(and out of the proceeds of the robbery is able to build a $2,000,000 office block in San Francisco, undertake the building of more palatial steamers, and pay regular fat and juicy dividends to its stockholders)—also seems determined to try to gouge its workers to the extent of 15 per cent of their wages, and at the same time cause this community great inconvenience, trouble, expense and delay in the transaction of business because of the uncertainty of its steamer schedule. Certainly if Honolulu had any commercial body of independent business men not tied up directly or indirectly with the steamship or sugar business, there would be a howl let up loud enough to be heard from here to Washington, with the hope that some justice might be secured for the steamship workers and the public.

"However, there is a strong ray of hope in the buccaneering attitude of our steamship companies (and especially of the Matson outfit) toward the public. The 'malefactors of great wealth' are slowly but surely forcing the nation into the public ownership of its transportation and many other utilities. Public welfare and private greed and rapacity are diametrically opposed, and so public ownership must eventually come, because public ownership is the only possible way to defeat the scheming, conspiracy and combinations of private capital when used in public utilities."

Omitting the fact that Admiral Benson's figures of 15 per cent as a cut are accepted as correct—when the cut approximates 40 per cent all round—we heartily coincide with the sentiments expressed by our Hawaiian contemporary.

STAND BY FARMERS

Attempts to destroy the United States Department of Agriculture were denounced by the A. F. of L. convention, in Denver. "The Department of Agriculture," the resolution declares, "has stood in the way of those who have mercilessly bled the farmer white for many years. It is believed by the enemies of the farmers that if the Department of Agriculture could be abolished they would have the producers of food products at their mercy. The organizers of the conspiracy to abolish the Department of Agriculture have come out in the open and declare this department no longer necessary."

MEXICAN CONSTITUTION UPHELD

The Mexican people in 1857 adopted a constitution that denied the right of any individual to own mineral or oil rights in that country and declared all mineral and oil lands to be the property of the people of Mexico. That constitution also provided for the election of a president by the people at stated times and denied the right of re-election to the holder of the office. Yet, Diaz, in open violation of that constitution, held office for thirty years as a military dictator, and was only forced out of office—which he had, after the expiration of the term for which he was elected, illegally held—by an armed rebellion.

While Diaz usurped office he set aside the provisions of the constitution above set forth and granted "rights" to Americans and others to exploit oil and mineral properties which he had no legal or moral permission to grant. Every recipient of one of those grants knew the circumstances under which they were granted and took a long chance on the people overthrowing Diaz and abolishing them.

After the people had again control of their government they amended the Constitution of 1857, but made no change in that provision declaring the oil and mineral wealth of Mexico the inalienable property of the people. That section of the Constitution was always the fundamental law of the land, and still the law. Solemnly declared such by Act of the people of Mexico.

Now come those who secured, in various and devious ways, "concessions" from the outlaw and usurper, Diaz, and want the president of that country to set aside the Constitution and "guarantee" the "concessions" granted by Diaz in plain violation of the fundamental law of Mexico.

If he does so he violates his oath and becomes another Diaz. If he does not he is threatened with the wrath of the oil barons of this country and the refusal of this Government to recognize Mexico. Suppose the thing was reversed and President Harding was asked by the Secretary of State for Mexico to set aside the Constitution in behalf of a few rich Mexicans. What would happen?

WAR'S TRACES DISAPPEARING

Last traces of war damage at Fanning Island were wiped out recently when a British cable steamer fitted a permanent "end" to the cable, which was cut by the German cruiser "Nurnberg's" crew in 1914. The Germans had put in at Fanning in order to cut the cable while on their way to join other ships of the German fleet off the coast of Chile.

The cutting of the cable at Fanning severed connections temporarily between Canada and Australia. The Germans, however, neglected to pick up the sea end of the cable and tow it out to sea, which would have rendered the cable station useless for a long time. As soon as they left, the British rigged up a temporary connection which answered every purpose.

The "Nurnberg" was later destroyed, with other German ships, by Admiral Sturdee, off the Falkland Islands.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

THE LIBERTY LADY

By ARTHUR NANNESTAD.

I am sitting in Battery Park,
Obsessed with a reflective fit,
Watching the Liberty Lady, shadowy, dark,
Grasping a torch that's unlit.

Gloomy in the morning mist,
She stands as if ashamed
Of a powerlessness to resist
The liberty-hating infamed.

They are passing her by each day,
They are passing her by at night,
In ships that fly the emblem
That once stood for freedom's right.

I am smiling, for it's a joke;
Around me on benches sit men
Haggard, unshaven and broke,
That they might still be men.

While passing before their eyes
Others take the ships away,
Breaking faith and brotherhood ties
For three square meals a day.

Yea, 'tis humor, but I'll save my laugh
To the last, which is the best;
Standing pat for freedom's behalf,
Hungry and free on a bench with the rest.

BUREAUCRATIC RUTHLESSNESS

As a concrete example of the pitiless aggressions upon marine unions by the U. S. Shipping Board, the following letter is all that could be desired:

10-20-50M. June 23, 1921.

United States Shipping Board
Inter-Office Memorandum

From E. D. Warner, Asst. to Director, Recruiting Service.

To All Agents and Sub-Agents of Sea Service Bureau.

Subject:

This is to advise you that following the settlement of the marine controversy, you are not, under any circumstances, to call upon any of the Marine Unions for assistance in filling any of the orders placed with you by the ship owners or operators.

At times in the past we have been accused of being nothing more or less than a recruiting agency for the Unions. This office does not believe in the truth of this accusation, but in the future we will see to it that there are no grounds for a similar one being made.

It is the desire and intention that the Sea Service Bureau (which has been placed in a stronger position than ever before as a result of the strike) shall dominate and control the supply of marine labor at least in so far as Shipping Board vessels are concerned. If we refuse to go to the Unions they must of necessity come to us.

E. D. WARNER,
Ass. to Director,
Recruiting Service.

In forwarding the foregoing evidence of conspiracy to starve our present sea personnel out of the American Merchant service (80 per cent of whom are Americans, according to Admiral Benson's own figures), the officials of the Marine Cooks and Stewards of the Atlantic at Galveston desire to be recorded as the senders. Chas. F. Bullock and W. F. Cottell sign the communication as Agent and delegate of the Galveston Branch.

THE "BALCATTA" AFFAIR

Placing a record on maritime movements in these days of breakdowns at sea, due to the inexperience of their ship crews, the steamer "Silver State," operated by the Pacific Steamship Company, arrived in port last week more or less on schedule time. On board of the ship were several destitute seamen, who had been given passage in Panama for San Francisco. These men became destitute in South America, through their employer going bankrupt. Their story is as follows:

"We signed articles of the motorship 'Balcatta' at Seattle last November, for a trip to South American ports and return. Off the coast of Peru the ship struck, causing considerable damage and inflicting a bad leak in the bottom. However, we were able to proceed to the Peruvian port and discharge our cargo. From there we attempted to take the ship to Talcahuano, Chile, for necessary repairs.

"Our efforts, however, were crowned with misfortune. The water was pouring into the ship's hold faster than the pumps could take it out, causing the ship gradually to fill up. All of a sudden the ship slowly rolled over, turning turtle completely. We were left helpless at the mercy of the sea, until sighted by the British steamer 'La Pas,' which picked us up and took us to the next port, Talcahuano. The American Consul was notified of our shipwrecked condition and further action was awaited.

"The floating hull was subsequently picked up and brought into port, where the salvage crew were successful in righting the vessel. Necessary repairs were then started. Since the ship was to be sold, the crew made a demand for their wages, but it proved that there were no funds. A libel was placed against the ship, but was ineffective. The ship was sold for $30,000, while liabilities amounted to over $110,000, consisting of salvage, repair and tug expenses, as well as salaries of the crew. The men were not able to collect their wages, and demanded to be sent home, where they hoped to be more successful in their claim. They were placed on board of the steamer 'Santa Paula' and taken to Panama, where they were transferred to the 'Silver State,' which ship brought them into this port.

"Commenting on the latter passage, the men had bitter complaints, since they had been promised second-class accommodation, but were placed in the steerage. They had to live together with Chinese, and were fed on nothing but rice, fish and kelp.

"Here, then, is a case of gross injustice. The men were hired out seven months ago. They had willingly done their work, suffered hardships and danger, submitting themselves to humiliation of all sorts and in the final end they have to go begging to get a meal and a place to sleep, and that as the reward for seven months of work under modern industry. Surely, there must be something wrong when one man can gamble with a seven months' labor power of thirty to forty men.

"It is to be hoped that in future generations, when the management of industry will rest in the hands of a government of the people, that such industrial outrages will not occur, and it will be impossible for any imposter and gambler to cheat a working man out of his earnings by declaring himself bankrupt.

F. HARMS.

AUSTRALIAN GOVERNMENT SHIPS

The recent announcement by the minister in charge of shipbuilding that lack of funds (the current year's appropriation having been exhausted in eight months) would prevent the building of any further Commonwealth Government ships at the dockyard of New South Wales State Government on Walsh Island, and the Labor Party agitations which have followed the dismissal of large numbers of men from that plant and also from the Commonwealth Government dockyard at Cockatoo Island, have renewed public interest in the question whether the Commonwealth Government shall or shall not continue to build and operate its own vessels.

Opposition to continued Government construction of ships comes from the organizers of the so-called "Economy movement," a non-partisan agitation which seeks the reduction of all Government expenditures on the ground that the combined Commonwealth and State debts of over £800,000,000 ($3,893,000,000) is too heavy a burden to allow of any increase, even for productive enterprises such as ships.

The Commonwealth Fleet

The Commonwealth Government fleet was begun in 1916 by the purchase by the Prime Minister of fifteen steel cargo vessels of an average dead-weight capacity of about seven thousand tons and two wooden vessels, one of which was subsequently wrecked and the other sold. Lack of normal private shipping facilities and abnormal freight rates, due to war conditions, were the reasons of acquiring this fleet.

It was subsequently decided to increase the fleet by building in Australia twenty-one steel and twenty-four wooden steamers, in England five steel steamers, and in America fourteen wooden ships. Fourteen wooden ships were built in the United States, but were not satisfactory and were sold to American interests. Payment on five of them was defaulted by the buyers, and the Commonwealth had to take them. They are now running on the Australian coast. Contracts for twenty-two of the twenty-four wooden ships to have been built in Australia were canceled.

The steel cargo ship program was divided into two parts, the first consisting of six sister ships of a dead-weight capacity of about six thousand tons, each 331 feet long by forty-eight feet beam, with single-screw engines and Babcock & Wilcox boilers, giving an indicated horsepower of 2200 and a loaded speed of 10½ knots. The last of these vessels was completed in 1920 and all are now in commission.

12,000-ton Ships

The second part of the program consists of fifteen vessels, of which three were to be built at Williamstown, three at Walsh Island, one at Cockatoo Island, four at a private yard in Queensland, and four at a private yard in South Australia. Two of the Walsh Island boats have been launched. It is now intended to drop the other boat to have been built at Walsh Island, making the total number of Australian-built steamers twenty instead of twenty-one. One of the second set of vessels has been launched at Williamstown and one at Cockatoo Island, and work is progressing on eight more. The vessels of the second series already launched and nearing completion, and the others under construction are of the "Isherwood" shelter deck type, 331 feet long by forty-eight feet beam, carrying six thousand tons dead-weight on a 23.7-foot draft. Their engines, etc., will be the same type as those of the first series vessels.

The minister in charge of shipbuilding stated on March 19 that it was hoped that arrangements would soon be consummated by which the construction of two twelve-thousand-ton steel steamers would be resumed at Cockatoo Island. These will be equipped for oil fuel and will have a loaded speed of thirteen knots; they will be 530 feet long by sixty-three feet beam, and with a loaded draft of 29.75 feet. In addition to the Commonwealth-built ships three twelve-thousand-ton ships are building for the Government at Vickers' in England, and two at Beardsmore's, in England.

It has been asserted from time to time that the Commonwealth fleet was losing money. In answer to such statements the manager of the line declares that gross profits from the beginning of the operation of the fleet to June 30, 1920, were £3,182,000 ($15,485,000) and net profits £2,201,000 ($10,711,000). The first half of the current year, he states officially, will show a substantial profit, in spite of the losses from the recent shipping strike, and the second half promises a moderate profit.

OF QUESTIONABLE VALUE

Major Muirhead, of the Seattle Port Commission, has a few original ideas of his own, and has suggested to the Federal Engineering Department that the forty-four wooden hulls of the Shipping Board war merchant fleet be filled with cement and sunk as jetties or for breakwater needs. The hulls are interfering with traffic in Lake Union, and there is an insistent demand for their immediate removal, Muirhead states.

WAR'S TOLL AT SEA

Casualties to British Empire shipping on and near the coasts of the British Isles during the war have been published. Nine hundred and fifteen vessels, comprising a tonnage of 1,048,498 were lost by marine casualty. Vessels lost by enemy action numbered 3781; tonnage, 8,363,777. The deaths of seamen, fishermen, and passengers, including prisoners of war, numbered 40,860.

ON THE JOB IN SAN PEDRO

Enclosed please find the program of an entertainment held in our hall at San Pedro on Saturday, June 18. If there is room in the columns of the JOURNAL, have the same inserted, as I believe some of the boys might be interested.

Regarding the lockout, the conditions here are about the same as in San Francisco. The police are doing twelve-hour shifts now and are being given an example of what the shipowners are trying to make us swallow.

Fraternally,
HARRY OHLSEN.
San Pedro, June 18, 1921.

A concert and smoker was held in the spacious hall of the Sailors' Union at San Pedro on the night of the 18th of June. The same was given under the joint auspices of the five maritime organizations, and being the first one in the history of these organizations it certainly proved to be a great success.

The talent was supplied from each organization, and only members of the five maritime unions were admitted. The way everyone conducted themselves could not be surpassed. During the evening speeches were made by the following representatives of the different unions: Masters, Mates and Pilots, Captain Forstrom; Marine Engineers, Mr. Van Lupton; Marine Firemen, Mr. Gonzales; Marine Cooks and Stewards, Mr. Joseph Mack; Sailors' Union, Mr. Harry Ohlsen.

J. P. Paton of the Sailors' Union presided.

A good boxing match finished the night's entertainment. Over five hundred members attended and all agreed that this get-together meeting had been the best they had ever attended and that a similar one should be given in the near future.

DENOUNCE PRIVATE ARMIES

No other country permits employers to maintain private armies, declared James Lord, president of the A. F. of L. Mining Department, in discussing West Virginia conditions before the A. F. of L. convention.

"It is doubtful," he said, "if in any country in the world, no matter how reactionary or barbarous, the owners and directors of business are allowed to have and control armies of private hired killers as they do with impunity in some parts of our country. It is doubtful if in any other country, men whose sole recommendation are that they will commit murder or any other crime for pay, are allowed by the Government and with its full knowledge from its own investigation to supersede and displace constitutional government."

SICKNESS IS COSTLY

The New York State Industrial Commission states that "it is generally agreed that over 5 per cent of all absenteeism in industry is caused by sickness, one-half of which is preventable. A healthy group of employes makes for greater efficiency; measures providing for sickness prevention and adequate relief for the disabled pay dividends of incalculable value."

A FAMOUS VICTORY

After the "Battle of Blenheim"—By Robert Southey.

It was a summer evening
Old Matson's work was done,
And he before his office door
Was sitting in the sun.
And by him sported on the green
His little grandchild, Wilhelmine.

She saw her brother Peterkin
Prod something fat and round
Which he, beneath a shady tree,
In playing there had found.
He came to ask what he had found
That lay asleep, so fat and round.

Old Matson looked upon the boy
Who stood expectant by
And then the old man shook his head,
And, with a natural sigh:
"'Tis some poor sailor man," said he,
"That starved in the great victory."

"I find them on the sidewalks
For there's many hereabout.
And often as I pass the jail
The Jailor turns them out.
For many hundred men" said he,
"Were jailed in the great victory."

"Now, tell us what 'twas all about,"
Young Peterkin, he cries.
While little Wilhelmine looks up
With wonder-waiting eyes.
"Now tell us all about the war
And what they fought the unions for."

"It was the owners," Matson cried,
"Who locked the unions out.
But what we ever did it for
I could not well make out.
But all the owners said," quoth he
"'Twould be a famous victory.

"We brought the scabs to Oakland Creek,
Yon little stream hard by.
We did not dare to bring them here
For they were rather shy.
They robbed from honest men their bread
And when they saw these men they fled.

"With guns and clubs the waterfront
Was guarded far and wide,
And many a Berkeley 'Varsity scab
His shameful face did hide.
But things like that, you know, must be
In every famous victory.

"They say it was a shocking sight
Before the fight was won,
For many thousand sailors here
Lay basking in the sun.
But things like that, you know, must be
In every famous victory."

"Great praise the Berkeley 'Varsity won;
The owners praised the Dean."
"Why, 'twas a very wicked thing,"
Said little Wilhelmine.
"No, no, my little girl," said he,
"It was a famous victory."

"And all the owners praised the scabs
Who such a fight did win."
"But what good came of it at last?"
Asked little Peterkin,
"Why, that I cannot tell," said he,
"But 'twas a famous victory."

WORK DECLARED HEALTHY

Opinions have differed as to the fatigue-causing powers of different occupations; and many efforts have been made to establish a scale for definitely ranging them. A recent report of the U. S. Public Health Service states that the amount of sulphur excreted through the kidneys of men engaged in a wide range of work has been found to coincide very closely with the relative arduousness of the work, as estimated by four good observers.

CONVENTION LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

The delegates are in a serious mood. The labor movement is in the midst of the bitterest contest with organized capital that was ever waged on this continent. Bread lines are in prospect. The Federation's membership is ready for a new and aggressive program—provided always this program can be shown to be practicable.

Of the 130 resolutions before this convention, a great many deal with the need for organizing various industries, localities or cities. Among the resolutions thus far adopted are demands for Senate investigations of the West Virginia mining war, the maritime lockout with its background of European intrigue, and the terrible conditions in Southern cotton mills since the recent ruinous reductions in wages and increases in hours of work.

Thos. F. McMahon, of the United Textile Workers, told a pitiful story of the degradation, misery and slavery forced by the Cannon mills in the Carolinas upon their industrial victims. These horrors, he said, are the worst he has seen in forty years of pioneering in unionism in the cotton textile industry.

Washington State, with its lumber industry, and Montana, Wyoming and Colorado, with their mining industries, told of losses through the anti-union drives and persecution conducted by war profiteers and through lack of sufficient organizers to reach the men. A revolt of thousands of members fo the Loyal Legion of Loggers and Lumbermen in the woods of Washington against wages of $2.35 a day with board costing $9.50 a week imposed upon them by the bosses, was reported by Short of Seattle.

Women make their demand of the Federation this year in definite terms. The Women's Committee for Industrial Equality, of Denver, has a resolution asking an amendment to the Federation's constitution which will guarantee to men and women workers the same rights within the organization, and will forbid discrimination against women in the labor movement because of their sex. Some unions exclude women from membership, some from the right to hold office or even to vote for officers, thus limiting their right to bargain collectively. A claen-cut declaration in favor of women's equality with men in these rights was made by the special conference of heads of national and international unions held at Washington last February.

Two addresses delivered at the convention on Thursday were significant of the drift of the times. Colonel Owsley, of Texas, representing the American Legion, made a vigorous, sonorous, somewhat sinister talk, demanding that "your powerful and dominant organizations" line up with the Legion for "absolute loyalty to our Government." His words were without one note of sympathy for humanity's present industrial sufferings, or for labor's struggle toward justice.

He was followed by the Rev. Geo. S. Lackland, of Denver, who told of the struggle between Mammon and the soul of the Church, and aroused delegates to a tremendous demonstration when he declared that the younger clergy would stand by labor and against organized greed and its dictation. He ended by appealing to the Legion to defend the Y. W. C. A., which organized wealth seeks to destroy for its friendship to labor's cause.

Lackland was given a rising vote of thanks. Owsley was forgotten, even as he sat and witnessed the enthusiasm of the convention for the frank young follower of the Carpenter of Nazareth.

Convention Progress

Under the report adopted, after four hours of notably forceful debate, the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor stands instructed to "devise and publish the necessary legislative program," which shall "secure to men employed in organized industry that equality of enjoyment of all the rights, privileges and immunities now enjoyed by those who contribute capital to organized industrial enterprises, to the end that basic industry conducted under corporate grants shall be conducted for the common good, and not for the profit of a class of men."

The Federation has made progress here at its Denver convention.

It has issued a declaration of its right to take—by legal process, but still to take—a partnership in the management and benefits of organized corporate industry. It has gone back to the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights, and has called the attention of the country to the fact that this Government was originally founded in order to safeguard the right of every human being to the enjoyment of the gains of his own industry, and that the private corporations have grown up like noxious weeds to choke out and kill this human right, until now America is an industrial despotism in which the individual worker is helpless and hopeless. The convention summons the Nation to go back to fundamental Americanism.

Support Government Ownership

This declaration and resolution, coupled with a definite reaffirmation of the Montreal resolution in favor of Government ownership and democratic operation of railroads, came from the railroad labor organizations, and it was adopted by an almost unanimous vote on Wednesday, in spite of the fact that a seven-to-six majority of the Resolutions Committee opposed it. The seven on the committee, led by John Frey, wanted to stop short with reaffirmation of the railroad resolution of last year, but the minority report, presented by Howard, of the Typographical, was, from the outset, seen to be the demand of the convention. The opposition made no request for a roll call when the thunder of "aye" had echoed through the auditorium upon the viva voce vote.

Resolution 59, which is substantially the report as adopted, was supported in the debate by Lewis on behalf of the United Mine Workers, Hewitt and Grow for the Machinists, Hays and Morrison for the Typographical, John Walker for the Illinois State Federation of Labor, Gainor for the Letter Carriers, Furuseth for the Seamen, and Woll for the Photo Engravers.

Furuseth, and Tobin of the Teamsters, secured amendment of the language of the report so that the "railroad" and not "transportation" systems are to be made the immediate object of nationalization and democratic management.

Woll pointed out that a plan of democratizing industry, which will destroy the present overwhelming industrial power of giant corporations, but which recognizes the partnership of capital with labor in them, is not socialism but "ideal capitalism." John Walker termed it "a step in co-operation."

President Gompers offered no argument on the issue, while Vice-president Duncan repudiated both Government ownership and democratization. Furuseth, while voicing suspicion of governmental powers, confessed that there was no good reason why a democratic government might not be secured and real democracy take possession of the industrial field also. "Unless democracy did win industry," he concluded, "humanity was doomed."

So was settled the great battle of the convention. Glenn Plumb, whose program was carried in the resolution, and who had addressed the convention on Tuesday, witnessed the adoption of the new policy.

Labor Not Interested

On Ireland, the convention took decisive action, thanks to the parliamentary law created by President Gompers and his advisers as they went along.

The resolution for a boycott against British-made goods was not permitted to come up for a vote—which was what its promoters most desired. The committee reported the Brady resolution of general sympathy and appeal for Irish liberation and independence—but omitting the demand in the Brady resolution for immediate payment of British debts of interest to the United States Government—as a substitute for the four Irish resolutions that had been introduced. When Madsen, of the Chicago Federation of Labor, moved as an amendment to the committee's report that the boycott resolution be added to it, President Gompers ruled that no resolution rejected by the committee in making up a substitute could be offered as an amendment.

This point being sustained by a large majority of the delegates, who were manifestly hostile to the taking of a roll call vote on the boycott, an attempt was made to recommit the report with instructions to add the boycott to the substitute resolution, and also to recommit with instructions to report back both the Brady resolution and the boycott. Mr. Gompers ruled both these motions out of order.

Wilson, of the Patternmakers, moved the previous question, the report was adopted, and the Irish boycott incident was closed.

Seamen's Resolutions

A great variety of other action was taken, covering legislative, political, international and trade problems. For example, the Seamen offered resolutions, which were adopted, reciting the fact of the anti-union policy declared by the new Shipping Board, the fact that wages are again to be reduced in January, and the violation of promises made by the Government to the seamen in recognition of their heroic self-sacrifice in the submarine zone during the war. They charge the Shipping Board with seeking to torpedo the Merchant Marine and sea power of America, and compliment the seamen upon their loyalty to that sea power and to the principles of human freedom. Finally the convention declares: "Because we have not forgotten the services of the seamen during the war, we are hereby reminding the American people of that service and of the promises then made to them, to the end that other workers here and elsewhere may realize the true value of such promises, and with all haste make ready to meet similar treatment."

Resolution calling for the establishment of daily labor newspapers, and of labor propaganda through the operation of moving-picture studios and theaters, were referred to the Executive Council for report next year.

The Machinists' old-age pension resolution was referred to the Executive Council for study, while the Council was given another year in which to complete its study of the wisdom of health insurance. On the Machinists' resolution for unemployment insurance, the convention upheld its Resolutions Committee's report, that such insurance was dangerous to the liberty of the worker. President Gompers spoke at length against insurance against loss of jobs. Furuseth declared it would involve the use of "industrial passports." Cyrus Crow, of the Machinists, made a spirited appeal in its behalf, in the name of millions of families now in want. He was voted down.

Exclude Asiatics

Complete exclusion, for the present, of all immigration, and new and rigid means of excluding all Chinese and Japanese laborers and small merchants, and persons who might become such, was approved. A California resolution aimed to prevent "races of yellow color" from becoming citizens, and to prevent Japanese from buying or leasing agricultural lands, was likewise adopted.

One of the humorous incidents of the session was the ease with which the Federation went on record again in favor of the legalized manufacture and sale of beer. The Brewery Workers' resolution was favorably reported, was put to a vote without discussion or attention, and was endorsed by the voices of perhaps a score of delegates, none opposing.

Although the convention pigeon-holed in the Executive Council the proposal that five labor universities be established, it listened to an excellent report on education from Stillman, of the Teachers' Federation, secretary of the Committee on Education. This report dealt in part with "Control of Thought" discussed in the Executive Council's report, and added that:

Defend Our Schools

"There have been brought forcibly to the attention of the committee numerous flagrant attempts to intimidate teachers in the exercise of their rights and duties as citizens outside the school, and to compel them to serve the interests of propaganda within the classroom. In the light of the definite policy revealed by these attempts in all sections of the country, the frank boast of Roger Babson, who conducts one of the leading advisory agencies of the business and employing interests, becomes even more sinister:

"'The war taught us the power of propaganda. Now, when we have anything to sell to the American people, we know how to sell it. We have the school, the pulpit and the press.'

"That boast may have been blatant and overconfident, but exceedingly powerful forces are working constantly to make it a reality. . . . Organized labor must be on the alert constantly and everywhere against insidious efforts to pervert the schools."

More and beter schoolhouses were demanded as a fundamental right of the children of the wage-workers. Appreciation was expressed for the adult schools established by the Ladies' Garment Workers and other labor bodies, as well as for the work of education done under adverse conditions by the struggling labor press.

A resolution offered by Green, of the Miners, and adopted, called for an equitable tariff on Mexican fuel oil brought into the United States. Green declared that this cheap petroleum is underselling the oil and coal produced in this country to an extent which threatened to destroy the present standards of living of American mine and oil field workers.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER.

The seamen refuse to accept a six months' agreement, because it would expire at the dullest period of the year.

The Shipping Board's anti-union attitude is in line with its refusal to submit the entire question to the President, and their refusal to agree to give preference in employment to American citizens, with second preference to seamen who have declared their intention of becoming citizens.

Unemployment Grows

The United States Bureau of Labor Statistics announces increased unemployment in May, as the result of reports received from representative establishments in thirteen manufacturing industries and in bituminous coal mining.

Comparing these figures with those for identical establishments for May, last year, it appears, says the Bureau, there were decreases in the number of persons employed. Cigar manufacturing is the one industry which shows an increase, 0.3 per cent, over May, 1920. The largest decrease, 41 per cent, appears in car building and repairing. Leather, paper and automobiles show respective decreases of 34, 34.4 and 34 per cent.

All of the fourteen industries show a decrease in the total amount of the pay roll for May, 1921, as compared with May, 1920. Iron and steel lead with 56.1 per cent. Paper making decreased 48.3 per cent, and leather 45 per cent.

Unionists Urge Probe

Congressional investigation of the seamen's strike and of Southern cotton mills were demanded by the A. F. of L. at its annual convention. The seamen's cause was presented by Andrew Furuseth, who repeated his charge of an international conspiracy against the seamen, and that proof could be secured by any committee appointed by Congress.

In urging the textile probe, Thomas F. McMahon, acting president of the United Textile Workers, said: "In some parts of North Carolina you cannot work without permission of mill owners, you cannot live in towns without the permission of mill owners, and when you die you cannot be buried without the permission of the mill owners. Some organizers have lost their lives in efforts to assist these workers."

Labor News

On June 17 the striking British miners voted to reject the new wage offers of mine owners.

At Tacoma, Wash., organized bakers are renewing last year's wage agreement, despite efforts of a few employers to lower conditions, via the anti-union shop.

The Court of Errors and Appeals has upheld an injunction against picketing by nine union machinists in Newark. These workers must go to jail for three months and pay a fine of $50.

Out of four hundred Southern Pacific shopmen, who voted at Sacramento on the question of accepting the wage reduction put into effect recently by the Federal Labor Board, only sixteen voted in the affirmative.

Carmen employed in the Great Northern shops at Hillyard, Wash., voted 3 to 2 to accept the wage cut made by the Federal Railway Labor Board, effective July 1. Railroad blacksmiths voted against the wage-cut by one majority.

An assessment of $1 per week on all members of affiliated unions who are employed has been levied by the Bay Counties District Council of Carpenters. The money thus raised will be used in paying benefits to members locked out by the Builders' Exchange.

Labor troubles continue unabated in Australia, notwithstanding extensive legislative measures for prevention. Compulsory arbitration has proved a complete failure and has a strong tendency to divide the country into two parties always at loggerheads—employer and employe.

A. C. Dauphiny, labor candidate, was recently elected Mayor of Eureka by a heavy majority, defeating L. F. Puter. There was a big majority for a bond issue authorizing the purchase of the property of the Humboldt Transit Company and the inauguration of a municipal street railway. Success of the bond issue resulted in the Street Carmen's Union calling off the strike, which has been in force several months.

Packing house employes, in Chicago, began their fight against a proposed five-cent an hour reduction in wages before Judge Samuel Alschuler, arbiter, on June 24. Harry Haslon testified he received $21 a week, and was compelled to work nights in a grocery to support himself and his family. "Sooner than violate union rules, I'd let my children starve," he said when asked if he were willing to work overtime. "If I'd work overtime I'd be taking someone's bread and butter away from him."

Union labor has scored a decided victory in the Pullman Company controversy. Ten thousand workmen employed in the Pullman car shops will not suffer a reduction in wages July 1, as planned by the Pullman Company. The United States Railway Labor Board has directed that the order for the reduction be nullified, and said the Pullman Company officials must meet with the heads of unions and discuss the matter of reducing wages. In the event no agreement can be reached the case is then to be brought before the Federal Wage Board.

SEAMEN! WATCH FOR DEVELOPMENTS.
See Our Weekly Reports Posted in All Union Halls.

I have said that I would never be attorney for shipowners, until the seamen were shipowners. One of the purposes of my visit to Europe this summer is to acquire knowledge as to shipping conditions abroad and particularly to ascertain with what degree of success the seamen of Italy are operating ships.
Any seamen, who, with a view to becoming shipowners some time, are willing to form "a Seamen's Society for Savings" and will pledge to save one-fourth of their wages over their board and lodging per annum, said savings to be put in a depository that they themselves may select, please communicate with the undersigned.

World's Workers

A threatened general strike in Denmark has been averted after protracted negotiations between employers and employes. The second strike notices had been sent out by the unions in the iron, wood, and brickmaking industries.

The "Australian Worker" remarks that "the fashionable shopping centers of London are now thronged by disabled former soldiers with barrel organs, who, with pitiful displays of their wounded condition, unemployment, and impoverishment, manage to collect some pennies from the crowds. All these heroes got out of the great fight for democracy is their medals and the right to beg!"

The executive committee of the British Miners' Union, which met last week to consider the coal strike situation, decided to ask all the trades unions affected by the wages dispute to meet the miners' representatives at an early date, with the object of taking national action with the miners to secure their mutual demands. Secretary Hodges of the miners said this implied a general strike if the other unions agreed.

Under the Women's Legal Status Act passed by the N. S. W. Government, a member of the female sex can be elected and act as a member of the Legislative Assembly, Lord Mayor, or aldermen of the City Council of Sydney, mayor, president, alderman, or councilor of any municipality or shire, a judge of the Supreme or District Courts, chairman of Quarter Sessions, stipendiary or police magistrate, or justice of the peace, or to be admitted as a barrister or conveyancer.

At Brighton, England, last week, resolutions were unanimously adopted by the Labor Party conference expressing admiration for the spirit in which the coal miners had "faced the attacks launched on them by the Government and the owners," and declaring that the struggle had been one in which the interests of labor, as a whole, had been fought for, and not for the miners' interests alone. The conference was asked to provide all possible facilities to help the labor party continue its support to the miners and diminish the suffering in the mining districts.

The strike of the typographical workers constituted the first attempt of the Labor Movement in Hungary to raise its head since the crushing of the Hungarian Soviet Republic by Roumanian, Czecho-Slovak, and Servian troops. That this strike actually broke out was a surprise for all those who have been following events in Hungary, that there was no attempt at the sanguinary crushing of the strike by the White Terrorists' bands, and not even a single strike-breaker was the second surprise. Even the Christian Unions, irrevocably created by the Government, declared their solidarity. During the typographical strike not a single newspaper appeared. The only publication issued was that edited by order of the Government, which was brought out with the aid of University students, who ran true to form and scabbed on the workers, and one or two indispensable typographical workers who were terrorized into working.

Domestic and Naval

The freighter "Western Knight," bound from Norfolk, Va., with coal for Pearl Harbor, H. I., last week, was towed into Charleston, S. C., in distress.

A survey of the havoc caused by the Pueblo flood, compiled by agents of the Santa Fe Railroad, placed the deaths at Pueblo at five hundred.

The United States Shipping Board steamer "Suwied" was in distress with damaged engines, somewhere off Boston, according to radio messages picked up June 23.

Senate investigation of the disturbance in the Mingo, W. Va., coal fields has been finally ordered. The Committee on Labor is expected to begin the inquiry next month.

President Harding has declined to meet a request that Government employes in the District of Columbia be given a half-holiday on Saturday throughout the year. The President is understood to have refused on the ground of economy.

A total of $414,067,440 is carried by the naval appropriation bill under final figures completed by Senate and House conferees. This is an increase of $18,065,000 over the original House appropriations, and almost $80,000,000 less than the Senate provided.

The House of Representatives passed the Porter resolution declaring the war with Germany and Austria terminated. When peace is formally declared the question of a treaty with Germany settling war accounts and providing for amicable relations will be considered.

Towering icebergs within sixty miles of the trans-Atlantic track are causing great concern in shipping circles. Seven giant masses of ice have been sighted by the Coast guard steamer "Seneca." Ships at sea have been warned by wireless of the danger.

Six weeks' repairs will be necessary to place the United States destroyer "Dent" in cruising condition, according to an official report received by the commandant of the eleventh naval district from the Board that examined the craft in the Long Beach drydock. The "Dent" was recently struck by a torpedo during smoke-screen exercises off San Clemente Island.

First steps have been taken by the Board of Fire Commissioners, at San Francisco, to place the two fire boats in commission by July 1. Appointments of two captains, two lieutenants and twenty-four hosemen to form the fire-fighting personnel of the two boats will be made by the commissioners before the first of the month. The operating force for the two boats will consist of four pilots, eight marine engineers and eight marine firemen.

Women gained equal rights with men in Wisconsin when the State Senate accepted the Judiciary Committee's bill removing all legal restrictions governing the sex. The measure has gone through both Houses of the Legislature and is now up before Governor Blaine, who is expected to sign it. The bill supported by the National Women's Party was saved from radical change at the last minute by a 17 to 11 vote in the Senate against adoption of an amendment which would have denied them the right of contract.

A recent report from Stockholm states that most of the passengers and crew of the "Red Prougher," one of the largest steamers plying the Volga River, in Russia, perished one night last week following an explosion on board. The steamer was destroyed by fire. Among the dead were the Archbishop of Nizhni-Novgorod and several professors from the University of Kazan.

The council of the League of Nations has awarded the Aland Islands in the Baltic Sea to Finland. The council decided that the islands should be neutralized from the military standpoint, and the population given the guarantees recommended in the report of the commission. Hjalmer Branting, of Sweden, protested against the decision of the council, but agreed to recognize it.

A dispatch from Manila, dated Wednesday, June 22, states that the "Creole State" is being held there indefinitely to investigate supposed tampering with her engines. Emery dust was found in the bearings. William Dunlevy, second engineer, was arrested. The shipping commissioners said other arrests were probable. Twenty-two men from the University of California are among the crew. The "Creole State" is a 6195-ton steamship.

Japanese and Bolshevik forces recently clashed near Nikolaievsk, and there have been several casualties. It is asserted the Japanese were attacked by the Bolsheviki. Okhotsk, an important town on the western shore of the Sea of Okhotsk, has been occupied by the Bolsheviki. The anti-Bolsheviks have withdrawn to neighboring villages, where the opposing forces are still confronting each other. The situation is calm east of Tomsk, where Bolshevik infantry failed to penetrate.

The steerage traffic in German steamships will be resumed to America in September, when the Hamburg-American Line will put into service its new steamship, the "Bavaria," with a capacity of more than five hundred emigrants, and the rebuilt "Deutschland," carrying 2300 third-class and steerage passengers. Four sister ships of the "Bavaria" under construction soon will be added to the fleet running under the joint agreement of the Hamburg-American Line.

"Go away from me," said the fashionably dressed lady to the street beggar. "I wouldn't have you touch me for ten dollars."

"I was only goin' to touch you for a nickel, lady," was the reply.—Washington Star.

"Say," said the man, as he entered the clothing store. "I bought this suit here less than two weeks ago and it is rusty looking already."

"Well," replied the clothing dealer, "I guaranteed it to wear like iron, didn't I?"

While a reporter was telephoning his story from Sing Sing, a convict hammering on the floor made it hard for the reporter to hear.

"All right, boss," said the convict, "go to it. I got twenty years to finish this job."

A pretty young woman stepped into a music shop in the city the other day. She tripped up to the counter where a new clerk was assorting music and in her sweetest tones asked: "Have you 'Kissed Me in the Moonlight'?"

The clerk turned, looked, and said: "It must have been the man at the other counter; I've only been here a week."

Mr. Brown had just registered and was about to turn away when the clerk asked:

"Beg pardon, but what is your name?"

"Name!" echoed the indignant guest. "Don't you see my signature there on the register!"

"I do," returned the clerk, calmly, "that is what aroused my curiosity."—Everybody's Magazine.

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

EFFECTS OF WAR ON SOLDIERS

Business of Killing Leaves One With Horrible Numbness of Mind

(By T. H. Proctor, from International Journal of Ethics)

We are still too close to the war to estimate its effects accurately. It is easy enough to list the effects, but hard to say which are permanent and which are the results of reaction. There is, for instance, a marked loss of idealism, a general feeling of disillusionment. Time alone can tell whether this is more than the swing of the pendulum. Once again. I can only give general impressions carefully sifted.

People who sentimentalize about war, impress me as failing to see just what war is. War is the business of killing. The question is not whether it is good for men to have physical training such as the army gives, nor whether it is good for men to face hardship and learn through it the joy of comradeship, nor whether it is good for men to lead the simple life. All these are accidentals of war. The real question is whether men are better or worse for having been compelled to kill their fellows.

Let us start with the fact that the essence of war is killing. The army was organized for that one end. It developed our bodies, not because it cared much about our health, but so that we might be strong enough to kill Germans. It took care of the wounded not primarily to save them pain, but to patch them up and send them back to kill more Germans. It provided religion, not because it cared about our souls, but because religion can be a very powerful incentive to killing Germans. And so on throughout the long list of its various activities. They are all for the same object—to kill Germans.

In the business of killing Germans, incidentally, we ourselves were exposed to death, in fact, almost certain to meet it. That fact was impressed upon our minds by seeing our comrades blown to bits. I was struck by the number of men I met who were certain that they would be killed. Death was very near and very real. Only we had to kill as many Germans as possible before it was our turn to "go west."

The Superficial Effects

Let us deal with the more superficial effects first. The physical training was good, but, unfortunately, not a permanent good. Once back in civil life, most of us let the new muscle degenerate into fat and our last state is worse than the first. I do not think the general physical standard and general health of pre-war conscript Germany was anything to boast of. The desirability of physical training is not a good argument for universal training since the army does not care a rap for physical development, except for its own purposes.

It was a good thing to endure hardships and to get back to physical life, though here again, even when we were in the army we accepted gladly all the comforts we could get and we have acquired no permanent taste for bully feed or army stew. Most of us are glad to sleep again in a real bed. Still we have learned how much we can do without and we face the world with a cheerful confidence born of the knowledge that we can hardly be worse off in the future.

There are certain army virtues like punctuality, neatness and cleanliness that are also among the things that do not abide. They were imposed upon us externally and we sloughed them off with the uniform. Perhaps we were not caught sufficiently young and not held long enough. But on the other hand, those who praise war because it instils these virtues, fail to reckon with the phenomenon of reaction. I have recently talked with an old soldier who joined the army as a boy and for seven years was trained in the habit of scrupulous neatness. He was apologizing for not being shaved. His explanation was that he had had so much of that kind of thing in the army, that now he was free to do as he liked, he had a most decided objection to doing all the things he had been made to do.

Effect of Comradeship

The most precious of all was the army comradeship, the general fusion of classes. But I am afraid that this, too, is rapidly passing away. Post-war England shows little evidence of its being a permanent influence in national life. Perhaps I am unduly pessimistic about this, but it is remarkable how quickly the heroes of the trenches have again become "the lower classes." The number of strikes and labor disputes does not encourage the belief that the war has brought about greater solidarity.

It was a good thing to come into vivid contact with a reality greater than ourselves. We shall, perhaps, never quite lose the effect of this and can never be quite as individualistic. We know now that we are not the biggest thing in God's universe. Perhaps we could have learned this in other ways and at less cost. At the same time I do not think there is any sign of religious revival even when religion is interpreted as being distinct from the churches. So far as organized religion is concerned it has lost its hold upon us. The army church parade has done that. And besides we don't feel like it. The church services are not exciting enough. It takes something to interest us these days. More serious than this, is that we do not recognize the cause for which we fought as being God, and, now that we are no longer in the army, we are not so sure about the cause anyhow. The blind fate that flung us into the mess and mashed us all together —that surely was not the will of God. The bottom has fallen out of the Universe. The whole business was so futile and so mad. And it may happen again. We have not been driven to God. We are no longer sure that there is one. We believe in Fate, however, and have learned to be resigned to it—not loving it but joking about it.

You may say it was a good thing to be brought face to face with reality. I'm not so sure about that, either. With the primitive and the inevitable, perhaps, but, after all, is the primitive and the inevitable the more real? Was the aboriginal mess in which we lived more real than the civilization we had built for ourselves? Is the wattle hut more real than the Gothic cathedral? Is the savage more real than the primitive man? If that kind of reality is good, it would be better for us to emigrate to the Balkans where they have it in plenty.

Excitement of War

Of certain effects I have no doubt that they are bad, but am hopeful that they will not be lasting. Army dife in wartime is an alternation of relatively long period of horrible boredom and short periods of super-excitement. We are "fed up to the back teeth" with inactivity and then live a lifetime of excitement in the space of a few hours. As a result we find it hard to resettle in civil life. We have lost habits of industry. We have degenerated in mind and soul. Nothing excites us, our nerves refuse to be excited any more. We are as bored as a man who has seen the Temple of Karnak is when a friend shows him the town postoffice. I met very few men in the army who kept up their interest in things. We didn't want to talk, we didn't want to read, we hated writing letters, we would not trouble to form real friendships. Nearly every theatre in London during the war and the year following staged only musical comedy. There has been a great increase in periodicals of the "Tid Bits" type. Our whole cry is for something light and frothy.

We are drained emotionally. It is not so much that we are hardened as that we have exhausted our capacity to feel. What does another little sorrow matter in a world that has seen so much of it.

We are more responsive to mass impulses, to shout with the crowd and rush with the crowd. We no longer think deeply nor do we care for the subtle distinctions that are the very being of Truth. We had no use for independent thought in the army and we have lost the power to judge for ourselves. We have become accustomed to the fact that the lie is a recognized weapon of warfare, only we call it "propaganda."

The general result is that we are left with a horrible numbness of mind and soul. Let us hope it is only reaction.

To return to the deeper question. War is the business of killing. In order to make the average man fit for his job the army has to remould him. It is a very narrow and well-defined purpose. The mould is so narrow that we have to be forced into it and a good deal has to be trimmed off us to make us fit.

There is a narrowing of viewpoint. Humanitarianism becomes contracted into partisan patriotism. All virtues are defined with reference to the ability to kill Germans. Anything that interferes with that is vice, anything that furthers it is virtue. This nationalization of virtue is, in my opinion, one of the worst effects of war and a great moral loss.

There is a deliberate brutalizing. This means narrowing the modern man down to the primitive savage instincts and stripping him of all refined aesthetic and delicate sentiments, that might interfere with the killing business—including pity and imaginative sympathy. This begins early in the training process. You are brought face to face with a straw-stuffed sack. A sharp and ugly bayonet is put into your hand. You are carefully impressed with the fact that the sack represents a German. The white spot in the center is his liver. It is your business to drive the sharp and ugly bayonet into his liver. To make it more realistic, you have to rush at him with a whoop and emit fearful grunts as you drive it home, twist it around and draw it out again. Naturally, you don't like it. You think that the German has a sensitive liver like your own and that perhaps he feels it. You think that perhaps he might be a quite decent, rather serious-minded sort of chap like those you knew in your student days. Perhaps he has a wife and children depending on him. Perhaps you are sending him to meet God with his soul unprepared. But, bless your life, you soon get over all that sort of squeamishness. Your soul is fed on red, raw meat. The sergeant helps a good deal, too. In a little while you forget all about the nerves of his liver and his wife and children and his immortal soul. The mere sack becomes a real German to you. You lunge and twist with a will, rather priding yourself on the neat way in which you hit the spot. Indeed you become so accustomed to it that when you meet the enemy, the real German is just a straw-stuffed sack—merely that and nothing more.

You have got over your squeamishness. Yes, but it is just that "squeamishness," that recognition that the other fellow is also a man, which is religion, brotherhood, morality and civilization.

One of Many Rifles

And it is not only the German's life that is cheapened. Your own counts for little enough. Nine of you march down from the Headquarters to the training camp—a bank director, a sheep farmer from Australia, a cattleman from Argentine, a student, a lawyer, an author and a musician. You are all distinct individuals. In about a week you are all alike. You have lost your former interests and associations and all that meant life to you. Your very name becomes a number. Your appetite remains, your ability to feel fatigue, and your sex impulses. You are de-personalized, reduced to your primitive elements, to the lowest common denominator. You go eventually to the front where nasty people shoot at you. It is quite on the cards that you will "stop one." You know that so far as the army is concerned you exist only as one of so many millions of effective rifles. That's all you are. You know that all you have hoped for and striven to be is of less value that one inch of ground that might possibly be gained. Everybody else's life is worth just as much as your own. You are in it; whether you like it or not you can't get out. Your officer would have no compunction about shooting you if you tried.

This, I think, is the real effect of war on the individual—it cheapens life. And the result—well, what's the use of anything except what pleasure you can snatch out of the moment? There is not much use in being good if you are going to be killed next week. You might as well have a bit of a fling while you have a chance. It is folly to bother about anything but the pleasures of the senses. In the face of death all values are reduced to that.

You are reduced to the primitive. But, again, I would urge—the primitive is not the real and not the good. The progress of civilization is founded on the rising value of the individual life. War is the direct opposite of civilization and the direct opposite of morality. It is impossible that we can have gone through this experience and be quite the same after it. My general verdict on war is that it leaves us infinitely poorer morally. So far from its being a spiritual uplift it is exactly the reverse.

It is evil—almost unmitigated evil. In certain circumstances it may not be the worst imaginable evil. It may even be a necessary evil.

But for heaven's sake, don't let us call it good

SOVIETS FRATERNIZE

Recent arrivals at Riga from Moscow declare that the world little realizes how closely Soviet Russia is pushing its friendship with the Near East.

In Moscow, now, the Turkish legation occupies one of the most sumptuous of the old palaces, and the personnel, garbed in faultless European clothes, present a strange contrast to the poorly garbed Muscovites. The Afghans and other Near Eastern delegations also occupy luxurious quarters, giving elaborate banquets and otherwise carry on with all the pomp of the old Eastern courts.

Members of Lenin's government are frequently guests at these affairs and entertain the legation personnel equally lavishly in return.

SEAMEN BEFORE A. F. of L.

Resolution No. 134, introduced at the Convention of the American Federation of Labor, by the delegates of the International Seamen's Union of America, was adopted by that body. The resolution provides that the convention "compliment the seamen upon their unchanged and undiminished patriotism, their self-sacrifice to America's interest and their loyalty to the principles of human freedom" and further states, "that because we have not forgotten the service of the seamen during the war, we are hereby reminding the American people of that service and of the promise then made to them to the end that other workers here and elsewhere may realize the true value of such promises and withal has made ready to meet similar treatment."

In discussing the resolution, President Furuseth of the Seamen's Union said in part:

"You are told that this is a question of wages. This is not true. You are told that it is a question of utilizing in a profitable way our investment. That is not true. The whole monetary question involved from the ship's point of view is eleven dollars and two bits in a thousand—so ridiculously small that it cannot influence the real situation at all. The real thing they want to do, although they strenuously deny it, is to drive the American from the sea, because they know—though they do not talk aloud about it—that upon the Americans remaining at sea and upon the development of a high grade of skill will depend whether America can remain at sea or not.

"It is true that through the law that was enacted, the La Follette Act, the American has come to sea. Now they want the law destroyed, they want the organization destroyed to get rid of the American in order that they may be able to buy the vessels for the price of junk. And so it being a secret, a quiet and insidous means that they have adopted, we have a right to call it torpedoing."

"Practically every man in this hall is a skilled man of some kind, and he knows that without skill competition with those who are skilled is impossible. At our convention, depending upon the promises that had been made by the Government, by the shipowners and by ourselves as organized seamen, during the war, and which promises brought the American to sea—depending upon those things we endeavored to bring about a condition of a constantly increasing skill in the American seaman. That seemed to be the climax of the whole situation, because with the policy they have adopted the development of skill is an impossibility.

"If anybody is to be employed at sea, regardless of any other thing except his faithfulness to the idea that unionism is a crime, that co-operation and co-ordination is wrong, if that is to be the only condition upon which employment can be obtained; if it is to be absolutely promiscuous, then there will come a period of such deterioration as to make the American vessel the most unsafe thing that is sailing on the world's waters.

"Under that condition, of course, competition with other nations is an impossibility, and competition with the real competitor, Great Britain, is an absurdity, because they have arranged for a working together, co-operation of the Government, of the private shipowner on shore and the personnel at sea. Under those circumstances we cannot agree to the condition that they want to impose. It is very possible that they may, for the time being, succeed in imposing it; it could hardly be expected that a lot of mudsills, no matter what ideals they may be obsessed with, could take up successfully a struggle against such awful odds as is made up of an international shipping federation and the United States Government rolled into one.

"I have little hope of any success in this struggle. The men will not quit it, and they are right, they have no right to quit it until they have proven to at least part of the American people that they are honest and sincere. But as far as taking the order and agreeing to policies of this kind, I want to say to you, gentlemen here— I am not standing in the court room at Indianapolis or any other place—I will not do that which is essentially wrong although it sends me to jail and although it withers my right hand. And so I have informed some of the officials of the Government."

SHARK FISHING AN INDUSTRY

There is still a chance for old-time "shell backs" to get even with their natural enemy, the shark.

A new industry is about to be developed which will undoubtedly furnish a little excitement, if not remuneration.

Press dispatches state that a plan is underway by business and shipping men of Hawaii to secure some of the small tonnage lying idle in San Francisco bay and other waters of the Pacific Coast and utilize them in the shark industry in Hawaiian waters. Representatives of this newly-formed organization will arrive at San Francisco shortly to purchase several vessels for this purpose.

Sharks are to be found in large numbers around the waters of the Hawaiian Islands, and it is the plan of the company to erect a plant and place these animals and their by-products on the market.

The skins of these fish have a high commercial value and it is stated that none of the shark will be wasted. The proposed industry will also serve to solve the problem of a plentiful supply of fertilizer for the sugar plantations in Hawaii.

JAPANESE MERCHANT SHIPS

According to a recent issue of the Trans-Pacific, the results of an investigation concluded by the Department of Communications of Japan during January, 1921, show that there are under Japanese registry a total of 2933 steamers, representing 3,012,447 tons gross. The figures include ships of twenty or more tons. There were 750 vessels of over one thousand tons each, with a gross tonnage of 2,553,542. Ships ranging between five thousand and six thousand tons were by far the most important, and of these there are 114, with a gross tonnage of 648,902.

Our Australian and British comrades have linked up. It's our next move.

NOTED EXPLORER RETURNS

Captain Roald Amundsen recently arrived in Seattle, after an ice-locked winter in the Arctic. His exploring ship, the "Maude," will be towed to Seattle for repairs, and, before the end of summer, and with a new propeller replacing that torn from her by last winter's ice, will set out again on a new attempt to drift to the North Pole.

The explorer took with him to Nome two girls, whom he will send to Norway for schooling. One was the daughter of Charles Carpenter, a Siberian trader, and the other a Chuchuk Eskimo girl.

Amundsen's discovery of the Northwest Passage is commemorated in San Francisco, the ship in which he made that voyage, the "Gjoa," being maintained in the Golden Gate Park as a monument.

The "Gjoa's" voyage led to the magnetic North Pole.

Amundsen was picked up after a bitter winter by the trading schooner "Herman," of H. Liebes & Co., San Francisco fur dealers.

The rescue of Amundsen was the second such feat to the credit of the commander of the Herman, Captain Pedersen. Some years ago Pedersen took to Nome Captain Bartlett, commander of the ill-fated Karluk, flagship of the Stefansson Arctic expedition.

Amundsen, in the Maude, wintered off Cape Serge and was picked up at East Cape, Siberia, by the Herman.

Dispatches to Nome, Alaska, were the first definite word from Amundsen since he left there last summer after taking on supplies. On that visit to Nome he lost part of his crew by desertion.

With the discovery of the South Pole to his credit, Amundsen set out for the North Pole from Norway in 1918, expecting that the Maude would be carried to the pole by the drift of ice floes.

For nineteen months nothing was heard of him. During that period the Maude drifted from the Atlantic to the Pacific along the north edge of Europe and Asia, a voyage comparing to that through the Northwest Passage.

Reaching the Behring Sea last summer, Amundsen took the Maude to Nome, rested and sailed north just before winter, being frozen in north of Wrangell Island, off Siberia.

He hoped to be caught by a current which he believes flows from Siberia across the pole to Greenland. It was this current that Fridtjof Nansen tried to follow in 1895, but Nansen abandoned the plan when he found the current too slow.

Amundsen spent last winter in the company of a native and three white companions.

Amundsen's belief in the Arctic current was based in part on experiments made with casks by H. Liebes & Co., at the request of the United States Government.

Years ago the firm had dozens of casks thrown overboard in the Pacific Arctic. Some were later picked up on the other side of the pole. This was taken as proof of the existence of the current. The experiment indicated that the cross-pole flow took five years. Amundsen took supplies for that period when he last left Nome.

The present voyage of Amundsen, begun in 1918, has brought him the distinction of being the first to circumnavigate the globe through the narrow waters between the Arctic ice pack and the coasts of America, Asia and Europe.

FIRST AIR LIFEBOAT

Modern inventions are making a voyage at sea as safe as lying in your bed ashore.

The first lifeboat of the air, which has been built with great secrecy, is to be launched at London soon.

After the official trials it will go through a series of tests with the fleet. If it proves to be satisfactory, a large number of the craft on a much larger scale will be constructed.

The design is the outcome of three years of secret research and tests. The flying lifeboat will be able to reach a vessel in distress at a speed of more than one hundred miles an hour, and it is claimed that it will be able to ride through the roughest storm with the confident safety of an Atlantic liner. The boats are able to taxi along the water.

The seaworthiness is to be tested by sending the first experimental ship out with the navy, where it is to remain at sea for several days without any "mother ship."

The wing span of the one now nearing completion is 140 feet. Safety in the most violent sea will come from the resilience of the hull, which is in one piece from stem to stern. When this hull strikes a huge wave it gives way slightly in much the same way that a pneumatic tire does when it strikes an obstacle on the road.

WELDING THE LINKS

The desire for greater solidarity in the ranks of labor is continually made manifest by the workers of Great Britain.

Various trades unions whose members are engaged mainly in road, river, canal and dock transport have been negotiating since July, 1920, concerning an amalgamation under the name of the Transport and General Workers' Union, and on May 11, 1921, the first delegates' conference of the new union was held. The unions which have obtained the necessary majority in favor of the amalgamation include the National Amalgamated Coal Workers' Union, the United Vehicle Workers' Union, the National Union of Vehicle Workers, the Amalgamated Society of Watermen, Lightermen and Bargemen, the Labor Production League, the Dock, Wharf, Riverside and General Workers' Union, and the Amalgamated Society of Horsemen and Motormen.

A provisional committee was directed to proceed immediately with the preparation of rules and to take the necessary steps to bring the new union into being. It was resolved that every effort should be made to inaugurate the new union by October 1, or at the latest by January 1, 1922.

Take from man the right to quit work at his own pleasure, and you take from him that attribute which, next to the right to light itself, marks the difference between the human and the lower animal.

Pacific Coast Marine

The schooner "Fred J. Wood" is scheduled to load lumber at Bellingham for Port Allen.

The barkentine "Forest King" is loading 1,500,000 feet of lumber at Grays Harbor for San Pedro.

The lockout of Marine workers has caused the Los Angeles police force to be placed on a twelve-hour shift.

The captain of the Japanese tramp steamer "Port Said Maru" was fined $1200, on June 24, for permitting six stowaways to land at Portland, Oregon. Five of the stowaways were recaptured.

An attempt is being made by the Canadian Government Merchant Marine to capture trade in the South Pacific Islands, and every steamer outbound from British Columbia now calls at one or more ports among these islands while en route to Australia. This trade has heretofore gone to San Francisco.

On her last northern trip, the "Admiral Sebree" broke down about twelve miles from San Francisco while headed for that port. Red stack towboats were sent to the assistance of the steamer and towed her to dock. Trouble with the condensors and inexperienced engine-room staff was reported as responsible for the breakdown.

Lumber carriers loading on the Sound include the barkentine "Anne Comyn" at Everett, taking 2,000,000 feet for San Pedro; the sailing schooner "Watson A. West," loading 1,000,000 feet at the Stimson mill in Ballard for San Pedro, and the sailing schooner "Vancouver," loading 1,200,000 feet at the Stimson mill in Ballard for Callao.

The first shipment of German potash salts to arrive on the Pacific Coast since the World War was brought into San Francisco on the Danish steamer "Transvaal." The vessel arrived here from Copenhagen. The potash salts were consigned to Meyer, Wilson & Co., and will be used for fertilizing purposes. The shipment consisted of five hundred tons.

"The James Rolph," declared by shipping men to be the only three-skysail yard ship operating under the American flag, arrived at San Francisco last week from Iquique in ballast. Following the lead of five other sailing vessels to arrive in this port during the present week, "The James Rolph" came into port with all sails set. The voyage from the Chilean port was made in fifty-two days. "The James Rolph" is typical to the old American clipper ship.

The United States Shipping Board has steamship companies operating in the intercoastal trade to discontinue all special arrangements whereby they have been giving the shippers on the Pacific Coast the benefit of rates other than the flat steamer tariffs from dock to dock. The order means that it will be no longer possible for steamer lines to apply the New York rate from outlying points.

With 117 passengers and 2500 tons of general cargo, the Union liner "Tahiti" left San Francisco on her regular run to Wellington and Sydney. Among the passengers was W. F. Adler, a moving picture director, who is on his way to Papeete and the Marquesas Islands to make arrangements for filming a motion picture there. His company of eighteen will leave here August 20 on the "Marama."

Labor Demands Freedom

No other group of citizens discuss and pass judgment on such a variety of subjects of interest to the people as do the organized workers.

Declarations by the Denver A. F. of L. convention, just adjourned, are in line with the usual policy of labor. These are sufficient answer to phrase makers, cultists and self-styled "liberals" who affect a patronizing attitude toward wage earners while deploring that "labor has no constructive program."

These critics take themselves quite seriously. They talk of "serving the public." They class themselves with educators, physicians, surgeons, engineers, investigators and other scientists who give their lives to their fellow men without hope or plaudit or reward.

They cannot understand when labor talks of liberty. "What does labor want?" they innocently inquire, while wage earners thunder against industrial autocracy, labor injunctions, judicial usurpation and legislative encroachment.

To these critics, democracy is a gesture, a pose; a thing for crowd-rousing and vote catching.

The right to organize, to have a voice in working conditions and be represented by persons of their own chosing, is of first importance to the workers.

If labor's only gain was the voice in industry it now possesses it can present a constructive program incomparable in history.

No other movement, no other program, raised the workers from the status of serfs. Through their efforts they have fought upward, establishing new standards and new life relations while dragging with them the very men who talk of "constructive programs."

Labor's voice in production and distribution must be universally accepted.

This is labor's foundation and it cannot be swept aside while the cause for its existence remains.

Fundamentally, labor has presented no new program during the long existence of the A. F. of L.

Demands on secondary matters change with a developed public opinion, but labor places industrial freedom through organization of the workers in the front rank.

This is its major note today, as it was in 1881.

This disappoints the seeker for novel things. It is irksome to sensationalists and publicity seekers who shun the drudgery of combat against entrenched wrong.

The organized workers know there is no royal road to freedom.

Only through unity and mental development will the workers win. If they will not help themselves, no one else will.

Agitate! Educate! Organize!

What Co-operation Means

The term "co-operation" is derived from two Latin words—"co," meaning together, and "opero," which means work, says the All-American Co-operative Commission, in its weekly news service.

"Co-operation is working together. That is very simple, and yet it contains a truth so profound that men have not yet fathomed its possibilities. The great institutions of civilization are all based on co-operation. Without it there could be no family life, no churches, no schools, no government; society would be plunged into the abyss of hopeless anarchy, and human progress would be impossible.

"But what if we carry co-operation to its logical conclusion, and insist that there is no more reason why men should not work together for the common good in industry and international relationships than in the home, the school and the maintenance of government?

"What would happen to industrial autocracy, to priviliged monopoly, to war? The crucial issue before world civilization today is just this: Shall we cling to the jungle law of competition and continue to cut each other's throats, or shall we strive to construct civilization on an enduring co-operative basis? This is not a dream. It is hard-headed realism. Unmitigated competition is leading straight to more war, more industrial strife, more social ruin. By co-operation alone can men work happily and peacefully together to create a higher civilization."

Right to Organize

Trade unionists are asking how many times the United States Supreme Court will re-hear the case known as American Steel Foundries vs. Tri-City Central Trades Council.

The right of workers to unite and peacefully picket is put squarely before the Court, which has heard the case twice, and now orders that it be fought all over again.

Causes for the suit began in April, 1914, when the company, a New Jersey corporation, operating extensive steel mills in this city, cut wages and refused to arbitrate the question. A strike was ordered, and the Tri-City Central Trades Council assisted the strikers. The company secured a Federal injunction which held that the central body is an "unlawful combination" and that there is no such thing as peaceful picketing. The United States Circuit Court of Appeals refused to sustain these views, and the company appealed to the United States Supreme Court.

The attorneys for the union indicate the far-reaching effect of this case by this statement in their brief:

"If the argument of complainant is logical—operation of plant interfered with because of picketing, gives a property right—then what is to prevent the steel mill from selling the 'property right' it has in its working men to another company?

"The fallacy of such a position is too palpable for further comment. The humanitarian spirit that is prevailing in our nation, and the demand for social justice which has taken hold of the hearts of men and women, declare that the brutal doc-

THEY WON'T STAY

Recent Shipping Board statistics proudly boast of 80 per cent Americans now composing the personnel of our merchant service. If these figures were entirely accurate at the inception of the lockout, they are subject to serious contradiction at this time. It would be impossible to compute the figures inasmuch as all the laws and rulings pertaining to manning of vessels have been ignored or violated, in efforts to make a showing at keeping vessels on the move without competent crews.

The fact is undisputable that Americans were seeking the sea as a calling; but the causes were contained in a desire to serve the country during the war, and the conditions resulting from partial enforcement of the La Follette Seamen's Act.

Now that the patriotic incentive is not so great, and the protective provisions of the law are set at naught, the drift from the sea will be just as heavy, if not more pronounced, than was the movement towards a sea calling.

American boys will not take kindly to the conditions which private owners and the Shipping Board—as at present constituted—seek to impose upon them. At its best, seafaring is a miserable existence. All the comforts and pleasures of modern society are denied to seamen. None of the benefits of modern civilization are enjoyed, and our lives are bound up to a great extent within the confines of a vessel's rails.

Man is a gregarious animal, imbued with strong desires to fraternize, and seafarers are excluded from that natural desire by the lack of opportunity for social intercourse, especially with members of the opposite sex. The chances for a young seaman to become acquainted with a sweetheart are very few, and if he does his standards and conditions preclude the possibilities of happy marital relations.

It is impossible for seafarers to keep in touch with the times, to enjoy the delights of operatic music, and even the diversion of theater and movies is restricted by the demands of the calling. Higher education and the arts are out of reach, and the refining influence of women's love and ministrations can never brighten the lonesome existence of those who go down to the sea in ships.

Like bachelor seals, they drift from port to port, ever with unsatisfied longing for true love or friendship.

Until seamen are recognized and given equal opportunity with workers ashore the calling will hold no inducements to self-respecting young Americans. They may be enticed into making a trip through misunderstanding, or under false impressions; but the only way to make their stay at sea permanent is to make the conditions aboard ship and status under the law equal to that of any other trade or profession.

A RUSTIC DREAM

Suffering restlessness, due to the prolonged vacation enforced upon the seamen by the shipowners, one of our most adaptable comrades decided to take an apprenticeship as a "jungle buzzer"; therefore he hied himself to the domains of the brindle stiff and gay cat.

He was working south through the San Joaquin Valley and had put in a hard day's graft for Johnny Farmer at the amusing pastime of knocking off canteloupes.

The height of his roof was limitless, a beautiful blue, dotted with myriads of twinkling lights. The perfume of new-mown hay and grappo assailed his nostrils and wafted him into the land of slumber, where he dreamed on—to the tune of a balky buzz saw. Numerous insects explored his clothes and several flies disappeared into the chasm from which the roaring volume of sound came forth. And he was carried by the "spirits" to the year 3000 and beheld the wonders of the future.

He stood upon a spot which had once been a peninsula and observed a learned archeologist unearth the remains of an ancient building, upon the portals of which was inscribed the hieroglyphics, "San Francisco Labor Temple"; and he saw other great wonders.

The skulls of men lay scattered around the fallen temple, indicating that they had been overcome by some vast upheaval or did not have sufficient intelligence to get out of the wet.

An enlightened worker picked up one of the skulls and attempted to examine as to the solidity thereof, but notwithstanding the fact that hardening of metals had become a completed science, the skull substance resisted even the most powerful of drills. It was of a hardness the like of which had never been equaled, and was, therefore, transferred to the academies of sciences for full investigation and analysis.

After subjection to the most powerful magnifying rays, an infinitesimal vacuum was observed in what was calculated to have constituted brain space in the domes of this extinct race.

A huge grasshopper landed on the chin of the sleeper, causing a slight interruption, and then to a higher nasal chord the vision continued to where the pages of the archeologists' records were disclosed.

A phantasmogoria of letters and figures finally disclosed to the sleeper the following, written as record of the peculiar skulls found in the long-destroyed temple of twentieth century wisdom:

"Twentieth century labor leader (biped; genus sus, afofl-cus). Was known to be prolific at the beginning of the twentieth century. Their policy was one of truckling to cheap and oily politicians. They were thrown down hard by that element about 1921 and an awakened rank and file began to assert themselves, which resulted in the type becoming extinct very shortly thereafter."

The whistle of No. 50 aroused the sleeper and he just had time to shake the hay off and scramble into a side-door Pullman, where he remained in deep thought until arrival at Fresno.

DOLLAR ON THE JOB

Many of the ways of shipowners will always be a mystery to seamen, but at present we are particularly at a loss to understand what can be the motives which have impelled the steam schooner owners of this Pacific Coast to take their vessels out of commission and to keep them deteriorating in the waters of San Francisco bay.

There seems to be quite a demand for lumber, with remunerative rates prevailing for transportation, but the old lumber carriers are as neatly tied up as if there was not a stick in sight.

Several sailing craft are beginning to emerge from long periods of idleness, and it is a very noticeable fact that Canadian companies are awakening to the opportunities which this peculiar inertia of American shipping presents.

That particular shipping firm, whose house flag and funnels are decorated with the dollar sign, are extremely active in carrying lumber from British Columbia to Southern California ports, and recently some very large carriers have been inducted into this trade.

The fact has been apparent for some time past that the president of the Dollar Line has wielded powerful influence over the policies of American shipowners, and we cannot believe that inherent characteristics would permit oversight of an opportunity to take advantage of the confiding American operators.

The anomalous situation confronting us is to the effect that while the steam schooner owners refuse to pursue their usual trade the Dollar vessels are getting away with millions of feet of lumber, not only to the detriment of our coastwise trade, but to the everlasting injury to our lumber interests of the Northwest.

Of late years Mr. Robert Dollar has been an active agitator for a policy that would—if pursued to its conclusion—result in tying up the last American vessel, no matter how it may work to the advantage of his British registered fleet.

He has consistently preached the doctrine of making hay while the sun shines; therefore we must conclude that the vigorous old gentleman must sometimes be inclined to practice what he preaches.

How his preachments can be of benefit to American shipowners and American industries is beyond our limited comprehension.

Always demand the Union Label!

KEEPING THEM BUSY

As a disciplinary measure, or for lack of respect to political prestige, it has been a common occurrence for members of the San Francisco Police Department, at times, to find themselves relegated to beats out in the fog belt, where the herding of stray goats constitutes the most exciting method of passing away the long hours of watch. Since open shop warfare has been declared in this city, however, the goat herders have been chasing sea gulls and wharf rats along our extensive waterfront. The bitter cup of the unpolitical "harness bull," however, has now been filled to overflowing.

Dame Rumor has it bruited about that the Dale-Tallac Hotel on Ellis street, near Powell, has thrown out its regular guests and has been transformed into a hostelry exclusively for the accommodation of strikebreakers.

In order to assure that the peace of this "quiet and exclusive" neighborhood shall not be disturbed—in the event that these delectable (?) gunmen should start to cut each other's throats—a number of "harness bulls" have been told off to maintain the security of the public.

To give them all the credit that is their due, we do not believe that they enjoy herding scabs in the uptown tenderloin district any more than goats in the fog belt or sea gulls on the waterfront; especially so as they realize that the gentry of their solicitude are mere "fly by nights" and could not be of any assistance at the polls in the interest of further salary raise or in resistance to a cut.

ORGANIZE RIGHT

Recently we were given an example of the true spirit of unity by the Federacion Obrera de Chile, at Mejillones, when the secretary of that organization forwarded to the JOURNAL the affidavit of Arne Mikol Arneson. Our Chilean fellow-workers refused to unload the ship until the mate, who was accused of brutalities to the crew, had been discharged from the vessel.

In accordance with their previous good record, the port workers of Buenos Aires furnished us with a lesson in solidarity in the case of the "Martha Washington," when they acted with promptness and effect in defense of some of our Atlantic comrades. For such display of spirit and fellowship, the employers of Argentine are being urged, by the capitalists of other nations, to an attack upon the Argentine Union.

Now it is up to us to remember the actions of our fellow-workers in the South American ports, and to cultivate the spirit so nobly displayed.

International capital operates through its Chambers of Commerce, consular agents, etc., in all parts of the world.

We must operate through our unions and labor representatives in like manner. We must be prepared to meet combination with organization if we hope to successfully meet the attacks of the oppressor.

"In moving against this giant wrong, which denies to labor access to the natural opportunities for the employment of labor, we move against the cause of poverty."—Henry George.

A. F. of L. MEXICAN POLICY

Expressing the hope that Mexico could soon be accorded recognition by the United States Government, the American Federation of Labor convention approved the action of the American delegates to the recent Pan-American Federation of Labor convention.

The report of the Committee on International Labor Relations, to which the subject was referred, made the following report, which was adopted unanimously:

"Your committee finds the report of the third annual convention of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, submitted to us by the Council, most interesting and instructive, and we commend both the Council and the delegation which represented the A. F. of L. in that convention.

"The American Federation of Labor has from the first been the ardent champion of freedom for the Mexican people, and it is to us a source of the deepest gratification to know that our hopes are finding fruition.

"We commend the report of the Pan-American convention to the careful, thoughtful reading of every delegate. Mexico has been and is beset with probems of the most difficult nature. Her working people struggle and labor under grave and complex burdens. We can only offer our help and encouragement. The fundamentals of solution must be the fruit of the thought of the Mexican workers and of their experience.

"We are mindful of the greed which still seeks satisfaction in the rich resources of Mexico, and insofar as that greed emanates from our country we must feel bound to place ourselves in opposition to it.

"It is not going beyond the bounds of good citizenship to express here the hope that relations between our Government and the Mexican Government soon may be re-established on a basis of honor and respect, in order that our people may have that official contact and communication which is essential in modern society.

"We believe that an early adoption of such a course, re-establish the relations of the two nations on a sound and friendly basis, will do much to bring speedy solution to other problems of importance which, in the absence of official friendly relations, are less likely of speedy and amicable settlement.

"In addition, we believe there should be the closest contact between the movements of the workers in both countries. The Mexican workers have a bona fide trade union movement, as the report of our delegation points out. To the end that there may be a better understanding and a more harmonious relationship where it is so essential, we recommend that the American Federation of Labor keep in closest possible relations, through correspondence, with the Mexican Federation of Labor."

The signs of the times are encouraging, for the Journal office is being flooded with correspondence from members of the Seamen's Unions, and also from our fellow-workers ashore, the longshoremen in particular, who are ardently advocating the adoption of a policy which will eliminate the misunderstandings of years and prove of mutual benefit to all concerned. The start is good.

RUSSIANS SHIPPING TIMBER

The first consignment of timber from Soviet Russia, for sawing in the mills at Riga, Latvia, was floated down the Duna River from Soviet Russia and arrived at Riga on April 28. It consisted of fifteen rafts, with 3270 logs. It is stated that the Bolsheviki have 120,000 logs within the Latvian frontier on their way down the Duna to Riga. The timber consists of pine and fir and is reported of good quality. An agreement is now being concluded with the Latvian sawmills for the working up of the timber for Bolshevist account.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

ASSERT YOUR RIGHTS

Mr. Silax B. Axtell furnishes some very educational and interesting material in the following correspondence:

June 17, 1921.

Silas B. Axtell, Attorney, New York.

Dear Sir: I am a member of the Marine Firemen, Oilers and Watertenders' Union of the Atlantic and Gulf Union and have possession of your very useful book, "The Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen," and would like to know if a seaman who leaves a British ship in the United States can be imprisoned when he lands again in England. Can they take him off a ship flying the American Flag? I know they have been taking men off the ships and punishing them with imprisonment from one to three months and in some cases placing fines of £20 on them. I left a British ship here last September and I have been sailing in American ships since. I am a full member of the above Union and I have had an intention of going to look for a ship that crosses to England to see my wife and children and I would be thankful to you to let me know, for in the Treaties on page 44 it says: "Seamen deserting here not punishable abroad." I have intention papers since I came here and it's my full intention to become a true citizen of the United States, and when my means allow to bring my wife and children to this country. In the meantime, if possible, I would like to sail in a ship to England and see them. That is why I ask your advice, because I honestly tell you I have never been in a prison and I would not like to think they would put me in prison for staying in this country's ships.

THOMAS CARNEY.
June 22, 1921.

Mr. Thomas Carney.

Dear Sir: I have your letter of June 19. You have stated the facts very clearly. If they are putting a man in jail in Great Britain for deserting British ships in America, I have no knowledge of it. If a seaman on a British ship demands half wages in the United States in accordance with Section 4530 and the demand is not complied with and he then leaves the British ship, it is not desertion. At any rate, any seaman who does desert from a British ship or any other ship in America is not committing an offense that is punishable by a fine or imprisonment. The most he can be punished for is forfeiture of wages and clothes left on board the ship.

By the law of England and the United States, the character of a criminal act is determined by the law of the place where it is committed. Congress of the United States having abolished all treaty regulations with regard to seamen on foreign ships. The British authorities and British ships when they enter our ports are subject entirely to the law of the port.

Further, it can be urged and should be in behalf of any seaman, who is arrested in England for an act committed here that the British courts are without jurisdiction to punish. See the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, Dillon vs. Strathearn, 252 U. S. 348, and Nielson vs. Rhine, 248 U. S. 205. There should be no prosecution in England or any other foreign country. If there is, then it is up to the people of those countries to assert this. That is all I can say. If you are in an American ship when you visit England and as a member of the crew of this vessel, take the precaution to have your passport with you and get a special letter from the master stating that you are a member of the crew of the vessel and ask for permission to visit your family. That letter and that passport should protect you and if the British authorities seize you, you let me know by some means and I will start something that will put your name in history.

I assume that you have your first papers. Have those in your pocket when you are arrested. Get word to any labor man and have him communicate with me. That is all.

Yours very truly,
SILAS B. AXTELL.
9 State Street, New York.

HOUNDING THE SEAMEN

Truly the path of locked out seamen is strewn with thorns.

Confronted with unconstitutional rulings by officials and police authorities of Atlantic ports, to go back to work or get out of town, when the seamen attempt to obey the latter phrase of the dictum, every conceivable effort is made to prevent them from exercising their citizen rights. They are subjected to every indignity possible.

W. F. Cattell, representing the Marine Cooks and Stewards of Galveston, Texas, submits the following clipping from the Times-Picayune, dated June 23, 1921, which is enlightening:

"Idle Sailors Flock to Harvest Fields

"Arrest Eighty-six at Shreveport for Riding on Freight Train

"Shreveport, La., June 22.—Eighty-six strangers, nearly all claiming to be members of the Sailors' Union, who were taken off a northbound Kansas City Southern freight train today by policemen, acting on advices of the railway company that they boarded the train at Port Arthur, Tex., and were riding without pay or permission, were given a substantial dinner at the expense of the city and then were transported, free, to Blanchard, an oil field town of this parish, to get a new start on their journey to the wheat fields, according to Police Chief Bazer.

"The men said they were en route to Kansas wheat farms, and left Port Arthur as the result of a lockout which threw them out of employment May 1. Local wholesale houses provided trucks for the trip to Blanchard. All the men, following their arrest, were marched to police headquarters, where Bertillion measurements were taken. They were also searched, but no pistols were found, though some carried razors.

"Spokesmen for the men said before leaving Port Arthur they had a message from the United States Employment Bureau at Hutchinson, Kan., assuring them of remunerative employment through the harvest season.

"'We could not stay in Port Arthur and starve,' they said, 'and we could not get away by water, because the ships are all in the hands of non-union men and we were not allowed to approach them. We had been told that the railroad companies would not molest us if we were en route to the wheat fields to work, and with this belief in mind, we boarded the freight train and struck out.'

"Special Agent A. B. Solomon of the Kansas City Southern Railroad, today reported seventy-five men being ejected from freight trains on that line at Shreveport, Vivien and Lewis, La., yesterday, and the number trying to 'beat' their way increasing daily, estimating the number between Port Arthur and Texarkana for the last several weeks at seventy-five daily."

Although the substantial dinner and aids to transportation show the right kind of American spirit, the effect is destroyed by the indignity of treatment as hardened criminals.

Why the Bertillion measurements, etc.? Is it necessary to heap the last dregs of degradation upon the devoted heads of Americans who are only maintaining their principles and exercising their rights? Many of these boys are of self-respecting character, of good, old American stock, and they must feel their debasement keenly. They engaged in the American Merchant Service at the call of the nation's requirements, and found when that necessity had passed that they were to be made subjects of degradation. The manner in which these conditions will affect their future is problematical, but it shows a serious impediment to character building for young America, for which greedy shipping interests and an arrogant Bureau is responsible.

DECREASE HITS TUGS

The United States Railroad Labor Board has extended its wage reduction order, effective July 1, to practically every large railroad in the country. No change from the average 12 per cent reduction granted 104 carriers on June 1 was made by the decision. The new order affects 210 roads.

The new decision will make a reality of the estimated four hundred million dollars annual savings expected by the roads.

The decision, drawn as an addendum to the reduction order of June 1, adds practically every railroad in the class 1 division to the original list of 104 roads authorized to make the 12 per cent reduction.

Following the 12 per cent reduction, which was generally unsatisfactory to the roads, the carriers returned with added insistence that the 1920 wage award be wiped out. The board, however, would not change its scale.

While no definite returns have been announced from the referendum being taken by all the railway unions on acceptance or rejection of the 12 per cent cut, it was expected that conferences at Chicago July 1 would agree to accept the Board's decision.

The new order involves practically all classes of employes.

The only change in the rates of reduction made by this decision was in the case of some marine workers at Eastern ports.

All Classes Cut

About one-half of the roads included were parties to the original decision, the duplication resulting from the fact that many roads did not include all classes of employes in their first petitions.

Rates of reduction for several minor classes of employes were added to the order today.

Chefs and restaurant workers, dining car employes, laundry workers and porters were named for reductions of 60 per cent of the increases granted since the roads were returned to private control March 1, 1920.

Rates established for the marine workers included:

New York: Captains, $200; pilots, $180; engineers, $190; assistant engineers, $180; firemen, $140; deck hands, $125; stewards, $125.

Philadelphia: Ferry pilots and engineers, $170.30; extra pilots and extra engineers, $130.32; firemen, $118.64; wheelsmen, $110.07; deckhands, $107.20; bridgemen, $107.20; firemen's helpers, $107.20.

deckhands, $90.84; floatmen, $90.84; bridgemen, $90.84.

Hampton Roads: (Ferries) pilots, $195; (tugboats) pilots, $192; mates, $145.

SEEING THE LIGHT

The following resolutions from the San Pedro branch, S. U. O. P., and the local of I. L. A. at that port shows that the marine workers there are desirous of more harmonious relations.

They are beginning to realize that in order to withstand the attacks of combined capital a more perfect solidarity must be displayed by the workers.

Whereas, we know from observation and experience that members of the International Longshoremen's Association of San Pedro are in favor of giving the seamen every assistance possible, even to the extent of a sympathetic strike, provided they could get some assurance that they would be considered in the final settlement; therefore, be it

Resolved, that the San Pedro Branch of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific in regular meeting assembled request the officers of our Union in San Francisco to submit some proposition to all branches for their approval or rejection, whereby we could arrive at a closer affiliation and have a working agreement with the Pacific Coast District of the I. L. A.; and, be it further

Resolved that the copies of this resolution be mailed to every branch of the Sailors' Union by the Strike Committee of San Pedro.

Whereas, the Maritime Unions have been on strike against a reduction of wages since May 1st, and

Whereas, the employers in attempting to break this strike are trying to use longshoremen to do work formerly performed by members of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, thereby causing friction between the I. L. A. and the Sailors' Union; and,

Whereas, such conduct is a disgrace to the labor movement in the United States; and,

Whereas, unity and closer affiliation must be maintained between the Seamen and Longshoremen in our dealings with the Shipowners' Association; therefore, be it

Resolved, that the Secretary of the Pacific Coast District. I. L. A., issue orders for a referendum of all locals to find out whether they are in favor of making a working agreement with the Seamen whereby we could deal collectively with the employer.

FOR SOLIDARITY

Portland, Ore., June 30, 1921.

Editor SEAMEN'S JOURNAL:

Dear Sir and Brother:—As an ex-sailor and a longshoreman at present, I would beg space for a few comments which may be of interest to the workers of both vocations.

There is no doubt that from the very beginning of the Seamen's lockout the general attitude of the longshoremen has been that of sympathy. But under the present system sympathy counts for little; it is action that produces the desired results; and such action is not forthcoming.

One of the many factors which contributes to the passive attitude of the longshoreman is the fact that in the history of both internationals there has never been an instance where a bona fide effort was made to form a close alliance for defensive purposes. It is true that a few earnest individuals in both organizations carried that idea in their minds for a long time, but their efforts, whatever they might have been in that direction, fell through unsupported by an apathetic and hostile majority which did not see what was for their own good.

Our mutual relations also have to be reckoned with. They are none too good. Sailors justly claim that longshoremen in the past scabbed on them, and longshoremen as justly claim the opposite. Only lately when walking past the pickets on the waterfront I overheard remarks by one of them about longshoremen scabbing. One of our group flung back: "Yes, but what did you sailors do when we were on strike in 1916?" No. answer. "Pot can't call kettle black."

Such relations lead to mutual estrangement instead of co-operation. But the time is coming when not only longshoremen and seamen, but railroadmen as well will realize the dire need of a triple alliance of the transportworkers in order to more effectively resist the encroachments of our masters. The very nature of their work is driving them towards that realization. Railroadmen transport goods by rail, longshoremen load them on ships and sailors transport them by water.

The seamen are at present putting up a lone fight, a brave fight to retain what rightly belongs to them; the railroadmen may fight (rumblings of the impending strife are already heard) just as bravely; even the longshoremen, unprepared as they are, may muster their ranks to present a bold front to resist the oncoming cut. But will these three organizations win, fighting their battles separately? Hardly.

In the place of longshoremen on the Pacific Coast one would hesitate whether to accept the impending cut graciously or to give battle. That we are weaker, economically, than the seamen is self-evident to anyone who grasps the situation. The splendid solidarity displayed by the Sailors' Union is yet to be demonstrated by the longshoremen. The suicidal, individual policy of "every local for itself and the devil take the hindmost" is still prevailing. How much of this policy is due to secret machinations of our masters, and how much to the individualistic philosophy permeating our ranks is as yet a matter of speculation. Suffice it to say, we are in the position in which our masters want us to be. And what is good for the master is bad for the slave.

Railroadmen again are facing a cut in wages which they seem to be unable to stall off. Times are not so propitious as when they were able to force the passage of the Adamson Bill by sheer display of their economic power, gaining thereby an eight-hour day without recourse to a strike.

But how different the history of these organizations would read if they were allied. The railroad magnates, the Shipping Board and the shipowners would think twice before they would dare to encroach upon our rights to a decent living.

It is high time that someone should take the first step towards the realization of such an alliance. It won't be easy sailing. Old prejudices and traditions have to be overcome and forgotten. The success of such a move will largely depend upon the selection of proper ways and means. Our national conventions are poor channels for such a plan to safely sail through. Our international officers are not always to be depended on. The least said of them the better. I am not so sure of Andrew Furuseth. The opinion prevails that he looks at the things of today with the eyes of the past. I am sorry if it is so. I admire his integrity and honesty. Andy will die as he lived—poor, which cannot be said of any other international president. Surely, he must see that all those favorable to the seamen laws for which he fought so hard can be set aside by our masters, if the sailors have not sufficient economic power to back up and enforce those laws in time of stress.

The plan for the Triple Alliance of the Transport Workers, if realized, would give us the greater economic power which we all sadly need. Since the seamen by seeing the world are more enlightened and perhaps more broadminded, it behooves them to take the first step to elect the Publicity Committees which could circularize the Railroad Brotherhoods and longshoremen locals with the proposal of an alliance, for which, if the signs do not belie, the time is ripe.

Yours for the Triple Alliance of the Transport Workers,

RALPH V. CHERVIN.

FINANCIAL SUICIDE

When the hired man goes out to the barn some morning and finds John Jones in the hay mow, swaying and twisting gently at the end of a long, strong rope, about the first thing he does after he has cut the body down is to notify the coroner. The coroner, having viewed the remains and remarked that John is as dead as Connie Mack's chances to win the American League pennant, calls in a bunch of his cronies who need the money, empanels a jury and holds an inquest. It is not long until the jury shifts its chew of tobacco and announces that John Jones came to his death by his own hand. The neighbors say: "Well, it's a pity John didn't have the nerve to fight his troubles instead of ducking them," and J. Jones is forgotten.

Not all killing is murder, but death by one's own hand is not only prohibited by law but is regarded almost universally as the subterfuge of a coward to avoid facing the future. Killing your own chances in life is financial suicide. Men who would scorn to end their lives, no matter what their difficulties, end their financial careers and do it with their own hands through failure to put aside a surplus both to seize opportunities which are daily occurrances in American life and to meet emergencies and disasters.

When such men are found twisting at the end of their financial rope, the only verdict a jury of their peers can bring in is: "Financial suicide." The putting aside of such a surplus has been made both convenient and easy through the issue of small denomination government securities. The Treasury Savings Stamps and Treasury Savings Certificates are specially adapted for the saving and safeguarding of money and money so placed will be safe and will return a sure and adequate profit.

The best regulated labor organization is that which most clearly distinguishes between the time for talk and the time for fight—which fights with all its power and when it quits, stays quit.

CONVENTION LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers was defeated, two to one, by Samuel Gompers in the race for the presidency of the American Federation of Labor, when the roll-call was taken on the final day of the convention here, last Saturday. Gompers had 25,022 votes, and Lewis 12,324.

Vice - Presidents Duncan, Valentine, Duffy, Mahon, Green, Fischer and Woll, and Treasurer Tobin and Secretary Morrison, were re-elected without opposition.

Vice-President Rickert, renominated by Samuel Gompers, defeated his opponent, James P. Noonan, president of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, nominated by F. J. McNulty of that organization, by two to one. Although Gompers had received the support of three of the Miners' delegation—Howatt, Harlin and Farrington—that entire delegation cast its vote against Noonan, the only railroad craft representative who sought a place on the Executive Council. The Carpenters, too, who had voted for Lewis, went solidly for Rickert. Lewis and his friends were ready to support Noonan, it was privately said, if Noonan and his delegation would support Lewis. Noonan refused.

William J. Spencer, secretary of the Building Trades Department, and James J. Forrester, grand president of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, were chosen as fraternal delegates to the British Trade Union Congress. In that capacity they stand instructed by the convention to visit Ireland and to hold conferences with Irish and British labor as to the peaceful means to be used by organized labor in assisting the Irish people to free their soil of the British army of occupation. Peter J. Brady of the Photo Engravers, after being nominated against Forrester, withdrew his name. During discussion of Irish affairs here he became involved in a misunderstanding with some of the representatives of the Irish Republic, of such a nature as possibly to be embarrassing were he to have to take part in Irish negotiations.

John O'Hara of the Hatters was the winner by only 984 votes over Ed. Anderson, secretary of the Colorado State Federation of Labor, of the honor of representing the A. F. of L. as fraternal delegate at the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress.

Cincinnati was chosen as the next convention city. Fort Worth was a contestant. Attempts made by the Committee on Laws to have the constitution so changed as to have the conventions take place in October and to permit the Executive Council to choose the convention city were voted down. This means that the South is unlikely to entertain a convention for some years, since the delegates are not willing to take chances on June weather in that region, and they refuse to readjust the time of meeting of their international unions' conventions to suit another shift in dates for the A. F. of L.

Three measures of especial interest to farmers were dealt with on Thursday. Resolutions calling for strict regulation of the meat packing industry by the Federal Government, as proposed by the Federal Trade Commission, and providing that all stockyards be acquired by the railroads, to be operated as freight terminals, with encouragement for the development of municipal and co-operative slaughter-houses and packing plants and warehouses, were adopted. Resolutions pointing out that the Federal Reserve Banks have refused money and credits to the farmers in time of dire need, and providing for the reduction of interest rates on loans from this source, stoppage of loans for market speculation, and finally for creation of a personal rural credit system, were likewise adopted. These measures were sponsored by Delegates Noonan, McNulty, Morton, Leslie, Barton, Joyce, McAndrews, Forrester, Donley, Paulsen and Kline.

The third farmer measure was the one asking all international unions to subscribe for the bonds of the State of North Dakota, which have been boycotted by the banks and brokers of the country because the money is to be used for the farmers' and wage-workers' industrial program in that State. It also asked that the appeal for purchase of these gilt-edged State bonds be published in the American Federationist.

The report of the Resolutions Committee was that the Federation is not a financial institution, and hence that copies of the resolution be sent to the affiliated internationals "for their favorable consideration, in accordance with their laws." The report prevailed without debate.

Federal Employes' Unions in the postal and executive civil service joined in defeating an adverse report of the Resolutions Committee on their resolution calling for an immediate reclassification of Government civil service positions and salaries on a basis of skill, training and responsibility involved, "with just relation to the increased cost of living, and without discrimination on grounds of sex." It also provides for representation of the employes in the central administrative body to be created to handle the reclassification. Such a bill is now under consideration in Congress, but the Resolutions Committee did not know it. They recommended merely that the various unions try to agree upon a measure on reclassification.

Following this victory, the civil service delegates scored again by securing the amendment of the Federation constitution to provide for a permanent Committee on Legislation, which shall handle all resolutions in future conventions dealing with specific legislative measures and situations, with the purpose of putting up to the convention in intelligent form the legislative program agreed upon by the council of legislative agents of some thirty national and international unions at Washington. This Committee on Legislation will be able to correct many of the mistakes made by the Executive Council in its treatment of situations in Congress.

A proposal that endorsement be given the World War Veterans, on account of their strong stand in favor of the right of collective bargaining and their opposition to the use of injunctions in labor disputes, was reported adversely by the committee, on the ground that the Federation should not discriminate between any of the organizations of war veterans. Afterward, the Committee on Executive Council's Report secured adoption of a recommendation that a member of the Council be delegated to act as fraternal delegate to the next annual convention of the American Legion, "to the end that the relations between these two great organizations now so happily established may be more closely cemented and made permanent, to the advantage of all the members of each of these patriotic societies."

Colonel Owsley of the Legion had addressed the convention here on its second day, bringing the greetings of his organization to the parliament of labor, and urging that "absolute loyalty" be made the test of the privilege of Americanism.

No settlement of the jurisdictional dispute of the Carpenters with the suspended Maintenance of Way Employes was reached. The Maintenance of Way men were directed to convince the Executive Council that the award must be more broadly interpreted in order to be workable, or else they must comply strictly with the letter of the award. Meanwhile they remain suspended. The Oil Field Workers were ordered to surrender to the Boilermakers and other crafts the members belonging to the jurisdiction of those bodies. Jurisdictional claims of the Stationary and Operating Engineers against three other organizations were ordered to conference within ninety days. The old quarrel of the Machinists and Flint Glass Workers remained open, due to failure of the Machinists' convention to follow the suggestions of President Johnston.

Women workers were not granted the safeguards granted some years ago to negro workers in trades where they were refused admittance to the national and international unions of white men. The negroes, in these cases, were permitted to organize local unions directly affiliated with the A. F. of L. The women were refused, here at Denver, the same privilege. Opposition came from Mahon of the Street Railway Employes and Fischer of the Barbers, who hold that the charge of the back platform of a car and the work in a barber shop are unfit for women. Mahon stated that while great numbers of women ticket-sellers in subways and elevated stations belong to his union, he would not permit his organization to be destroyed by the replacing of men by women—as was attempted by certain companies during the war.

The convention urged, however, that these internationals still barring women from membership should consider the question again, as soon as possible.

The convention voted endorsement of the Executive Council's report against affiliation with the Amsterdam International Federation of Trade Unions, and against any encouragement to the existing proletarian dictatorship of Russia. When Schlessinger and Antonini of the Ladies' Garment Workers, at a late session Friday night, pleaded for understanding and tolerance for the Russian revolution, and for sympathetic aid for Russia's suffering people, impatient delegates creaked their chairs or drowned out their words by ironical applause. Documents showing the attitude of the Amsterdam International officers and that of the Executive Council are to be published in the July issue of the American Federationist.

One of the finest features of this convention—a convention which did more real work than any in a decade—was the quick approval shown for the fearless and sympathetic attitude of the liberal leaders of the churches—Protestant, Catholic and Jewish—in facing the industrial problem. Thanks were voted to the Federation of Churches of Christ for the Interchurch steel investigation, to the National Catholic Welfare Council for its social program and statements, and to the American rabbis for their similar declarations in labor's support.

trine which held that human labor was a commodity to be bought and sold at the lowest possible market price, as machinery, oil, coal, wheat, flour—and used until its supply is consumed, or its efficiency exhausted, is vicious in morals and unsound in economics."

Blame United States

Adelaide, South Australia, July 2.—"There are indications that the wage reduction stunt and other schemes associated with it for making the workers bear the burdens thrown upon the community by capitalism's failure to meet the needs of the times have their origin in the United States," says the Daily Herald in referring to the anti-union movement of American employers.

"No such attack has been launched in this country," continues the Herald, "but it may be expected in the not very distant future unless the organized workers are alert and active in the protection of their rights.

"It is evident that a direct attack is being directed against American trade-union organization, so that the unity of the workers may be smashed and the wage earners thus compelled to accept whatever terms the employers like to offer. Curiously enough the capitalists do not happen to have the argument all their own way, and as showing how live and important the matter is, it may be mentioned that the churches are discussing it with animation and from the point of view of the working man.

"All this is of particular interest to the Australian worker who may, unless he is very careful, be carried along into the whirlpool of industrial disunion and dissension so that he may become an easy prey and victim to the schemes of exploitation."

Win Eight-Hour Day

By a vote of 167 to 113 the House rejected a twelve-hour workday for firemen, oilers and water tenders on the Great Lakes. The proposal was included in Congressman Scott's amendment to the Seamen's Law. Congressman Nolan of the Iron Molders' Union led an all day battle against the long work day. The bill is now in the hands of the Senate Committee on Commerce.

The seamen, however, lost their fight to maintain the present requirement of able seamen on the Great Lakes. Under the Seamen's Act 65 per cent of able seamen are required in the deck crew on the ocean as well as on the Great Lakes. The Scott amendment reducing this requirement to 50 per cent on the Great Lakes was adopted by a vote of 160 to 128. This means that life boats on passenger and excursion steamers may be manned by men, 50 per cent of whom never had experience in handling an oar or in swinging a life boat, filled with women and children, free from a sinking vessel.

Truth Oozes Out

Plain talk by hard-headed financial writers is making it increasingly harder to "put over" the claim that labor is responsible for present industrial conditions. The financial writer in a local paper says:

"Every one seems to realize nowadays that the inflation of the war days, attendant on the purchase of $10,000,000,000 of our goods, with a like amount of money loaned by our Government to our allies, was a bit of unprecedented foolishness from which it will take years to recover."

Our seeming prosperity, says the writer, made profiteers and spendthrifts, and turned some managers of great corporations from the straight and narrow path out into broad fields of speculation and induced them to pay great stock dividends, which have since greatly strained their companies.

Double Wage Standard

In discussing reorganization of the United States Shipping Board, Chairman Lasker is quoted as saying that he "does not expect to hire a $50,000 man for a $5,000 a year salary."

In the case of marine engineers, seamen and radio operators, they are cut 15 per cent, hours lengthened and other working standards lowered.

In one case Chairman Lasker bases wages on "what a man is worth." In the other case he bases wages on what it costs to live and disregards ability required by men who operate the ships.

Martial Law in Mingo

Governor Morgan has again proclaimed martial law in Mingo county and ordered the sheriff to draft or accept as volunteers 130 men for State service for sixty days. A previous martial law order was set aside by the State Supreme Court because the Governor placed its enforcement in the hands of State cossacks and civil authorities. The Court held that the State must provide a military force where it orders martial law.

Banks Must "Let Loose"

Wall street is whispering that banks have been caught by the continued depression and that they must now do what the advised others to do—unload.

These banks hold great quantities of merchandise of all kinds as a result of decreases in values that compelled business men to let loose. The banks hold them, and this, it is declared, "form one of the most serious phases of the liquidating problem."

The banks are now realizing that they, too, "must take their medicine."

The Socialist national convention indorsed the general strike as a theory and a "powerful weapon of the working class," but declares its advocacy in the United States under present conditions would be folly. An attempt to authorize use of the political strike to force repeal or passage of legislation was voted down.

Labor News

The Building Trades' lockout at San Francisco continues, with the efforts to operate with non-union men unsuccessful.

The annual convention of the Washington State Federation of Labor will be held in Vancouver, beginning Monday, July 11.

Virtually every mine in the Grass Valley district closed down July 1 because of the failure of a group of the larger operators and the Miners' League to reach a wage agreement for the new fiscal year. The mines are being kept free from water, and negotiations are being continued. About six hundred men are idle.

The Arkansas Coronoda miners' case, involving an attempt of employers to seize union funds because of acts of individual members, the Granite City picketing case and the Bisbee, Ariz., boycott case have been placed on the calendar of the United States Supreme Court for reargument at the October term of court.

A general reduction in wages affecting all building trades of Sacramento, approximating $1 a day and averaging 10 per cent, has been agreed upon by the Building Trades Council and the contractors. The new agreement is to be ratified at a meeting of the Building Trades Council, after which the various unions represented will pass on the proposed scale.

The National Women's Union has announced that a nation-wide campaign will be launched to compel the A. F. of L. to amend its constitution so that women will have the opportunity of union membership on the same terms as men. This organization, which has grown out of the formation of the women's committee for industrial equality, failed to secure the adoption of a resolution by the convention which would give the women workers "industrial equality."

E. Ellison, Secretary, has succeeded in negotiating an agreement with the Employers' Association for the Dredgemen's Union of California. This includes the crews employed in dredging work on the bay and Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers. The agreement is to run for one year and calls for a wage reduction of 7½ per cent, based on the cost of living findings of the board of arbitration in the building industry. The new wages will range from $190 to $125 a month, according to the class of work performed.

On July 1, Alexander Howat and August Dorchy, president and vice-president of the Kansas Miners' Union, were found guilty of violating the Kansas Industrial Court law criminally by calling a strike, by a jury in the Cherokee County District Court. Although Howat has been convicted of several offenses in connection with the calling of strikes and his defiance of the industrial court, this was his first conviction by a jury. "It was the judge's instructions that did it," Howat declared soon after the verdict had been read. "I was guilty of a felony or guilty of nothing," the miners' president said. The courtroom was filled when the jury filed into the room and the verdict was read. Many miners were in town awaiting the verdict. There was no demonstration. Judge Ross announced that the bonds of Howat and Dorchy would stand until July 8, when they are to appear for sentence.

SEAMEN! WATCH FOR DEVELOPMENTS.

See Our Weekly Reports Posted in All Union Halls.

I have said that I would never be attorney for shipowners, until the seamen were shipowners. One of the purposes of my visit to Europe this summer is to acquire knowledge as to shipping conditions abroad and particularly to ascertain with what degree of success the seamen of Italy are operating ships.

Any seamen, who, with a view to becoming shipowners some time, are willing to form "a Seamen's Society for Savings" and will pledge to save one-fourth of their wages over their board and lodging per annum, said savings to be put in a depository that they themselves may select, please communicate with the undersigned.

World's Workers

Recently Spanish workers, whose central organization, the General Confederation of Labor, was dissolved by the Government, were reported to have been assassinated by agents of the Government and the crimes neatly covered up.

Industrial conditions in Italy are improving, due to the fact that the struggle between capital and labor has a tendency to settle down. Reconstruction work is progressing rapidly, with crop prospects excellent.

The threatened strike in the British engineering trades, due to differences on the wage reduction question, have been temporarily averted. The conference of employers and the engineers accepted a provisional agreement pending arbitration.

The city of Quebec was recently thrown into confusion when the police and firemen went on a strike for a wage increase of $1.50 per day. Street lamps were smashed and hoodlums invaded police stations, breaking up furnishings and windows; hundreds of false fire alarms were turned in. The city employs 140 policemen and 100 firemen.

The Australian Labor Party recently resolved: "That in view of the thousands of unemployed in New South Wales, the Government be requested to immediately withdraw from the Federal immigration scheme, and to suspend all assisted immigration until Labor's Land Bill becomes law, when, by breaking up large holdings, proper provision can be made for the settlement of new arrivals."

A compromise agreement between employers and employes of the Auto-Mettalurgique factory at Marchienne, Belgium, has ended the workers occupation of the factory. Following example of Italians the Belgian workers hoisted the red flag when the plant was occupied. When the trouble started police squads were turned out, but nothing serious happening, a series of negotiations with government authorities resulted in a settlement, satisfactory to both sides.

The Bolshevik Government has decided not to take any more chances with the fickle political affections of the Kronstadt sailors, once the backbone of the Soviet forces, recently the revolutionists who held Communist troops at bay for some days. The Kronstadt fortress, up to the time of the recent Kronstadt revolution, was for all purposes more or less of an independent sailors' republic, which controlled the powerful fortress nearest Petrograd. Since the revolt there was quashed, many privileges of the sailors have been curtailed by the government.

The British coal mine strike, which has been in progress since April 1, has finally been settled. It is understood that Parliament will authorize the granting of a ten-million-pound subsidy to the mining industry. The miners will resume work generally if the subsidy is granted. The claim of the miners to a national wages pool had been abandoned and a settlement had been reached which will insure peace for a long period through a system by which the workers share with the employers the profits of the industry and obtain a direct interest in productivity. The prime minister, Lloyd George, expressed the belief that this would be the largest example of profit-sharing in any country.

Domestic and Naval

By a vote of 330 to 4 the House has agreed to the Borah disarmament amendment to the naval appropriation bill.

The steamer William H. Doheny lost a propellor in a recent storm while off the Gulf coast. Wireless calls for assistance brought quick response.

Investigation by the Senate Naval Affairs Committee of alleged "Sovietism" in the American navy was proposed in a resolution introduced in the Senate by Senator La Follette, Republican, of Wisconsin.

California's Japanese population has been placed at 108,906, according to figures given by the State Board of Vital Statistics. This includes 38,000 more than was given in the Federal census figures.

Secretary of State Hughes has requested Governor Stephens of California to recognize, and instruct state officials to give official status to three consular officers of Mexico named to posts in California.

The American Shipping Board freight steamer "Mopang," from Constantinople for New York, struck a mine off Bourgas, in the Black Sea, and sank, according to advices received at London by Lloyd's. No lives were lost.

Twenty-nine vessels which entered Hamburg in June flew the Stars and Stripes. There were 612 ships, having an aggregate tonnage of 588,000, which made port in the month, and 710, having a tonnage of 651,000, departed.

Senator Frelinghuysen's bill to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish seasonal coal rates was recently defeated, the Senate voting 38 to 26 to recommit the measure.

The Shipping Board has decided to dispose of the government fleet of 287 wooden ships. Bids on the vessels, most of which are tied up in the James river, near Newport News, Va., will be invited and opened on July 30.

The railroad inquiry being conducted by the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee halted July 1. Chairman Cumming announced that hearings will be resumed in September, when representatives of employes will be heard.

United States Commissioner Staten has issued warrants for the arrest of thirteen men charged with having illegally drydocked the Shipping Board steamship "Lake Elkwood," in Rio de Janeiro, in 1919, and sold her cargo.

As a first step toward reduction of the regular army to the 150,000 maximum provided in the Army Appropriation Bill, Secretary Weeks has authorized the discharge by corps area and division commanders of all enlisted men who may apply for discharge during July without prejudice to their rights to travel pay.

All work stopped at the Mare Island navy yard July 1 because of the failure of Congress to pass the Naval Appropriation Bill. Nearly 8,100 employes were affected, and construction of the dreadnaughts "California" and "Montana" and a large amount of repair work was discontinued. The daily payroll at the yard is between $53,000 and $60,000. Had work continued, each employe would have had his salary reduced $240 a year anyhow, as a result of the abolition of the war-time bonus. The stoppage is considered only temporary.

News from Abroad

Capetown South Africa, reports that influenza is sweeping the eastern provinces of the Cape with thousands of persons sick.

Sydney (Australia) reports the coasting steamer "Fitzroy" has foundered off Cape Hawkey. Only three of thirty persons aboard are known to have survived.

Italy has decided to adhere to the Anglo-French note to Greece suggesting allied mediation for peace between Greece and Turkey, according to a dispatch from Rome quoting an official statement issued by the Italian government.

The population of France, 36,084,206, according to the 1921 census, shows a decrease of nearly two and a half million compared with 1911.

A Peking message states that ratifications of the treaty between China and Germany, restoring a state of peace, were exchanged July 1.

The business of making a living by fighting seems to have undergone a decline in Mexico. This is indicated by the fact that 1200 soldiers, some of them retired and some in active service, have asked the Government for tracts of land for small farming.

Emphasizing its importance to American affairs in the Orient, the Department of Commerce announces that a treaty of commerce and amity had been signed by Germany and China. As a result, it is stated, the open door in China has been widened for Germany and narrowed for other countries, particularly the United States.

An epidemic of suicide and suicidal attempts has broken out in Berlin. There is a general average of two suicides a day in Greater Berlin. With the coming of spring and cherry sunshine it would seem that the desire to live and enjoy life would be on the increase. This, in Berlin, has proved the contrary. The high water mark of eight suicides in one day has been reached.

Determined efforts are being made by the British home office to get at the bottom of Bolshevik propaganda in that country. Reports have been received of dangerous activities of the Bolsheviki in London and Scotland. Raids have been carried out by Scotland Yard detectives on alleged Bolshevik meeting places and sensational discoveries have been made. While searching one building the detectives found a small casket containing ashes, which are declared to be those of Rosa Luxemburg ("Red Rosa"), the German Socialist who was killed in 1919 about the same time as Karl Liebknecht, the Communist agitator.

Recent dispatches from Rome state that the volcano of Stromboli, situated on the island of the same name, off the northern coast of Sicily, has burst into activity. The eruption began with a violent explosion which was heard far from the island, and the people are abandoning their homes and fleeing to Sicily. Stromboli is a volcano remarkable for its activity, having been in eruption for the better part of the last 2000 years. The two most violent outbreaks in recent years occurred in 1907 and in 1915. The activity of the volcano in 1907 was considered by some observers as a precursor of the great seismic convulsion which virtually destroyed Messina the next year. In normal times the population of the island is approximately 2000.

"Do you know, landlord, that none of the doors in this house will shut?"

"New house, new house; you know it takes time for it to settle."

"Ah, then, there's a pair of us. I'm a new tenant; it takes time for me to settle, too. Good morning. Call again."

"Oi had a most iligant toime on Tuesday, O'Dowd sure, 'twas the toime av me loife!"

"Indeed, Casey, and how was that?"

"Why, Oi was at the Blue Pig and divil a thing do I remember after about 7.30."

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

Big Business Endangers the Sovereignty of American Citizens

Washington has never been jammed to the extent that it now is with representatives of special economic groups. Usually these groups are represented by men of extraordinary ability, for they draw to the top of their enterprises the best talents available; more and more, in fact, they come to monopolize these talents, with the result that the caliber of legislators is without question by comparison on the decline.

Public bodies and national social agencies that have been in the habit of watching the legislative progress are forced to take cognizance of the change that is taking place; for it affects not only commercial and financial questions that may seem remote from the various fields of civic endeavor but also creates an atmosphere inimical to the consideration of any measures from the standpoint of the general public good alone.

And what has produced this change? Why are specific economic interests more powerful in Washington—and, for the matter of that, in the State capitals also—than they were, say, during the Roosevelt or the Taft administration? The answer is to be found in the extraordinary growth of trade associations. The trade association is today what the corporation and the trust were less than a generation ago, a national problem that threatens the sovereignty of the individual American citizen. It is the inevitable consolidation—these past years have been of the consolidating kind—of trade groups. Small entities, partnership and the like were, a generation ago and during the ensuing years, gathered together in corporation or trusts in order to do collectively what each unit could not do singly. Now corporations and trusts are uniting, in the trade association, to do collectively what each singly cannot do so well and to dominate, even control, legislation and parties, and to prolong evasion of laws intended to restrain abuses in trade.

There are literally thousands of trade associations in America. They have a large area of usefulness—some are deemed invaluable by Government officials, as clearing houses of information for example. Others now stand indicted in Federal Courts for trust practices in restraining trade; for example, the Portland Cement Association, which includes all the manufacturers of Portland cement in the United States and Canada, is alleged to control, everywhere, supplies of cement and is said to have increased its cost from about 50 cents a barrel to about $4.50. But the larger threat is political rather than economic—it may be that the great struggle of the next one hundred years will be whether democracy or aggregations of economic groups are to dominate and control America.

Certainly it is in no small part due to such associations that our Government becomes more and more a government of "impression." Though, as Walter Bagehot insisted, public opinion in a democracy is the opinion of the average man—an individual with a considerate heart, with figures in his mind and his own affairs to attend to—an individual average man steadily comes to have less and less influence on the ponderous machine of our Government. Inevitably, perhaps, with the vast increase of our numbers! Nevertheless, the fact remains that public opinion—and legislation—is dominated now by groups. More and more the individual is lost among these groups. If, in fact, for the moment you consider all groups in the category of associations of various kinds, you can with goodly accuracy conclude, if you know Washington, that nearly all legislation and many of the influences affecting administrative policies, are activated by associations.

In other words, except at election time the individual counts less than ever before in the history of America. But a hundred thousand individuals represented by one in Washington, count much. One individual manufacturer, for instance, can seldom make his representation count if, say, he is overstocked with a commodity like condensed milk and prays for relief; but a hundred thousand, were there that many such manufacturers, representing themselves through one in Washington, could make their impress felt. The need of such representation was manifest during the war. Then, with manufacturers and other business men eager to do their bit and on the other hand the Government anxious for their aid, the Government found itself without organization means to deal with large numbers of individuals or with large groups of them. Accordingly, it urged individuals to form themselves into trade associations with which it might adequately and promptly co-operate in matters relating to the accumulation, increase and purchase of necessary commodities, and in other ways. Proof of the activities of large organized groups—associations of many kinds, for there is an association organized in these days to do almost everything—exists in the records of any one of the two hundred or so committees on Capitol Hill. Indeed, so obvious are they as to prompt some persons to exclaim that such political influence by economic groups bears the essential character of Soviet control.

This thought takes one back to the corporation and the trust of earlier days, and to the Nation's attempts by law to control those causing alarm or economic discomfiture. Clearlp, the alarm we then felt has been diminished—now substantially all business is done by corporations. The exercise of law has had a quieting influence on the alarm we felt anent trusts. Nevertheless, the writer has had the judgment of officials high in the execution of the law to the effect that the Sherman Anti-Trust law never has worked and never will work with satisfactory effectiveness.

How, then, is the control of trade associations to be attempted, since some of them, demonstrably, have exercised far more extensive and discomfiting activities than trusts have exercised for many a day? A discrimination is at once in order: Trusts and corporations usually are private affairs. Governmental agencies, therefore, think twice before they enter into co-operation with them. But some of the trade associations are so comprehensive and some have performed for the Government functions so invaluable to the common welfare that they have, even now, a kind of official status, with the result that Federal agencies have long felt free to co-operate with them and, in fact, often deem them to be more or less indispensable. In its promotive and educational work the Department of Agriculture, for instance, would be hard put to do without them. Likewise, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, in the Department of Commerce.

England recognizes—traditionally has recognized—the need for such closer inter-relation between Government and business, with the result that she has passed fewer laws regulative of business in a century than we have passed since the advent of the Sherman Anti-Trust law in 1890. England, in other words, gives credence and place to clearing houses and rallying points of effort much like our trade associations. Her extensive set-up of boards of trade and other similar intermediaries is and long has been a profound and invaluable factor in her national life and commercial expansion. But in England these organizations have been successful, and business has been conducted without interference from Government, largely because her Government gives these organizations a quasi-official authority by appointing to serve with them representatives of the Government. And in other European countries, except those like Italy where the tradition is that the Government shall exercise intimate and paternal protection of customers and counters—with the result that customers have not the instinctive acumen and shrewdness of the Britisher—more or less the same plan of inter-relating business and Government exists.

In America the public still thinks itself, business and Government as at the corners of an equilateral triangle, each, in a sense, at an equal distance from the others. It may be, then, that the time is here when, at once to attain our own better national ends and also to keep in line with the demand of business for less governmental interference in, as distinguished from co-operation with, business, a new approach is now in order. For, clearly, the alternatives are apparent: Either the Government must go on interfering, as the phrase is, with business, in a more or less futile and destructive attempt at controlling certain phases of business; or readjustment of our concept of the inter-relation between Government and business is imperative, and that readjustment directs attention, necessarily, to the trade association. That association exercises powers essentially governmental: It fixes the prices of many public necessities. It controls transportation. Thus while the public increasingly realizes that it has lost out in its wartime chance with the railroads, it is of interest to note that one of the joint authors of the Esch-Cummins bill states that his committee was presented with a memorial favoring the bill signed by persons representing capital of $19,000,000,000, and was made to feel other pressure from all sides. In finance its power is unlimited.

Today, then, in the national capital, the trade associations are lacking in any responsibility to

FATE AND IDEALS

(By J. P. Hayes)

"Here comes Joe now, ma," said Miss Nellie Cornell, suddenly drawing herself in from the second-story window to make the announcement. "He's with that horrid Tom Givens."

"I don't believe he looks for a job at all," she added, leaning a good two-thirds outside the window where she had been hanging, more or less perilously, for the last twenty minutes.

"For goodness sake, Nellie, don't fall out of the window," gasped Mrs. Cornell. "He will have a job in the morning," she declared grimly, as Miss Cornell recovered her balance. "My, you gave me a fright. I thought you were gone that time."

"I won't fall, ma. I like to lean away out; it's like being up in an airship," said Miss Cornell, who had never been up in one.

The Cornells lived in a two-roomed housekeeping apartment of a second-rate hotel in the Mission District of San Francisco. Mrs. Cornell and Nellie slept in the wall bed; Joe slept on the floor in the kitchen.

Mr. Cornell, a machinist, had been dead for two years. He had died suddenly, and left his widow and two children quite unprovided for.

Joe, who was then fifteen years of age, was working in the shipyard as a rivet-passer. There he became acquainted with sailors on the ships that came in for repairs, and got to know something about sailors' work and sailors' ways. Shortly after his father's death he joined the Seamen's Union and went to sea as an ordinary seaman.

He liked the honest, care-free sailors, and he liked the work much better than the monotonous passing of endless redhot rivets in the shipyard.

By dint of great economy the family had managed to get along on the money he earned, which had lately been augmented by the earnings of his sister. She was two years younger than Joe, and had but recently started to work in a factory making fruit baskets.

For two years Joe had worked contentedly on the big steamers, happy and proud; feeling not a little important to be the support of his mother and sister. Then came the lockout of the marine unions. Joe left the ship with the rest of the sailors at the order of the Seamen's Union, and had been out of work for the three weeks since the lockout commenced. He had tried to get work ashore; he had tried hard, but without success. Work was scarce and he was very young, seventeen. Besides, he had no experience in any other work than rivet-passing. Work in the shipyards, as everywhere else, was very slack. The newspapers said it was the readjustment period after the war, and that we were getting back to normalcy.

Meanwhile the U. S. Shipping Board and other shipowners were clamoring for sailors to go as strikebreakers. Large advertisements appeared daily in the newspapers, calling for sailors to go to work under strike conditions; special inducements and bonuses were offered. While Admiral Benson, chairman of the Shipping Board, made an unfair appeal to the patriotic spirit of the sailors, urging them to betray their union and their fellows; asking them to break the oath they took on initiation to be true to each other and to the Seamen's Union; invoking them in the name of the Stars and Stripes to come to the assistance of the country because the Shipping Board was losing money on account of the tieup which the Shipping Board itself had helped to bring about by forcing unbearable conditions upon the crews of its ships. What kind of loyalists did the good Admiral expect to answer his appeal? Did he expect that a man who betrays his fellows could be loyal to his country? No, Admiral! A traitor is a traitor; and a man who would betray his fellows or his union would be the first to betray his country.

All this advertising had no more effect on Joe than it had on any other union sailor. His father had been a union man, and Joe knew he had to play the game straight. Win or lose, be square, and stay away until they all agree to go back, was his only thought.

After he had been out of work for two weeks, his mother had pleaded with him to go back to work on the ships. But Joe was firm in refusing, and comforted her by saying he was sure to find a job in a few days. As the days passed and he still found no work, Mrs. Cornell's attitude changed from one of pleading into one of command; and every day Joe had begged for just one more day, saying he was sure to find a job in the morning. Until the evening when our story opens, Mrs. Cornell's patience had reached the limit, and she was determined that Joe should go to work on the morrow, strike or no strike. Moreover, she had, that very afternoon, telephoned in answer to the advertisement for strike-breakers, and promised to bring her son to the office in the morning, to be sent aboard a ship, tactfully omitting to mention that he himself was unwilling to go.

Joe entered the room slowly and gloomily, his hands in his pockets, his manner telling more plainly than words that his quest for work had been as unsuccessful as ever. "Gee, but I'm hungry," he remarked.

"Well, here's your supper, Joe," said Mrs. Cornell, taking the maccaroni from the oven, and bustling around to wait on him with more than usual cheerfulness.

"It's a wonder you would not take your cap off when you come in the house, young man," said his sister reprovingly. "You're getting the awfullest manners since you started going with that Tom Given, ain't he, ma?"

"Take his cap and hang it up for him," ordered her mother rather sharply. "Joe's tired, that's all." The young lady made a grimace and silently obeyed, feeling that the reproof was more than unmerited.

"Tom Givens is all right," said Joe, starting to eat. "He's a good union man, and he's a machinist, same as dad was."

"Joe," said Mrs. Cornell suddenly, "I phoned up that number at 417 Montgomery street and the nicest man answered the phone, and he said he's got a swell job for you on a big oil tanker, and you're to come down to the office at 8 o'clock in the morning and bring your things, and he's going to take you right in his own private car aboard the ship."

"Aw, ma, I can't. I can't be a scab, ma. I think I know where to get a job tomorrow, honest, ma," he said, lying in desperation.

"No," said his mother, "you've said that every day for the last five days. Besides, I promised him you would come in the morning. Don't you dare to disappoint him. He was awful kind and polite."

"Yes, they're always polite when they want you to scab," said the boy bitterly.

"Oh, I'm sure he was a very nice man, a perfect gentleman. He said he was going to get you the best job in the ship that he could, and he said if you're the right kind of a boy and work for his company, they'll make you a captain in a few years."

"Aw, go on, ma. That guy was stringing you. That's all bull! It takes years and years to make a captain, and they got to know navigation and everything."

"Well, now, you'll see. When you speak to him in the morning you'll believe him."

"Ma, I can't go. All my friends are union men and they won't look at me any more if I go and scab."

"Friends won't keep you. We've got to live and we've got to have clothes, and Nellie's $10 a week won't even buy us food and pay the rent. You have got to take this job. Anyway, you will make new friends on the ship."

"They're only bums out of the jails and University students from Berkeley going on the ships now, ma. Honest, that's what they do. They go to the crooks that's got two or three months in jail, and let 'em out right away if they will go and scab on a ship. Same as they let 'em out to go in the army in the war. They say the Shipping Board is doing that for the good of the country. You don't want me to make friends with them crooks out of jail, do you, ma?"

"I'm sure I wish you would get to know some of the students from the Berkeley University. Some of them got all kinds of money. Be nice to them and invite some of them home. I want Nellie to meet some nice boys like that."

"Aw, them fellers ain't any good, ma! Why, we don't talk the same language. I know; I seen one or two try to work in the shipyard, but they only lasted one day. Besides, they would laugh at me because I ain't got no golf clubs to bring along. I heard about 'em in the Matson boats. They all take their golf clubs with 'em and they play golf on deck with the captain and the passengers, whenever they ain't seasick."

"All I know is," said Mrs. Cornell with an air of finality, "that you've got to earn some money, and you've got to take that job in the morning. I won't listen to no more excuses."

"Aw, ma, dad never scabbed. He used to hate a scab worse'n poison. I can't be a scab, ma."

"Yes, that's why we're poor," said Mrs. Cornell, flaming up with sudden heat. "Strikes kept us poor. If your father had the sense to go to work and never mind the strikes, and let the unions mind their own business, like other men do who got sense and education, we might have a home of our own now and he might be alive today. No wonder the University boys go and work when the others won't. They got the sense and education to see that strikes keep you poor."

"They go and scab because that's the only chance they got to get a job. Nobody won't hire them unless it's for to break a strike. They can't work. I seen 'em try."

"That's enough, young man. You're going to take that job in the morning, and I'm going with you to see Mr. Douglas and see that you do take it."

Joe went to bed with a heavy heart that night and slept but little. He knew that his mother would have her way, and that he would go with her in the morning and become a scab and outcast among men, at least among all the men he had ever known. The sentence had been passed and he knew he must submit to it. It never occurred to him to run away; the family instinct was too strong in him to allow the thought to enter his head. He knew that his mother and sister could not get along without him, the chief breadwinner.

A few more feeble protests in the morning, and he accompanied his mother to the office on Montgomery street. An unshaven and shabbily dressed clerk met them in the hallway when they stepped from the elevator and introduced himself as Mr. Douglas, the gentleman who had spoken to Mrs. Cornell the previous day. As he conducted them to the office he explained that the car was ready, and the other men who were going to work on the ship were waiting in the office. On entering they saw five men standing in a cowering attitude, as if someone were about to deliver a blow on their backs. They were, without exception, ragged, dirty and unkempt, typical scabs of the unprofessional variety, looking like anything but sailors. They might well have been recruited from the source that Joe had explained the night before. They straightened up a little when they saw that there was only a woman and a boy, but none of them seemed capable of standing erect.

Joe's heart sank within him as his glance took them in, and his mother gave an involuntary gasp. Whatever she thought it did not change her determination to put Joe to work at all costs.

A few minutes later Joe was sitting in the rear seat of the automobile; they were not overcrowded because the down-and-outs had no baggage.

Joe was conscious of his mother standing on the sidewalk, waving her hand and smiling. She said something, but Joe did not hear; he was listening to the motor of the machine; it seemed to be saying: "Scab, scab, Joe Cornell, dirty scab." He glanced quickly up and down the street and was relieved to see none of his acquaintances, while the song of the motor reiterated through his brain: "Scab, scab, Joe Cornell, dirty scab." He wondered why they were so long in starting; it seemed they stood there all ready to go for ten minutes. In reality it was less than one. "Scab, scab, Joe Cornell, dirt— R-r-r-r." At last they were off.

As they turned into Market street they ran along by the side of a streetcar for a little way; it's wheels started up a new song in Joe's buzzing brain. "Scab," said the wheels, "scab Cornell, scab Cornell, scab Cornell." They passed the car, but its song lingered in Joe's brain until they overtook another whose wheels took up the same refrain.

Suddenly Joe realized they were nearing the waterfront. There were sailors down there; they would see him in the car with scabs, himself a scab. They would be saying: "Joe Cornell is a scab." No, not that! He must get out. He stood up and tried to shout to the driver to stop, but no sound came from his lips. He had but one thought. He must get out, at once. They were very near the 'front now. He stepped on the seat, crouched, and flung himself head foremost from the car.

He felt the shock as his body struck the asphalt; he had a momentary vision of a streetcar that seemed very, very high, bearing down upon him swiftly, another shock as it struck him, and then merciful darkness.

Joe awoke to consciousness in the hospital soon after he was taken from the operating table. His gaze first rested upon the white gown of the doctor who had operated upon him. At first he thought it was the peak of a snowcapped mountain a long way off, for his half-conscious gaze could only take in part of what his eyes rested on, and the blood stains on the gown gave the impression of canyons and bare places on the mountain side.

Soon the doctor moved, and, with the act, Joe's consciousness seemed to return fully. He raised himself a few inches in an effort to sit up, and immediately fell back on the pillow from pain and weakness. A second glance told him everything. He was in the hospital. At once he recalled his leap from the machine and the streetcar close upon him.

The doctor stepped close to his head and bent over him, while two nurses closed in, one on each side of the bed.

"How do you feel?" asked the doctor kindly.

Joe shook his head. "I feel awful sick," he answered in a weak voice.

"That's the gas," the doctor informed him. "We had to give you a little ether, you know, until we got you fixed up."

"Gee, and my leg is awful sore," said Joe, his mouth twitching with pain.

"Yes, your leg got hurt rather badly, my boy. No, don't try to reach it. I'll tell you. The streetcar took your left foot off just above the ankle. It's not so bad as it might have been. You might have been killed, you know," said the doctor in a hopeless but kindly attempt to console him.

But the thought that was uppermost in the boy's mind saved him from the despair the doctor had expected him to feel when he learned of the loss of his foot.

It seemed to the doctor that a look of relief came into the boy's face, and the doctor was further puzzled when Joe said: "I'm kind of glad it happened like that, doctor. They can't ask me to scab no more now. They don't hire no sailors with only one foot."

But the doctor did not understand. He exchanged glances with the nurse. "He isn't quite himself yet," he remarked in a low voice. "Still a little confused."

In the anteroom of the hospital Joe's mother sat, rocking herself to and fro, while her daughter, with an arm around her shoulders, tried to comfort her.

"God! Why did I do it?" "Why did I do it?" moaned the woman.

"Aw, ma, how was you to know? You thought it was all for the best," sobbed Nellie.

"Oh, I'll never forgive myself, never!" And the woman continued to rock herself back and forth. The tears fell glistening from her eyes, her grief redoubled as she listened to the stifled sobs of her daughter.

Last week it was necessary for repairs to be made on the steamers "Alaska" and "Admiral Evans" upon their arrival at Portland.

A big log crib has broken up in the Straits of Juan de Fuca between Victoria and Point Wilson, Wash., and is in the track of shipping to and from Puget Sound.

The fuel steamer "Orion," which returned to the San Diego harbor because of boiler and machinery trouble, was bound for New York and Philadelphia.

Growing fears for the safety of the schooner "Forester," 598 tons, were dispelled with the vessel's arrival at San Francisco after a passage of 103 days from the South Sea Islands.

Boiler trouble delayed the Matson steamship "Lurline" on her last trip from the Hawaiian Islands. Storms and fog were given as additional reason for the delay of the passengers.

After being laid up at Bellingham since last January, the Pacific American fisheries steamer "Norwood" was towed to Seattle for repairs and general overhauling, after which she will be placed on the Alaska run to the company's fish packing plants.

The schooner "Zampa," which has been held up from time to time by a series of attachments, has sailed from San Francisco in command of Captain John Edwardson. On board was Judge Henry C. Cooper, Honolulu capitalist, who purchased the vessel when she was sold in the Hawaiian Islands recently.

After taking aboard stores and supplies following a successful voyage recently off shore for whales, the whaling tug "Port Sounders" has departed on another cruise. The whaler will cruise along the coast about two hundred miles off shore, between Point Reyes and San Diego. The catch will be taken to the base at Monterey.

While the steam schooner fleet is lying idle at San Francisco the shipping of British Columbia is getting the lumber away from Canadian mills. The Canadian Pacific Railroad's steamship "Princess Ena" is loading 800,000 feet of lumber at Vancouver for San Pedro and several vessels of the Dollar fleet are busy in that trade.

With the dispatch of the Alaska Steamship Company's steamer "Cordova" on July 25 from Columbia River to Hawaiian Islands, there will be inaugurated an independent steamship passenger and freight service from northern ports to the island. A sailing schedule of every thirty days will be made. Much lumber, offered at Columbia River ports for the islands, prompts the new venture.

Battered by gales off-shore, which tore away her companion ladders and smashed in her funnels and seas deluging her staterooms, the "Matsonia" of the Matson Navigation Company arrived at San Francisco last week. The vessel was many hours late. While about two miles from harbor her machinery broke down. Three Red Stack tugs responded to the vessel's call for assistance and towed her into port leaving the "Matsonia's" stay in port to fix the crew of the vessel was set upon by a gang of stevedores. Seven of the vessel patched up several members of the crew who were injured. The Berkeley Boys experienced an enjoyable vacation.

Injunctions Abused

A Newark, N. J., court of chancery refused to issue an injunction against two champion prizefighters on the ground that it has no jurisdiction over possible future violations of criminal law.

The Court held to the original purpose of the injunction writ—that it can not be issued where complainant has other remedies at law.

This same Court, however, overlooks injunction limitations when strikers are involved.

In the prizefighters' case, the Court was asked to stop a possible violation of criminal law. This was refused.

In the case of workers, the Court is asked to prohibit acts that are lawful if done by other groups of citizens or when no strike exists, and to even deny constitutional guarantees. The Court grants this request.

The New Jersey criminal code covers assault, intimidation, rioting, destruction of property—and prizefights.

When criminal law is violated, provision is made for the arrest of the offender, who is assumed to be innocent until proven guilty. He is permitted to face his accusers and is tried by a jury of his peers.

After centuries of experience this system has proven the most effective yet devised to protect the individual's rights.

In a labor dispute, however, the employer secures an injunction on any charge he sees fit to make. The wilder his claim the quicker he secures Court aid to break the strike. The order is issued on his statement and strikers are arrested when he informs the Court that the injunction is violated.

The Court orders the strikers' arrest and commands them to show cause why they should not be punished—they are assumed to be guilty until they prove their innocence with the Judge acting as law maker, law enforcer and law executioner.

The labor injunction upsets the theory that our Government is composed of three branches—legislative, executive, and judicial.

The injunction Judge is three in one, with no appeal from his edict.

The Newark incident is a vivid picture. It reveals in sharp colors the inequity of the labor injunction.

If that Judge enjoined these prizefighters on the ground that they contemplated violation of criminal law, his fellow injunction Judges would join in the hoots that would drive him from the bench.

Our "molders of public opinion" would be enraged at this usurpation of rights possessed by the lawmaking and executive branches of government.

But when trade unionists protest against this vicious process, that is only applied to them, and that has been invented by dollar guardians, they are charged with demanding exemption from law.

Little Girls Aid "Daddy"

Anti-union elements who ignore the spirit of organized labor could read with profit the report of Van A. Bittner, representative of the United Mine Workers, in charge of the recent Alabama coal strike.

The unionist reprints this letter from two little girls at Cordova:

"We two little girls had to quit school because we have no shoes. Mr. Bittner, our dear daddy, is a real union man, and mama and us wouldn't let him scab if we never got any shoes. We surely thank the union for what it has done for us. If you can do anything for us we will never forget it, and if you can't, we are in the strike to win, just the same."

"From the reading of this pathetic letter," says Bittner, "it can easily be seen why it was necessary to distribute shoes and clothing to the striking miners and their families."

Ninety-nine per cent of these miners live in company shacks that are declared a disgrace to civilization. When the miners were evicted, the union fought the case to the State Supreme Court, which decided against the workers. Then two thousand tents were purchased and tent colonies erected over night.

Over half a million pounds of provisions were distributed by the union among the fifty thousand men, women and children during the strike. The union distributed these provisions through one central agency at Birmingham to 107 points.

The union also cared for the sick and buried the dead.

"Any man who is a member of our great union," says Bittner, "can well be proud of the aid that was furnished the striking miners and their families in Alabama by the United Mine Workers of America. What other institution on earth can feed, clothe and house, as well as give necessary medical and hospital aid to fifty thousand men, women and children for seven months?"

Profiteers Escape

Max Danish, managing editor of Justice, official magazine of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, has his "doots" about the success of a resolution by Congressman Beck, which calls upon the Secretary of the Treasury to publish the names of war profiteers.

"It does not require a great amount of sagacity to predict the fate of this resolution," writes the labor editor. "It will, very likely, never come up for discussion. Should it ever reach that stage, it will, of course, be overwhelmingly defeated on the ground of 'general public interest.' And should the impossible happen, and it is adopted, we can safely wager that no 'reputable' newspaper will take any particular pains to publish such a list, as it might include a goodly sprinkling of their advertisers, past, present, or future."

GETTING TOGETHER

The old ship has experienced some rough usage recently, but the full crew are on deck full of fight.

After pursuing a policy of starving out for several months, the combined vessel operators locked out the seamen, and, with the Government, assaulted in force, firm in their belief that they could crush the spirit and wreck the unions of the seafarers. How extensive has been their miscalculation is already foreshadowed. The spirit of solidarity displayed by the men is inspiring; the harder the blows, the more determined they become.

With the feeling that they had brought the seamen to a condition of subjection, the steam schooner operators recently offered a sop which carried with it a demand for surrender of both human and constitutional rights. This new proposed agreement submitted to the union has been rejected by a vote that was almost unanimous.

The seamen do not intend to sell their principles or let matters rest with the workers always on the defensive; they are now engaged in strengthening up their lines for a strong counter-attack. We believe that an injury to one is the concern of all, no matter to which branch of the marine transport industry.

"It is an ill wind that blows nobody good," and the employers have taught the seamen, longshoremen and others engaged in marine transportation the error of their ways. They have revealed to us our defects and weakness, which lesson we do not intend shall be lost.

As a starter, the same meeting which rejected the owners' proposals adopted the following resolution:

Whereas, The Sailors' Union of the Pacific has followed a policy tending to separate seamen from the longshoremen, who are our closest co-workers ashore; and

Whereas, Such policy has been of great material aid to the employers, in their efforts to disrupt our unions and degrade our standards of living; and

Whereas, Necessity for a greater solidarity has been indelibly impressed upon the maritime workers by the recent lockout, and our state of unpreparedness to effectively meet the situation; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, in regular meeting assembled, hereby declare for a policy of closer cooperation between the marine and transport workers and others; and be it further

Resolved, That a committee of five be elected for the purpose of placing before the other unions our desire for said greater solidarity, and said committee meet immediately with like representatives from the longshoremen and others for the purpose of perfecting thorough and effective organization.

The resolution was adopted by a unanimous roar from nearly twelve hundred throats. The committee was elected immediately and are now on the job.

The small committee provided for in the resolution is a mere detail; every man that was in the meeting will constitute himself a committee of one to make the movement a huge success. The spirit of solidarity is best cultivated by the workers themselves, and they are showing strong inclinations for that desired state of affairs. The marine and transport workers must be as well prepared to meet capitalistic aggressions in the United States as they are in other civilized countries.

CUNNING MANIPULATIONS

Those professional politicians who constitute the present governments of England, France and the United States are pursuing a policy which is sure to result in destruction to the happiness and welfare of their people. They are "making the Germans pay," but in what manner and at what cost to the workers of the most highly developed industrial nations?

Under taskmasters more exacting than those of the Pharaohs, the conquered are compelled to furnish the allotted number of bricks and to seek their own straw from barren fields.

The German workers must slave for long hours, seven days a week, at starvation wages, in order to meet the indemnities demanded. This situation is supposed to be for the advantage of the allied nations, and to some extent it is; but it is only for the few great capitalists of those nations. It is working to the disadvantage of the workers who are compelled to compete on an economic basis with the enslaved workers of Germany.

To those who care to use their perception, the whole damnable international scheme is manifest.

While the—innocent as well as guilty—population of Germany has been degraded to a condition of slavery, the Kaiser has been used as a stabilizer for the country during the process of operation. He has been placed at a distance which would act as a bait to those who desired to reestablish the imperialistic system; and the imperialists have been used as an instrument against that element of the population who might desire to reconstruct along democratic lines.

Any tendency to ally themselves with the free workers of Russia, or to revolt against unbearable conditions was easily counteracted by a slight easing up on the imperialists. The suffering workers, with memories of happier days, fell easy victims to schemes which are impossible of fulfilment.

By these methods the collapse of Germany has been averted while the system of industrial slavery was being established.

For the diplomats and exploiters it is a great game. Millions of workers in Central Europe have been enslaved under the popular cry of "making Germany pay," and the workers of the United States, as well as the other allied nations, are to be brought to the level of those of Central Europe by enforced competition on the industrial and commercial fields.

Already nearly all ship repair work that can be made in Germany at the lower cost is being done there, and our own shipyards, unable to compete, are suffering, while our markets are beginning to feel the influx of cheaply manufactured German goods.

Millions of unemployed in England; millions of unemployed in the United States; and severe unemployment conditions felt in other industrial nations is but a step in the scheme of despotic commercial interests to subjugate and degrade the toilers of the world.

THE SPIRIT OF MEN

Arthur Brisbane, the noted editorial writer, frequently strikes a responsive chord in the minds of his readers. The following, recently appearing in one of the Hearst publications, must appeal to seamen of the old school:

"Skov, Danish captain of a twenty-six-year-old sailing ship, ran into an iceberg. He turned his starboard side to the blow, that his masts might not be uprooted by a head-on collision. Ordinarily the big hole in the ship's side would have taken everybody to the bottom. But Skov has not sailed for nothing. He laid his ship broadside to the wind, the ship rolled over and the hole was lifted out of the water. There he filled up the hole with a casing of cement, sand and coal. For two days he sailed with the wind against his beam, keeping the cement out of the water to dry.

"He and crew are safe, and all he wrote in his log was:

"'Hit iceberg,' and 'Made two casings and stopped water.'

"That reminds you of Cromwell's literary style. It is not unlikely that the blood in Captain Skov got into Cromwell when men from Denmark landed on the English coast, long ago."

The spirit of the real seaman is revealed in a manner which inspires. It is that spirit which will not accept defeat, and can conform to or meet any emergency which makes the Sailors' Union of the Pacific one of the greatest organizations in the ranks of labor. The tendency to take happenings as a mere matter of course is also well ingrained in the membership and it is a characteristic of great worth.

In our hours of ease we are inclined to be affected by the small things of life; but when we meet adversity it is only the major matters which receive our attention. Therefore, we shall emerge from our present struggle with expanded vision.

ONE OF THE RESOURCES

The following from the Portland daily press is enlightening, inasmuch as it shows one of the methods employed in obtaining strikebreakers for vessels:

"Hubert M. Berry, 22, was arrested on a charge of assault with intent to rob after attacking Harry Vines, pawnbroker, with a nearbeer bottle on December 6, changed his plea of not guilty to guilty yesterday morning and was admitted to parole by Acting Presiding Circuit Judge Gatens. The condition of the parole was that Berry ship immediately on a long voyage as a seaman. Berry was committed to the State asylum as insane after his arrest, escaped, was arrested in San Francisco, was declared sane and returned to Multnomah county for trial."

Undoubtedly the conditions of the parole will be complied with, and the thug can ship in one of the Shipping Board or privately owned vessels going offshore. The fact that he had been committed to an asylum for the insane will be no deterrent. What a delightful shipmate he would make for some of our University vacationists?

UNION SHOP AND "SHOP UNION"

In a report of the Committee on Education to the A. F. of L. convention in Denver, the following was adopted by unanimous vote:

"A great cloud of deception has been raised and the public mind greatly befuddled through exploitation of the so-called shop union idea, in which the workers in a particular establishment are supposed to have a share in the direction of the affairs of that establishment, especially as regards the conditions and terms of their employment. The intrinsic weakness of such a plan is found in the fact that it restricts representation on shop committees or whatever form or method of expression is adapted to the employes of that particular shop or establishment, thus denying to them the benefit that will ensue from communication with others who are similarly situated and whose interests are common. The trades union movement is the best known agency for the expression of the desires and conservatism of the interests of the workers. Common employment breeds common habits of thought as well as of effort, and common interests must find common outlet, and this is not to be secured under conditions which set up between groups of workers the artificial barrier of what payroll their names appear upon. Collective bargaining and all the various activities for which a trade union properly is formed, and to the legitimate carrying out of which it devotes its existence, may only be given their full and beneficial application when the dealings between employer and employed rest on the full recognition of the trades union as the one proper and efficient instrument for the expression of the needs of its members. Democracy in industry can only be successfully founded on right relations between the workers and the managers, and these relations will not exist until the trades union is recognized as the basic unit and not the group as limited by the single shop or establishment."

AT OUR OWN TERMS

By J. P. H.

(In answer to a recent offer from the shipowners.)

They have driven the sailor from the sea;
A farmer in his stead
Sprawls over the wheel to the vessel's keel;
A student bungles the lead,
And a ragged tramp from jail set free
Keeps watch on the fo'csle head.

A vessel is leaving port tonight.
Of all her lubber crew
No man can steer till she be clear,
Nor keep her headed true,
And a grumpling mate the Golden Gate
Must steer the vessel through.

A farmer has taken my place at sea,
Though he knows not main from fore;
He knows not the keel from a wire reel,
Nor the word "abaft" from "before";
And never a lifeboat has he launched,
Nor placed his hand on an oar.

A student takes my trick at the helm,
Though he knows not "port" from "luff";
He knows not a chock from a leading-block,
Nor a moderate sea from a rough.
And he never has answered the words "give way,"
Nor the order of "way enough."

A hobo is standing my lookout watch,
Though he knows not red from green;
He knows not a brig from a schooner's rig,
Nor a ship from a barkentine;
And never a bottom-board has he trod,
Nor a rowlock has he seen.

A lubber has taken my place at sea;
I will take his place on the farm.
I will stack his hay. But they shall pay—
By the strength of my right arm!—
When for those of the road and for those of the school
The sea shall have lost its charm,
And the sailor again goes back to his ship
And the farmer back to his farm.

The M. E. B. A. of San Francisco merit commendation for the spirited and intelligent manner in which they met the aggressions of the shipowners. Confronted with a situation which savored of betrayal, these men continued the long struggle with the Sword of Damocles hanging over their heads. They conducted their fight in a manner which compels the respect of all who realize the position into which they were jockeyed.

The annual report of Secretary Morrison of the American Federation of Labor shows that during the past fiscal year there were 1635 strikes, involving 191,934 members of unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and that $8,462,175.09 was expended to sustain members on strike during the past year.

The most powerful labor organization is that which in addition to the ability to "put up a fight" has the brains to put up a good argument in justification or prevention of the last resort.

the Government and are indeed in uncertain measure beyond the authority of Government. Today, Congress and the State Legislatures inevitably have members more or less conscientiously subservient to trade associations, and few candidates dare take sides either way in our great industrial problems, while influence in the shape of terror or reward operates invisibly.

And tomorrow, lest a way be found to control them and make them share legitimately the responsibilities of Government, the power of the trade association inevitably will become unconscionable.—Donald Wilhelm, in the Survey.

SEAMEN'S RIGHTS SUSTAINED

The following decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals is of more than ordinary interest, due to the fact that it is based upon unusual contentions.

The plaintiff was seriously crippled by the breaking up of the bones of one leg, which is permanently twisted and materially shorter than the other.

Suit was commenced in the United States District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, July 11, 1917. Affidavit of defense was filed July 24, 1917. The action was brought on the common law side of the Court to recover for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff on January 31, 1917, while plaintiff was employed as deckhand and donkeyman on the barge "Wiconisco," operated by the Philadelphia and Reading Company (defendants).

Lewis C. Boehm, attorney for the Legal Aid Society at New York, where plaintiff had been placed in the United States Marine Hospital immediately after the accident, was attorney of record for the plaintiff, but before trial Silax B. Axtell, the undersigned attorney, had been duly substituted.

The contention of the claimant (defendant-in-error) was that the injury sustained by him was caused by the failure of the defendant (plaintiff-in-error) to provide proper appliances and fittings for the work claimant was engaged in at the time of injury.

United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, Plaintiff-in-Error vs. Carl A. Berg, Defendant-in-Error. No. 2627. October Term, 1920.

In error to the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Before Buffington, Woolley and Davis, Circuit Judges.

Davis, Circuit Judge: This suit was brought by Carl A. Berg, plaintiff below, a seaman on the barge "Wiconisco," owned and operated by the Philadelphia and Reading Railway Company, to recover in a common law action damages for injuries received by him. The barge was lying in New York harbor. She had a donkey engine below her decks at the bow, over which was a steam winch being operated at the time of the accident to pull another barge alongside of her on the starboard side. The rope leading from the other barge came in at the starboard chock of the "Wiconisco" and passed through a 14-inch snatch-block to the starboard nigger head, around which it was wound. This snatch-block was of proper size and hooked in an eye-bolt attached to the deck 3 feet 10 inches from the starboard drum. The top of the eye-bolt when standing straight up was about 7½ inches high above the deck. In that position the hook of the block could easily enter the eye, but the eye-bolt was bent so far forward that only the end of the hook of the block could enter the eye-bolt. This caused a great strain on the hook, the tendency of which was to straighten it out and break it, and this is what happened when a heavy strain came upon it. When the hook broke, something, presumably the block, struck plaintiff's leg, producing compound fracture, "crushing and pulverizing both bones for a distance of about 3 inches, the approximate thickness of the block." The cause was tried to a jury, which returned a verdict for the plaintiff and the defendant sued out a writ of error, on which he is before this Court.

The several assignments of error raise the following questions:

1. The plaintiff failed to prove the cause of action alleged in his statement.

It is a fundamental principle of universal application, both in law and equity, that the proofs must correspond with the allegations. The purpose of the rule is that the opposite party may be fairly apprised of the specific nature of the questions involved in the issue so that he will not be misled and be surprised at the trial. Jones v. Marchand, 60 U. S. 1 How. 165; Nash v. Towne, 72 U. S. 689, 698. Did the statement in this case comply with that requirement? The plaintiff alleged in the "sixth" paragraph of the statement that his injuries were received as a result of the negligence of the defendant "in failing to provide a block and tackle and the attachments and fittings thereof for use on the donkey-engine of a sufficient size, adequate strength and qualify for the uses and purposes to which it was necessarily put, and in that no suitable tackle was provided by the said defendant, its agents, servants and employees for the carrying on of the work required of this plaintiff on board the said barge." The specific defect in the barge or its equipment which, the evidence tends to show, caused the injury complained of was an eye-bolt, which was so bent over that the hook of the block could not enter it so as to be seated and rest in its normal position. The end only of the hook could enter the eye, and as a consequence when power was applied an unusual leverage and strain was exerted upon the neck or curve of the hook. The defendant contends that the allegations in the statement charging negligence were not sufficiently definite to apprise it of what it had to meet, and accordingly it moved for a non-suit on this ground, among others. The Court overruled the motion and on motion for a new trial said: "I think the eye-bolt, without which the block and tackle used on the donkey-engine could not have been employed in hauling the other barge, is included within the 'attachments and fittings,' and that the evidence that the eye-bolt was so bent as not to permit the seating of the hook to its position was sufficiently set out in the allegation of lack of sufficient size and quality." If the eye-bolt is included within the "attachments and fittings," the question arises, of what are they "attachments and fittings"? What is the antecedent of the word "thereof"? The defendant says that "the allegation in the statement of claim would seem to refer to the failure to furnish proper appliance in the form of a hook, block and tackle." That is, the defendant is charged with failing to provide proper "attachments and fittings" for the block and tackle. The plaintiff contends that the eye-bolt is part of the ship, but is included in the equipment that goes with the winch. Grammatically the antecedent of the word "thereof" is "block and tackle." In other words, plaintiff charges that defendant failed to provide a block and tackle having attachments and fittings for use on the donkey-engine, etc. Neither the block and tackle nor the attachments, supposed to include the eye-bolt, as we understand it, were used literally "on the donkey-engine," but in connection with it "for the uses and purposes to which it was necessarily put." If this allegation of negligence stood alone, it must be admitted that it is vague and indefinite. But there is a second charge of negligence, which is separate and distinct from the first and additional to it. It is separated from the first by a comma and the conjunction "and," which is followed by the phrase "in that," whose function is to designate the particular additional negligence charged, which is, that "no suitable tackle was provided by the said defendant * * * * for carrying on the work required of this plaintiff on board the said barge." "Tackle" here is broader than as used in the first allegation and includes any and all of the equipment or outfit used by the plaintiff in carrying on his work at the time of the accident on the barge. Tackle is defined by the Standard Dictionary as "a mechanism of ropes, pulley-blocks, hooks, etc., for raising and lowering heavy weights"; "The instruments collectively for carrying on any specific work or undertaking; gear; hooks; outfit; equipment." It is defined by the Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia as "a mechanism or apparatus in general for applying the power of purchase in manipulation, shifting, raising or lowering objects or materials; the windlass and its appurtenances, as used for hoisting ore from small depths; equipment or gear in general; a combination of appliances." Hawkins' Mechanical Dictionary defines tackle as "the instruments, taken as a whole, for carrying on a work; tools; outfit; equipment."

Tackle, as used here, including the eye-bolt as a part of the equipment used by defendant in carrying on the work of drawing the other barge alongside the "Wiconisco" at the time of the injury to the plaintiff, and as the defendant had in its possession the hook, eye bolt and barge and in its employ the associates of the plaintiff engaged in the work with him, and thus doubtless knew or had the means of knowing the nature of the accident it was called upon to defend, we feel that, while the statement as such was not a model to be followed and was poor pleading, yet the defendant knew what it had to meet and was not surprised at the trial, and if it was not, the learned trial Judge properly refused to direct a verdict. Nash v. Towne, supra; Washington, etc., R. Co. v. Hickey, 166 U. S. 521. Furthermore, if the defendant did not know what particular piece or part of the tackle, then and there used in the work, was meant, it could have ascertained it by a bill of particulars.

2. The plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence and could not recover.

The questions of whether or not the eye-bolt was defective, and if it was whether or not that defect caused the hook to break which resulted in the plaintiff's injury, as well as the question of contributory negligence of the plaintiff, were submitted to the jury. The defendant contends that there was no testimony from which the jury could draw the conclusion that the condition of the eye-bolt could have caused the hook to break, and that even if the eye-bolt was bent over so that only the end of the hook could enter it, and the hook was not seated in its normal position in the eye, the testimony does not justify the conclusion that the hook would have broken more easily in that position than if it had entered the eye fully and properly to its normal position.

This contention does not take into consideration the "real evidence" in the case. The jury had before it the hook and the testimony as to how it was fastened in the eye-bolt and could readily draw its own conclusion. In addition to the usual methods of establishing facts by direct or positive evidence and circumstantial evidence, there is that of "self-perception or self-observation." We have three classes of evidence: 1. Direct or testimonial evidence; 2. Indirect, or circumstantial evidence; 3. Autopic preference, or real evidence. Greenleaf on Evidence, Sixteenth Edition, Vol. 1, section 13a; Wigmore on Evidence, section 1150 et seq. "In a great measure proof of this means (autopic preference or real evidence) may be more potent than by any other evidence." The Modern Law of Evidence by Chamberlayne, section 3588: "Inspection is like admission in that while not testimony, it is an instrument for dispensing with testimony, and in a doubtful case, the class of testimony it dispenses with might be a controlling circumstance." Gaunt v. State, 50 N. J. L. 490, 495. The jury had the hook and the eye-bolt before it and, being composed of men of common sense and experience, could determine for itself whether or not it was broken because it could not fully and properly enter the eye. It was thus not wholly dependent upon what was said about the hook and eye-bolt.

3. The court was without jurisdiction to try this case on its law side.

Plaintiff here is seeking to enforce a maritime right by means of a common law remedy in the United States District Court. Can a United States District Court take jurisdiction on its law side of a cause of action within its admiralty jurisdiction? This principle of law arises out of the Constitution and the laws of the United States. Article 3 of the Constitution of the United States provides in section 1, that "The Judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." It provides in section 2 that, "The Judicial power shall extend * * * to all cases, of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction." Article 1, section 8, confers upon Congress the power "to make all laws which may be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof."

In furtherance of these constitutional powers, the Congress by section 9 of the Judiciary Act of 1789 (1 Stat. 76, 77), and continued by sections 24 and 256 of the Judicial Code, gave the District Courts of the United States "exclusive original jurisdiction of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdictions, saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it." In giving exclusive original cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty, the Congress at the same time and by the same law saved the right of a common law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it. Whether the action is tried at common law or in admiralty, the liability of the defendant is measured by the maritime law and not by the common law. Southern Pacific Railroad v. Jensen, 244 U. S. 205; Chelentis v. Luckenback S. S. Company, 247 U. S. 372, and Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart, U. S.

Whether a suitor has a common law remedy on the law side of the District Court in an admiralty action depends upon the meaning of the words "Common law remedy." The defendant contends that as there is no common law jurisdiction in the Federal District Court, that Court is not competent to give a common law remedy and, therefore, the only remedy in admiralty cognizable by the District Court is on its admiralty side. While it is true that all remedies of the District Court are statutory, it is equally true that its original jurisdiction extends to "all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity" brought by certain parties and for certain amounts, showing that while its jurisdiction is statutory it extends by express provision of statute to matters at common law and in equity. While its jurisdiction embraces causes of admiralty there is saved to suitors the right of a common law remedy where the common law is competent to give it. The plaintiff is seeking to enforce his maritime right not in a common law Court, but in a Court without common law jurisdiction, by means of a common law remedy. The common law remedy which the District Court affords is that of trial by jury, and such a remedy is saved to him by the clause conferring on the District Court exclusive admiralty jurisdiction. Section 256 Judicial Code. In the Chelentis case, supra, the Supreme Court said, in drawing the distinction between rights and damages:

> Plainly, we think, under the saving clause a right sanctioned by the maritime law may be enforced through any appropriate remedy recognized at common law.

A remedy recognized at common law competent to be given by the District Court on its law side is an action tryable to a jury for damages measured by the rules of admiralty.

The cause of action before us arising in admiralty was a tort, and of such torts the District Court on its admiralty side has jurisdiction. With reference to such torts, the law saves to suitors the right of a common law remedy when the common law is competent to give it. The common law remedy in tort is saved to suitors in the District Court when the jurisdictional requisite or citizenship and amount are present. They are present in this case, and the law allows the plaintiff to elect which remedy he will pursue, and he has elected to pursue his common law remedy for damages in tort measured by the rules applicable to admiralty cases. The Supreme Court of the United States has not passed upon this specific question, but the right to try on the law side of the District Court a cause arising in admiralty has been recognized in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, Erickon v. Roebling's Sons Co., 261 Fed. 966; Hanrahan v. Pacific Transport Co., 261 Fed. 951; Storgard v. France and Canada S. S. Corporation, 263 Fed. 545.

We do not find error in this case and, therefore, the judgment of the District Court will be

AFFIRMED.

Woolley, Circuit Judge, dissenting. Being impressed with the office of pleadings in actions at law, I am constrained to dissent on the ground that (as I read the record) the plaintiff declared on one cause of action, and over objections seasonably made, was allowed to recover on another cause of action.

I concur on the jurisdictional question.

LOCKOUT ITEMS

It is now two months and a half since the various maritime unions were locked out, and it is interesting to follow up each little incident and to answer the question: what has been gained so far? Is there any relief in view to stimulate the present traffic congestion? Apparently not. That either side has gained anything is questionable. The shipowners are having the hardest time to fill their ships with non-union and incompetent crews, and whatever element they do get to work in their boats is of such poor quality that one might come to the conclusion that the shipowners will soon get tired of having their vessels deteriorate under inefficient handling.

. Nor is it to be wondered at, for after all, one cannot become a sailor overnight. The greatest dread of the average person on shore concerning a sea voyage is the seasickness, which many people see fit to consider worse yet than the flu? Seasickness will turn a physically strong man into a helpless baby. It is, therefore, easy to realize what condition vessels are in that are now daily leaving port, not having a single man on board fit to stand on his legs. The protection these men are able to give to passengers is nominal, since they themselves are in need of help to walk along the deck. In consequence of the poor quality of crews manning the few vessels that leave port, there is great clamor and complaint among passengers who are thus suffering the poorest service ever rendered. The steamship companies are thus building up a reputation which, no doubt, will be felt long after this present strike is settled.

So much for the coastwise passenger service. On vessels that leave for offshore trade, other difficulties are to be observed. We find announcements in our daily press about regular departures of freight vessels, making the public believe that the shipowners are not in the least concerned with the present lockout of the maritime unions. Yet a little enlightenment will, doubtless, help to change their view.

In the first place, the number of vessels are not as numerous as claimed. Second, having the same difficulties in handling the ship, due to inefficiency of the crews, the trips cannot be considered successful until the vessel has loaded cargo, made the trip to the respective port of destination, discharged the cargo, taken another load of freight and returned to the home port. The number of ships that have so far successfully gone through these stages of routine work are very few. Vessels that have left for European, South American and Australian ports are arriving there all right, but are being put to delays, due to the class conscientious workers in above named ports being unwilling to work on a ship loaded and manned by non-union crews. Considering these above-named facts, one is easily inclined to regard the shipowners' statements that shipping is normal as fairy tales.

Arises then the question: have the combined unions gained anything; are they standing firm or are they weakening. In order to answer that question one is forced to study the economic standing of the unions concerned in their respective relationship towards industry. There is an understanding among labor leaders and make up for this loss, but that a strike whether successfully accomplished or not, is a loss to the worker, as he is not only earning nothing while striking, but is spending his savings and running in debt and will again have to work so much to make up for this loss, gut that a strike, lasting a month or longer, is a dead failure.

This statement may or may not be correct when applied to men working on shore, having a house and a home with a family to support; but the same argument can not be used in dealing with men who follow the sea. I shall try to substantiate this fact. Seamen, taken as a whole, are a race of men living in their own surroundings while on board of a ship. Every day they are called upon to do their hard work, spending their spare time in quarters that are more primitive than the cheapest lodging house on shore, receiving foodstuff that was never meant to make a sissy out of anybody, thus getting good training for privation. When he makes port he proves himself a good spender, as long as the money lasts, taking it for granted that in a few days he will be broke and will then have to get along as well as he can. Having, in most cases, no responsible dependents, this task is easily accomplished. He has proven himself a good spender and is now game enough to take the consequences. Money was made for him to spend, nothing else worrying him. If he has a big payday he will spend big money; if otherwise, he will spend as much as he has. Poverty does not bother. It is pretty safe to assert that if he works nine months in a year he will spend nine months' wages; if he works six months he will spend six months' wages. Therefore proving that he is not depending on any specified working time, not needing a 365 days' pay in a year, since he never spends more than he earns. With the above made argument, I am trying to prove that this present lockout is not worrying him seriously, the only difference is that he is not spending the money which he would be earning if times were normal.

To advance such an argument one is inclined to say: Oh, well, if those sailors do not know the value of money why pay them big wages? But in justification I must say that the above made standpoint is not exactly to their liking; such conditions were brought about by the old-time shipping and crimping system, never giving a seaman a chance to be somebody. Today, with the great wave of emancipation in progress, these men realize that they also are entitled to a little comfort and pleasure in this life, to have a right to happiness and cheer, to have a house and home and a family to care for, to have a place when he makes port, after having done his hard duties at sea, to rest himself among loved ones who will take interest in him, which will then naturally keep him away from the usual haunts so that he will not fall prey to crimps and harpies that are always ready to take his hard-earned money away from him.

We, therefore, find that his present struggle to retain fair wages and working conditions is well intentioned to establish himself as a free worker and to the right to live a life as he by nature is entitled to live; also that the very hardships to which he is continually subject have fitted the sailor to suffer longer the pressure of aggression from those who would starve him with submission.

NORTH DAKOTA LAWS

The people of North Dakota, who have displayed a tendency towards advancement, have thrown an awful scare into big business by their penchant for constructive legislation. The following has particularly aroused the wrath of the vested interests:

The industrial program, consisting of a central State bank, a terminal elevator and mill, the building of homes on long-time payments at cost and cheaper rural credits.

State hail insurance at cost.

State Bonding of public officials.

State income tax law.

State Department of Immigration.

State guarantee of bank deposits.

A compensation law for industrial workers.

The best mine inspection law in the country.

Full train crew law and protection of railroad workers.

An anti-injunction law to protect labor.

An eight-hour day and minimum wage law for women.

A rigid child labor law.

Labor is a necessity to human existence; being such, it is obvious that under natural conditions it should be a pleasure, not a penance.

Reformers generally would succeed better if they were to give less attention to the effects of the strike and more to the causes thereof.

SONG OF THE WAGE SLAVE

When the long, long day is over, and the Big Boss gives me my pay,
I hope that it won't be hell-fire, as some of the parsons say;
And I hope that it won't be heaven, with some of the parsons I've met.
All I want is just quiet, just to rest and forget.
Look at my face, toil-furrowed; look at my calloused hands.
Master, I've done Thy bidding; wrought
in Thy many lands—
Wrought for the little masters, big-bellied they be, and rich.
I've done their desire for a daily hire, and
I die like a dog in a ditch—
I, the primitive toiler, half-naked and
grimed to the eyes,
Sweating it deep in their ditches, swining
it stark in their styes;
Hurling down forests before me,
spanning tumultuous streams;
Down in the ditch building o'er me palaces
fairer than dreams;
Boring the rock to the ore-bed, driving the road through the fen,
Resolute, dumb, uncomplaining, a man in a world of men.
Master, I've filled my contract, wrought in Thy many lands;
Not by my sins will Thou judge me, but by the work of my hands.
Master, I've done Thy bidding, and the light is low in the west,
And the long, long shift is over. Master,
I've earned it—Rest.

FARMERS' FIGHT VINDICATED

During the fall and winter of 1919, and January and February of 1920, the Farmers' National Council conducted a continuous nation-wide campaign against the Cummins-Esch law and in favor of the two-year extension of government operation of the railroads. It was vigorously attacked and denounced by reactionary farm leaders for so doing, but showed that an overwhelming majority of the real farmers of America favored the two-year extension. In January, 1920, representatives of the American Farm Bureau Federation, of the National Grange, the National Farmers' Union and of these smaller farm organizations endorsed the Cummins-Esch law, returning the railroads to their owners with a guaranteed dividend. Representatives of these farm organizations criticized the Farmers' National Council and asserted that it did not represent the real sentiment of the farmers in opposing the Cummins-Esch law and in demanding and urging the two-year extension of government operation of the railroads.

Since that time the Farmers' National Council has been completely vindicated in the position it took. The Council repeatedly stated during its campaign that a large increase in freight rates would be inevitable under the Cummins-Esch law through the inherent wastefulness of private competitive operation of the railroads and the guarantee of dividends; that law has proven the most severe blow that agriculture has received for many years. The American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, and the National Farmers' Union have all had to change their position on the Cummins-Esch law, and have denounced the guaranteed dividend feature; but their action last year has cost the farmers of America at least a billion dollars, and probably much more.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, at the conclusion of its two weeks' conference in the national capital in April, issued a statement urging the repeal of guaranteed railroad returns in which the statement was made:

"The Transportation Act of 1920 contained a provision which attempts to compel the Interstate Commerce Commission to make rates sufficient to produce a minimum net return of 5½ per cent or more above all expenses and taxes on the present value of American railroads. The American Farm Bureau Federation believes this provision is paternalistic class legislation, as it attempts to make a government guaranty on the cost plus basis. This provision has caused the Commission to establish excessive increases in rates which have served to paralyze American industry."

The officers of the American Farm Bureau Federation know perfectly well that the Cummins-Esch law was no more "paternalistic class legislation" in April, 1921, than it was in January, 1920. It was just the same sort of legislation and has just the same sort of an effect then as now. The spokesmen for the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange and the National Farmers' Union, either incompetent to judge the effects of legislation or wilfully playing the game of the big financial interests in endorsing the Cummins-Esch law in 1920, when the inevitable results thereof were obviously clear to every person who had really studied the railroad situations—are they safe leaders of the farmers today?

American farmers realize that not only must the guaranteed dividend section of the Cummins-Esch law be repealed, but that the entire law must be repealed and the roads restored to unified government operation for service and not for speculative profit. This is only the sure way to reduce freight rates to a normal level.

Immediately upon the resumption of unified government operation, freight rates should be reduced to those in effect when the roads were returned, and if there should be any deficit this should be paid out of the public treasury, so that it would come out of the taxes upon the enormous incomes, earnings and wealth of this country, and not out of the farmers and other consumers, upon whom the Cummins-Esch law levies a tremendous and unnecessary financial burden.

RUSSIA'S WIRELESS PHONES

While our daily newspapers are recording the experiments of wireless telephony over short distances, nothing is said of the fact that in Russia full press wireless telephonic communication takes place daily between such places as Moscow and Petrograd, in Western Russia, and Omsk, Tomsk, Chita, Irkutsk, and other Siberian cities. Wireless telephonic communication is now being conducted over a 3000-mile space in the Soviet Republic.

SOCIALISTS TO AID MOONEY

An initiative fight for a constitutional amendment to provide a new and fair trial for Thomas J. Mooney and Warren K. Billings has been opened by the Socialist party of California.

The party, through its State executive committee, has already drawn the amendment and outlined plans for committees and headquarters throughout the State to secure signatures.

The work is now in the hands of the executive committee, of which Cameron H. King is chairman.

The proposed amendment contains two provisions, one omnibus, covering all such cases as the frameup of Mooney and Billings in the Preparedness Day explosion, and the other specific and calling for a new trial for these two by name.

The second provision would make the amendment, should it carry, applicable to the bomb defendants in spite of any question of retroactive effect.

The proposed amendment will be circulated on initiative petitions as soon as Attorney-General U. S. Webb has assigned a title to it.

The proposed measure, which was introduced in the Socialist executive committee by Cameron King, follows:

"To amend Article XX of the Constitution by adding a new section, to read as follows:

"Section 22. (a) The Legislature shall provide a method whereby a person convicted of a felony shall have a complete new trial of the case in which he or she was convicted, upon showing material fraud, perjury, collusion or conspiracy by witnesses, or prosecuting officials, or both, in said case.

"(b) Upon passage of this amendment, Thomas J. Mooney and Warren K. Billings shall be forthwith remanded to the custody of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, for a complete new trial of the cases in which each, respectively, was convicted."

Mooney's case was carried to the State Supreme Court three years ago, and that Court held that it had no power to reopen the case, no matter what new evidence had been brought to light indicating that the conviction was an error. The proposed amendment would make justice possible in such a case generally, as well as providing for justice in the bomb cases.

A SILLY STORY ABOUT CHINA

Some people, usually the Baptist missionary from New England, tell us fantastic stories of how Chinese women kill their female children.

This legend was needed in order to secure funds for the conversion of the Chinese to the Baptist faith—a pretty tough job.

But the Chinese adore children, and though many little ones die in days of famine, I do not believe that any are ever killed deliberately. I would rather believe the word of a Chinaman than the word of a missionary.—Raymond Redcliffe in New Witness (London).

Seamen and longshoremen have the same enemies; they must show a solid front.

"JOKER" IN GAG ACT REPEAL

What is in effect a "joker" in the repeal of the Espionage Act during the present technical state of war, was brought to light recently by the American Civil Liberties' Union in a statement declaring that the postoffice wartime censorship of papers, books and letters under the Act is still in full legal force.

Congress, in adopting on March 3 the resolution repealing or making inoperative the war statutes, failed to touch the postoffice censorship, which was authorized by a special section of the Act not dependent on a state of war. Under that section (Title XII) the postoffice may exclude from the mails any matter which in its opinion advocates or urges "treason, insurrection or forcible resistance to any law of the United States." No hearing or notice to publishers is required.

Under this section of the Espionage Act the Postoffice Department has recently excluded from the mails a number of radical papers and books, among which are Kropotkin's "Conquest of Bread" in an Italian translation, and the "Freie Arbeiter Stimme," a Jewish anarchist weekly.

Senator Wm. E. Borah, author of the resolution repealing the war laws, has written the American Civil Liberties Union that he would take up the correction of this error.

Albert DeSilver, of the American Civil Liberties Union, says in the statement issued: "All the dangers and evils accompanying Burleson's administration of the Espionage Act are still with us in law if not in fact. The Postmaster-General is still the legal autocrat of what may pass through the mails. Under the vague language of the law, his whims may determine what constitutes 'forcible resistance to any law of the United States.' The decision in the case of Kropotkin's 'Conquest of Bread,' a scientific study freely distributed for years, shows how silly and how dangerous such a censorship can be. We shall exert every effort for a repeal of the section."

WHERE WOMEN MAKE LAWS

In Finland eighteen women sit in the National Parliament. In Austria eight were returned at the 1919 elections. American votes sent one woman to Congress and thirty-three to the State Legislatures. Holland has two female M. P.'s, Great Britain has one, Poland has eight, and Denmark eleven. In the Jewish National Assembly (Palestine) several women were elected at the 1919 election—one to cabinet rank. Mrs. Cowan, recently elected to the West Australian State Parliament, is the first female parliamentarian in Australia.

Although the women of Germany were only enfranchised eight weeks before the elections in 1918, no less than thirty-nine were elected to the National Parliament, 155 to the State Parliaments, and 4000 to the various municipal councils throughout that country.

The compulsory arbitrationist who would have wages fixed by law probably flatters himself that he is ahead of his generation. In reality he is merely the re-embodied spirit of an age long past.

eral army, but a course of education in Americanism, says Matthew Woll, president of the International Photo Engravers' Union, writing in the American Photo Engraver.

"What the political managers of that State now require is not more gunmen, but a thorough lesson in the elements of civics. What the Governor of that State should now demand is not more troops, but a greater sense of justice and the full measure of the workers' constitutional guarantees to the protection of their rights to organize and combine, to safeguard their lives, to exercise their freedom, fully and freely.

"No State which tolerates a feudalistic industrial system can ever expect to find a happy and tranquilized community. No State which allows its function to be usurped by an army of gunmen can ever hope to merit a reward other than that of pillage, murder and bloodshed.

"America, the land of the free, is not a place for feudalism of any kind."

Lobby Kills Coal Bill

Organized coal interests have triumphed over Senator Frelinghuysen and his plan to stabilize the coal industry, and the bill has been sent back to the committee.

The Senator said his bill was opposed by a lobby of coal barons worth millions of dollars, and that he believed they did not want government co-operation, and that "they don't want to be interfered with, no matter if the price of coal should be boosted to $40 a ton."

He said the National Coal Association, which speaks for the bituminous industry, is the chief defender of the coal trade.

"The National Coal Association will agree to nothing which places any obstacle in the way of unrestricted exploitation of the fuel consuming public. They confess that retail prices are too high, but disclaim the responsibility. On the other hand, they refuse to acquiesce in any method which will locate the real profiteer."

Uncle Sam Profiteers

The Government's postal system profiteered last year to the extent of $1,700,000, says Postmaster-General Hays, who recommends that interest on postal savings deposits be increased from 2 per cent to 3 per cent.

He declared that hundreds of thousands of depositors are practically being defrauded because their certificates specifically state that 2 per cent interest is paid on deposits, and do not state that nothing is paid on deposits held less than one year. Because of this system, he said, the average interest paid on all money held was only 1½ per cent.

FAIRIES BANNED IN RUSSIA

A recent dispatch to the London Morning Post states that "All religious or mythological subjects are banned from a competition for the best short story written for Russian children, which has been organized by the Moscow Societe Commissariat for Education.

Labor News

Sheet metal workers in St. Petersburg, Fla., have organized and the idea is spreading to other building craftsmen in the vicinity.

Organized plasterers of Detroit have defeated employers who would operate anti-union shops. The employers agree to the union shop and $1.12½ an hour.

Lange & Bergstrom, contractors on the Marine Naval Base Hospital, building at San Diego, have announced open shop conditions on the job.

Due to the fact that several carriers failed to appeal to the U. S. Railroad Labor Board for a reduction of wages of certain employes, the board has extended the 12 per cent cut to these carriers and employes.

The Steenerson Bill to reclassify certain postal employes, entailing salary increases of between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000, was passed by the Senate and sent to conference last week.

Several companies of the Georgia National Guard were sent to Fitzgerald, Ga., last week to maintain order on the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railway, where the railway employes are on strike.

A wage reduction of 15 per cent by the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, effective July 16, was made known to representatives of the employes at the Steelton plant July 1. The reduction will affect all employes except salaried men, whose reduction will amount to 10 per cent, effective August 1.

David S. Robb, international financial agent of the United Mine Workers of America, and eleven other union leaders were arrested at Williamstown, West Virginia, last week by Major Tom Davis, Governor Morgan's personal representative in the coal strike region, on a charge of unlawful assemblage.

Approximately seven thousand coke workers in the independent plants of the Connelsville coke region are affected by a 10 per cent reduction in wages, the second announced this year. The new rate is about 33 1-3 per cent below the rate paid January 1, but according to coke men, 45 per cent higher than the prevailing rate in 1912. Only about 7 per cent of the independent ovens are in operation.

On July 8 Alexander Howat and August Dorchy, president and vice-president of the Kansas Miners' Union, were sentenced to six months in jail and fined $500 by Judge Frank W. Boss in the Cherokee County District Court at Columbus, Kansas. They were convicted of violation of the Kansas industrial law by calling a strike of miners last February. One of the features of the case was an affidavit signed by all members but one of the jury after the trial, declaring that the jurors did not believe that Howat and Dorchy were guilty of "any wrong." It was filed by counsel for the miners' officials on July 5 as a part of a motion for a new trial. Notice of an appeal was given after the passing of sentence and arrangements were made for furnishing bond. Judge Boss also ordered that Howat and Dorchy give a bond of $4000 each not to again violate the industrial court law.

SEAMEN! WATCH FOR DEVELOPMENTS.

See Our Weekly Reports Posted in All Union Halls.

I have said that I would never be attorney for shipowners, until the seamen were shipowners. One of the purposes of my visit to Europe this summer is to acquire knowledge as to shipping conditions abroad and particularly to ascertain with what degree of success the seamen of Italy are operating ships.

Any seamen, who, with a view to becoming shipowners some time, are willing to form "a Seamen's Society for Savings" and will pledge to save one-fourth of their wages over their board and lodging per annum, said savings to be put in a depository that they themselves may select, please communicate with the undersigned.

World's Workers

One of the terms of settlement of the British coal miners' strike provides that a national board, with district boards, will be created representing equally the miners and mine owners, to regulate the system of profit sharing, under which 83 per cent of the proceeds, after the payment of standard charges, will go to the miners in wages and the remaining 17 per cent to the owners.

A strike at Kobe, Japan, has caused the closing down of the Kawasaki dockyard, the largest in Japan, employing twenty thousand men. This interrupts the construction work on the eight battleships-eight cruisers program. The submarines which are under construction are being guarded by bluejackets. The strikers, including several thousand from the Mitsabishi shipyards at Nagasaki, which also are closed, held a parade, in which red flags were carried and placards displayed with the inscription, "Down With Capitalism!" A collision with the police occurred, at one point, involving many casualties.

Late reports from Germany show that the renewal of activity in agriculture and in the building trades, due to the good weather, did not react upon industry. More situations were filled during the month, but this was due to the ending of the school term, which brought many thousands of young workers into the labor market, rather than to an actual increase in the number of posts available. The number of totally unemployed persons in receipt of out-of-work donation decreased from 415,836 on the first of April to 400,097 on the first of May, or by nearly 4 per cent; among men there was a decrease amounting to 5.2 per cent, but among women an increase of 2 per cent. Returns from trade unions show increased unemployment during April. Out of a total of 5,509,761 members covered by the returns, 217,307, or 3.9 per cent, were out of work at the end of the month, as compared with 3.7 per cent at the end of March and 1.9 per cent in April, 1920.

The annual convention of the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress will be held in Winnipeg, beginning Monday, August 22. In the convention call officers of the congress say: "The period of reaction through which we are passing has brought into prominence most of the old problems and many new ones which organized labor is called upon to face. The struggle of the workers to maintain their standard of living under these adverse circumstances has been taken advantage of by many employers throughout the Dominion to abrogate collective bargaining under the guise of the introduction of the 'open shop,' 'optional plan of employment,' and similar subterfuges. Powerful groups of employers have openly declared their opposition to the enactment of progressive social and industrial legislation, and it is noticeable that legislation has been left in abeyance calling for the eight-hour day, unemployment insurance, protection of women and children, and other recommendations presented at the first annual meeting of the international labor body, Washington, D. C., almost two years ago, and in which the Canadian Government delegates concurred."

Domestic and Naval

Fifty-three Chinese stowaways aboard the American steamer "Ausable" were taken into custody by immigration officials last week when the vessel docked at Galveston from Havana, Cuba.

The dreadnaught "New Mexico," flagship of the Pacific fleet, won the navy trophy for gunnery for 1920-21, the "Pennsylvania," Atlantic fleet flagship, was second, and the "Arkansas," Pacific fleet, third. The "New Mexico" will wear a white "E" painted on the conning tower and the other two vessels a red "E."

A bill signed recently by Governor Blaine of Wisconsin, requires that all children up to sixteen years of age, unless they have completed the equivalent of a four-year high school course, must attend school half-time during the day. No child who has not completed the high school work may have full-time employment, and all persons under sixteen must have at least eight hours each week of public instruction.

There were thirty-six lynchings in the United States during the first six months of the year, twenty-four more than the number recorded during the same period in 1920, according to a report issued by the Truskegee Institute. They include two white men and thirty-four negroes, two of the latter being women. Eleven of these put to death were charged with rape. All lynchings were in southeastern States, Mississippi leading with ten.

Action by the State Department toward nullification of the alien poll tax law passed by the last California Legislature is expected by virtually all the foreign colonies in the State. Nearly all the consulates have asked their embassies or ministries to protest to the State Department, either on the ground of specific clauses in treaties exempting their nationals from all but the taxes which are imposed on Americans or under the favored nation clause of treaties. The Japanese and the French claim specific clauses exempt them.

The Patterson - McDonald Shipbuilding Company of Seattle has been awarded $1,028,458 in ship construction claims against the Australian Government, through the decision of a board of arbitrators appointed by the Australian Government and the company, which was filed recently with Cicero B. Hawkins, master in bankruptcy, at Seattle. Claims of the company are out of the construction of nine 4200-ton wooden ships for Australia. Under a recent settlement the United States Shipping Board allowed the company $350,000 on claims arising from the cancellation of shipbuilding contracts from the board.

As a result of unemployment, many individuals and families are destitute in Birmingham. The City Commission recently issued a proclamation calling upon the people for emergency relief measures. Investigation has disclosed that unless definite and systematic measures are adopted to relieve the situation, "large numbers of our people will suffer starvation, sickness and possibly death." Conditions outside of Birmingham, in the coal mining camps of the district, are said by the State Federation of Labor to be steadily growing worse. Three hundred families were reported without food in Pratt City alone.

News from Abroad

Seventy-seven members of the Philippine constabulary were convicted last week of murder for the killing of three American members of the Manila police force and eight other persons in rioting between the constabulary and police at Manila last December.

The Imperial Conference of Dominion Ministers has reviewed the history of British relations with Egypt. It was decided that proposals for a meeting to consider Egyptian aspirations and for safeguarding the imperial interests should be discussed in detail later.

Reports have reached Japanese military headquarters at Seoul, Korea, that a battle has occurred on the Siberian border between Japanese and Koreans, in which five hundred Koreans were killed or wounded. Several thousand malcontent Koreans are alleged to have joined the Siberian Bolshevists.

Greece has no warlike intentions toward Soviet Russia, despite statements to the contrary which have appeared in the European press. This statement has been sent to George Chitcherin, Bolshevik Foreign Minister, who recently sent a telegram to Premier Gounaris asking him to define the attitude of his government.

Discussing the question of international rivalry in the Pacific, former Senator Henry Beranger said that France would not forget her role as a conciliator nor her policy of absolute racial equality and freedom for all. "To us," he said, "black men and yellow men are as good as white men. We recognize only differences in education and individual merit. Let us hope that no imprudence will be committed by statesmen who would forget the policy of France which has made her a great colonial power."

Virtually the entire British Mediterranean fleet is en route for Constantinople, where the situation is viewed with anxiety. British military reinforcements also are going out from England. Turkish Nationalist forces are reported to have penetrated the neutral zone east of Constantinople, and to be preparing to concentrate forces along the Sea of Marmora for an attack on the Turkish capital. The situation has given rise to serious anxiety, and the allied high commissioners at Constantinople have been conferring with General Harrington, commander of allied forces there, regarding steps to be taken in the event of a probable advance by the Nationalists.

In a short time the British fleet will consist only of oil-burning vessels, according to Commander Eyres-Monsell. In explaining the navy estimates in the House of Commons recently, he said that according to calculations the Admirality is spending less for oil than coal on the basis of caloric value. He said two tons of oil would do the work of three tons of coal, and that the use of oil would reduce the personnel. An Admirality reserve of fuel oil, which is being established, probably will be completed in 1921, and it is planned also to build storage tanks around the coast. Answering the question whether the world's oil supply justified the conversion of all ships to oil burners, he said the supply would be sufficient for all needs of the navy.

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

TRANSPORT WORKERS AWAKE

Pacific Coast Unions of Marine Workers Consolidate Their Forces

The educational article, by Donald Wilhelm, which appeared in the Survey, issue of July 2, 1921, and was reproduced in last week's issue of the Journal, sounds a warning to every thoughtful American citizen. The writer states:

"The trade association is today what the corporation and the trust were less than a generation ago, a national problem that threatens the sovereignty of the individual American citizen. It is the inevitable consolidation—these past years have been of the consolidating kind—of trade groups. Small entities, partnership and the like were, a generation ago and during the ensuing years, gathered together in corporation or trusts in order to do collectively what each unit could not do singly. Now corporations and trusts are uniting, in the trade association, to do collectively what each singly cannot do so well and to dominate, even control, legislation and parties, and to prolong evasion of laws intended to restrain abuses in trade.

There are literally thousands of trade associations in America. They have a large area of usefulness—some are deemed invaluable by Government officials, as clearing houses of information for example. Others now stand indicted in Federal Courts for trust practices in restraining trade; for example, the Portland Cement Association, which includes all the manufacturers of Portland cement in the United States and Canada, is alleged to control everywhere supplies of cement and is said to have increased its cost from about 50 cents a barrel to about $4.50. But the larger threat is political rather than economic—it may be that the great struggle of the next one hundred years will be whether democracy or aggregations of economic groups are to dominate and control America."

A close observation of the operations of these consolidated economic groups, reveals how closely they conform to the original Troutman chart, which was first adopted as a basis of organization by the Industrial Workers of the World.

While the workers were never permitted to put their theory into practice, because of apparent dangerous tendencies toward absolutism, the various representatives and experts of trades associations adopted the plan and insidiously put it into operation; thereby constituting a menace to our established institutions which will require intelligent and effective organization to counteract.

At present we are confronted with a situation where the very fountain head of our Government is subject to the influence or control of these powerful combinations.

The sinister activities of these trades associations, or super-trusts, are manifested by disregard of public rights, contempt for warnings of the churches, and ruthless aggressions upon labor. The attacks of these predatory combinations upon the workers are of such vicious and determined nature, that the present system of trades unions has been rendered ineffective as a protection.

Continued advancement of trades associations must inevitably result in group slavery for the masses. If the workers are to remain free, they must meet the combinations of financial interests with just as thorough and effective organization.

During the last two years labor has received blow after blow, through the Courts, by our Legislatures—municipal, State and national—and through the aggressions of employers associations. In every instance, resistance by the workers has been overwhelmed and the weakness of our labor movement demonstrated.

We must prepare to meet the onslaught, and conserve our rights and liberties with more intelligent and practical methods. Of late years, workers in several branches of the marine transportation industry have received some salutary punishment from an international combination of trades associations.

The influence of these economic groups upon our Government is painfully apparent, in fact, when regarded in the light of recent performances, submissions of the Government bureaus to the requirements of these interests have been absolute. They have certainly "prolonged evasion of laws intended to restrain abuses in trade," and have set at naught statutes, laws and rulings. During the present lockout of seamen nearly every provision for the safe conduct of navigation is ignored, evaded or flagrantly violated, by those particular public servants entrusted to enforce them.

That they are acting with the full knowledge and consent of higher power and authority is evidenced by the fact that it is impossible to correct these abuses.

By these facts the corrupt influences of trades associations upon our Government is made manifest.

In order to defend their rights and liberties against these insidious forces the workers must meet organization with organization, force with force, craft with craft.

The strength of American labor organizations is cleverly dissipated by the machinations of employers, experts and representatives, and the obstinate stupidity of those in whom labor has entrusted its destinies. The leaders of organized labor, as constituted in the American Federation of Labor, stubbornly adhere to the obsolete system of craft unionism. They have signally failed to keep abreast of the times, or measure up to the requirements.

The ability of the employers to exploit the talents of men with extraordinary qualifications leaves the workers somewhat at a disadvantage; but this disadvantage could be easily counteracted by eternal vigilance and strength of ideals. The tendency to fall into periodical ruts is one of the great failings of a number of otherwise brilliant labor leaders, and it is resulting in disaster to workers' organizations. The rank and file of the unions are equally responsible for failure of the movement to meet the test. Lack of active personal interest in the general conduct of affairs has permitted the labor representatives, in many instances, to get away from their fellows and become involved in politics, where ideals have frequently been sacrificed to selfishness.

The present crisis through which labor is now passing is bringing out those better qualities which have lain dormant or submerged through the period of ease. The organized labor movement will emerge refined by trial and ready to meet and conquer the aggressions of the oppressors. Adversity is teaching the membership of labor unions the necessity of a greater solidarity; the need for effort, sacrifice, and adherence to ideals. The meaning of the adage that "an injury to one is the concern of all" is being impressed upon the minds of the workers with telling effect. Misunderstandings, jurisdictional disputes, and other knotty problems which have arisen to distract and separate workers into hostile camps are now observed from different angles. Barriers of craft are ready to topple while the interests of all toilers is recognized as one.

The seamen's unions are organized along lines of greater solidarity than many of the other American Federation of Labor affiliates; but notwithstanding this fact they are far from meeting the industrial requirements. The sailors and longshoremen have realized for a long time that it was the manipulations of shrewd employers that has kept them apart; but it was only through the exigencies and tribulations of the latest lockouts of both organizations that they were finally agreed as to the error of the policy pursued.

Realizing their helplessness under the system of organization prevailing, both longshoremen and seamen have consolidated with other marine trasport workers of the Pacific Coast. The formation of a powerful federation of marine transport workers is now in full swing. Longshoremen, seamen, teamsters, warehousemen, launch and tugboatmen, and other bay, river and harbor workers are joining in one big federation taking in every port of the Pacific Coast.

The workers in the marine transport industry are surfeited with being broken piecemeal, and they intend to have an organization capable of successfully meeting attacks of the most powerful combination of employers. An industrial organization must be maintained which will keep pace with the trades associations of the commercial interests.

Attempts to subjugate and degrade the toiling masses can only be frustrated by economic power. Due to the fact that the interests of politicians and diplomats are irrevocably interlocked with the commercial elements of society; little relief can be expected along legislative lines, unless there is the economic power to support demands.

The Federation of Marine Transport Workers is only the initial step towards establishment of complete organization, in conformity with our national laws, and powerful enough to meet any combination of employers, or aggregations of wealth. When such structure shall be consummated those who would exploit, subjugate or degrade the workers will be restrained by a wholesome respect for the consequences of aggression. Such an organization, operated with an intelligence that would keep within the bounds of equity and reason, will go far towards eliminating the strike or lockout. It will make

PROBING PEOPLE'S LEAGUE

Why did the Attorney-General investigate the People's Reconstruction League?

Has the Attorney-General investigated the big business lobbies—the United States Chamber of Commerce, the Association of Railway Executives, the International Association of Meat Packers, and the National Coal Association?

Recently an agent of the Department of Justice called at the offices of the People's Reconstruction League and asked the executive secretary where the League got its money and what it was spending it for. He was given full information. The agent said he came under order of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, but that he did not have any written order nor would he answer Mr. Marsh's question as to whether he was specifically told to come to the People's Reconstruction League. The secretary of the League has asked the Attorney-General to explain the proceeding, and has asked several United States Senators to investigate it at the proper time. The investigation of the League reminds us of several things.

As soon as the report of the Federal Trade Commission on the meat packing industry was published the United States Chamber of Commerce started a vicious and insidious campaign against the Federal Trade Commission. It published a pamphlet criticizing the Commission's report on the meat packers. These spokesmen before the Senate Committee on Agriculture referred to the Federal Trade Commission as the one utterly discredited by the Commission.

The United States Chamber of Commerce has an annual income of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Did the Attorney-General of the United States, before he investigated the People's Reconstruction League, investigate the joint funds of the big five packers, all of whom are in the Institute of the American Meat Packers, knowing that the Federal Trade Commission had reported that these joint funds were used?

"To employ lobbyists and pay their unaudited expenses;

"To influence legislative bodies;

"To elect candidates who would wink at violations of law, and defeat those pledged to fair enforcement;

"To control tax officials and thereby evade just taxation;

"To secure modification of Government rules and regulations by devious and improper methods;

"To bias public opinion by the control of editorial policy through advertising, loans and subsidies, and by the publication and distribution at large expense of false and misleading statements."

Did the Attorney General take time to investigate the use of joint funds of the big five packers before he investigated the People's Reconstruction League, which has a monthly budget of only about $700,000, but growing as the people understand what it is doing, and it asks a minimum budget of $25,000? Is he going to?

The Railway Executives can use unlimited funds which serve to influence public opinion. Did the Attorney-General of the United States investigate the $10,000,000 slush fund of the railway interests to be paid to influence public opinion in an effort to put across the Cummins-Esch law?

The National Coal Association has big offices and plenty of money. Some of its members are conspicuous profiteers. It has gotten certain publicity agencies to use its propaganda as news. Has the Attorney-General of the United States investigated the activities of the National Coal Association, and is he going to?

We ask these questions, and it is very pertinent that we ask them of the Attorney-General. The People's Reconstruction League does not object to having an agent of the Department of Justice swoop down upon it and ask where it gets its money and what it spends it for, provided the other lobbies at the National capital are investigated in the same way. We shall be glad to let anybody know where we get our money and what we do with it, but we have well grounded suspicion that the Attorney-General hasn't yet gotten around to investigate the lobbies which are spending millions of dollars in Washington. We believe that the American people, who are paying the taxes to support the Department of Justice, will charge the Attorney-General of the United States with wilful waste of public funds in investigating the People's Reconstruction League, which has nothing to conceal. The League is fighting the corporate interests, which have been profiteering for years upon the American public. The Attorney-General is asking for enormous appropriations of Congress to enable him to investigate and prosecute the profiteers.

The League's program, which is the only effective way to stop profiteering, includes: Prompt restoration of the railroads to unified Government control; legislation to control the meat packing industry; taxation of privilege instead of poverty, making our banking and credit system serve the people; control of natural resources; and opposition to universal compulsory military training.

Why does the Attorney-General, consciously or unconsciously, lend himself to the sinister purposes of the profiteers of America through his office while asking the people of the United States to pay him hundreds of thousands of dollars, supposedly to prosecute profiteers? The Attorney-General, to put it mildly, is inefficient and wasteful, and Congress should be careful to scrutinize his request for appropriation before giving him money to investigate organizations which are fighting for the public good.

Senator Robert M. La Follette, in his speech at the dinner of the People's Legislative Service on April 16, 1921, gave the following list of big lobbies in Washington:

1. The United States Chamber of Commerce;
2. The National Association of Manufacturers;
3. The American Association of Meat Packers;
4. The National Coal Association;
5. The Wholesale Coal Dealers' Association;
6. The National Petroleum Association;
7. The National Water Power Association;
8. The National Lumber Manufacturers' Association;
9. The National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico;
10. The Lumbermen's Bureau;
11. The American Beet Sugar Association;
12. The American Cane Sugar Association;
13. The United States Sugar Manufacturers' Association;
14. The Hardware Manufacturers' Association;
15. The National Canners' Association;
16. The National Association of Real Estate Boards;
17. The American Railway Association;
18. The Association of Railway Security Holders;
19. The Association of Railway Executives.

The investigation of all these lobbies would be splendid occupation for the Department of Justice.

LEGION IS TABBED

In a letter sent recently to the national office of the American Legion at Indianapolis, the American Civil Liberties Union of New York summarizes the outstanding attacks on free speech and assemblage by posts of the Legion throughout the country in the Legion's national campaign to "uphold and defend the Constitution," and calls upon the present Legion officials to declare their attitude.

The memorandum prepared by the Civil Liberties Union is entitled, "The Lawless American Legion," and contains a detailed record of fifty incidents in the past year and a half in which members or posts of the American Legion have figured in attacks on radical or labor speakers or meetings. The summary lists ten cases of mob violence, twenty-two cases of breaking up or interfering with meetings, ten cases of attacks on radical or liberal speakers, and a few instances of strikebreaking and anti-German activities.

The instances cited concern activities chiefly against the I. W. W., the Non-partisan League in the West, and against radical labor leaders in the East. Most of the instances listed are in Middle-western and Western States.

In introducing the summary, the Civil Liberties Union says: "So far as we can learn, no occurrences, except the mobbing of Non-partisan League leaders at Great Bend, Kansas, and the attempted interference with the national convention of the Committee of Forty-eight at St. Louis, have been disavowed by responsible Legion officials, although in many cases they have stated that the action taken in the Legion's name was not formally authorized.

"The evidence frequently indicates that private commercial interests have used the Legion's members and the Legion's name for thir own ends. But the exhibit faithfully reflects the spirit which dominates the American Legion as a whole."

The ten cases of mob violence, all of which occurred between November, 1919, and May, 1921, were at Oakland, Los Angeles and Carpenteria, Calif.; Great Bend, Kansas; Missouri Valley, Iowa; Bayonne, N. J.; Cincinnati and Dayton, Ohio; and Lancaster, Pa. The twenty-two cases of interference or attempted interference with meetings were fairly evenly distributed throughout the country, with four cases in Pennsylvania, two in Iowa, and single instances in California, Kansas, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, Washington and Virginia.

Among the ten attacks on individual radicals and liberals are three in Kansas, two in Ohio, and other cases in Illinois, Kentucky, Minnesota and Washington.

Strikebreaking activities were reported chiefly during the outlaw switchmen's strike in 1920. Interference with the distribution of labor and radical papers were reported from New Jersey and Washington. Fritz Kreisler's concerts were stopped at Louisville, Cincinnati and Lynn, Mass., by action of the American Legion, and a local post attempted to prevent a Kreisler concert at Cornell University.

The Civil Liberties Union states that the record submitted is by no means complete, but that it covers the most significant cases. The letter to American Legion officials was sent by Albert DeSilver, director.

STATE FUND MAKES GOOD

"Experience has clearly demonstrated that the industrial accident fund can take care of itself, that it is absolutely self-supporting," declares the fifth annual report of the Wyoming Workmen's Compensation Department, prepared under the direction of State Treasurer A. D. Hoskins. Beginning six years ago with an appropriation of $30,000 from the State as a nucleus, the State fund established to provide accident insurance at actual cost is now in a position to go "on its own," according to the report. The department recommends that the original $30,000, together with all other sums since advanced by the State, amounting to $228,817, be returned to the State's general fund.

The favorable showing of the Wyoming State fund and the Compensation Department's recommendation follows similar action in Pennsylvania where the State accident insurance fund recently paid back to the commonwealth in full its original investment of $500,000.

By prohibiting stock insurance companies operating for profit from competing with State funds, as demanded by the American Federation of Labor, and already successfully undertaken in seven, notably Ohio, exclusive State funds, it is pointed out, make an even better showing than competitive State funds and result in savings of millions of dollars each year to industry, while at the same time permitting increasingly liberal benefits to injured workers and their dependents.

A NOVEL EXPERIMENT

The Weekly Bulletin, Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce, reveals the fact that the terminal elevators at Sydney, New South Wales, Australia, which have been under construction for some time, are now so near completion that the bins are being filled with the wheat resulting from the current season's harvest. The capacity of the storage bins is 6,000,000 bushels.

The first vessel to load a cargo of wheat in bulk at Sydney took in 4500 tons and was recently dispatched to the United Kingdom for orders. As the dunnage required for lining the holds is not available in Australian-grown woods, the timber has necessarily to be imported and the cost of lining is, therefore, a large item. In this instance the cost was £2619 ($12,745 at normal exchange) for the one ship, and as the cargo was equal to 166,000 bushels, the cost of fitting the ship was nearly 4d. ($0.08) per bushel. The cost of loading bagged wheat is estimated to be 10s. 4d. ($2.51) per ton less than that of loading wheat in bulk. Shippers and shipowners are, therefore, inclined for the present to be shy of bulk loading.

The varying gradations in temperature during the voyage are also a subject of concern. The cargo, after leaving the temperate climate of Sydney, passes through the colder southern latitudes, then through the equatorial regions, and finally through a colder climate again to reach its destination. How these temperature variations will affect the cargo is as yet undetermined. The recent shipment in bulk from Sydney is largely experimental, and it will be the only shipment until results are made known.

EIGHT-HOUR DAY IN FRANCE

By presidential decrees of April 29 and May 17, 1921, and after consultation with the employers' and workers' organizations concerned, terms are laid down for the application of the eight-hour law as of April 23, 1919, to workshops, yards, warehouses and offices connected with maritime transport in French sea-ports and river-ports accessible to ocean-going vessels, and in establishment of all kinds engaged in wholesale commerce.

Other similar decrees recently issued, the texts of which are given in the Bulletin du Ministere du Travail, January to March, 1921, have rendered the eight-hour day law applicable to saddlery, harness and leather goods making, shoe, slipper, sandal, galoche, etc., making, where five or more persons are employed; also to the corn-milling trade.

SHIPPING DECLINES

Merchant shipbuilding in all countries fell off nearly 900,000 gross tons for the quarter ending June 30 last, as compared with the previous three months, according to a report made public by Lloyd's Register of Shipping. This decline, the report said, is the sharpest recorded since construction reached its high peak in the fall of 1919.

American shipping dropped nearly 400,000 tons and British about 270,000 tons, with all other countries about 250,000 tons. No report was obtained from Germany.

Total tonnage under construction June 30 was 6,199,000 tons, of which the United States was building 717,000 and the United Kingdom 3,530,000.

Almost anybody can see a difference between arbitration compelled by active public opinion and arbitration compelled by the employer and administered by the employer's court.

Pacific Coast Marine

The lockout of seamen, which has tied up the steam-schooner fleet, is being felt by Tacoma mills, many of which are forced to close down.

Notice of assignment of the newly completed steamer "West Lewark" to the European-Pacific line was received by the Columbia Pacific Shipping Company. The three-deck vessel is scheduled to arrive at the Columbia River about July 16 to load between three thousand and four thousand tons of cargo for Europe.

The steamer "Harvard" has been tied up at San Pedro pending settlement of the maritime strike, according to announcement by officials of the Los Angeles Steamship Company.

When off Point Montara trouble developed on the "Admiral Nicholson" with the vessel's steam generator. A tug of the Red Stack fleet was sent out and towed the craft back to San Francisco. The vessel was bound out on her first trip since the strike to Santa Barbara and way ports.

John F. Blaine, former member of the United States Shipping Board, and his associates recently purchased the "Chillicothe," a full-rigged sailing vessel, for $25,500 at a marshal's sale at the Federal Building, Seattle. The "Chillicothe" was sold in satisfaction of a judgment for seamen's wages against Victor Fox of New York City, her former owner. Fox paid $140,000 for the vessel.

After months of effort at San Francisco, a concern has been formed to be known as the Pacific Steamship Claim Association. The purpose of this organization is to bring about a more harmonious feeling between the shipper and consignees, the steamship lines, and likewise between the carriers themselves. The prime object of the body will be the adjustment of claims on a more equitable basis and with more promptness.

V. N. Buchanan and M. K. Noell and thirty-one other officers and members of the crew of the sailing vessel "Moshulu," of which Frank O. Parker is master, have filed in the United States District Court a libel against the vessel. The complaint asserts the men signed to sail May 11, 1920, to Manila, by way of Melbourne, Australia, and that the vessel returned to San Francisco July 5 of this year. No money was received during the voyage for wages, although repeated demands for payment were made. The Court is asked to condemn the vessel for sale to satisfy a wages claim approximating $13,880.39.

Fifteen hundred cannery workers, who have been idle at San Diego for several weeks, due to the controversy between fishermen and cannery men regarding the price for albacore and tuna this season, are back on the job. American, Italian and Portuguese albacore and tuna fishermen announced that, after conferences extending over a period of six weeks, a satisfactory price per ton for the fish delivered at the cannery wharves has been reached. It is believed the new price will be $124 a ton, a reduction of $100 a ton under last year's top price. Ray Hawley, president of the American Fishermen's Protective Association of San Diego, scored the Standard and Union Oil companies for their failure to reduce the price of distillate to the fishermen or to participate in any of the recent deliberations with the canneymen and the fishermen.

SEAMEN! WATCH FOR DEVELOPMENTS.

I have said that I would never be attorney for shipowners, until the seamen were shipowners. One of the purposes of my visit to Europe this summer is to acquire knowledge as to shipping conditions abroad and particularly to ascertain with what degree of success the seamen of Italy are operating ships.

Any seamen, who, with a view to becoming shipowners some time, are willing to form "a Seamen's Society for Savings" and will pledge to save one-fourth of their wages over their board and lodging per annum, said savings to be put in a depository that they themselves may select, please communicate with the undersigned.

Legalized Kidnaping?

"Legalized kidnaping" could be applied to Senate Bill No. 657, which has been quietly slipped through that body and is now being considered by the House Judiciary Committee.

The bill would permit a San Francisco Federal Grand Jury, for instance, to secretly consider charges against a New York citizen that were presented by the District Attorney or Secret Service. If an indictment was found, a deputy marshal would go to New York, arrest the accused and return him to the Western city without a preliminary hearing in his home jurisdiction.

If a strike affecting interstate commerce was called in New York, and trade unionists in other sections of the country wrote letters in support of the strike, a Federal grand jury in Alaska could indict these unionists on the charge of conspiracy, have them rounded up by deputy marshals and brought to the Far North without a preliminary hearing in the locality where they live.

If the accused are acquitted, they will be paid mileage to their homes and necessary maintenance not to exceed $5 a day from the time of arrest. If the deputy marshal arrested the wrong person, the latter would have to prove this to the foreign court, as the proposed law makes no provision for preliminary hearings of any sort.

The bill is one of the most astounding that ever passed the United States Senate. It repeals every guarantee to citizens charged with crime, and arms Federal district attorneys, grand juries and detectives with a most powerful weapon.

It smashes numerous decisions by the United States Supreme Court—that an indicted person has the constitutional right to a preliminary hearing before he is removed to another district.

President Gompers headed a delegation of trade unionists that made formal protest to Attorney General Daugherty against this proposal, and similar protest has been made to the House Judiciary Committee. A. F. of L. affiliates have been warned of the pending danger and are urged to protest to members of that committee and to their Congressmen.

The members of the House Committee on Judiciary are: Messrs. Volstead (Minn.), Graham (Pa.), Dyer (Mo.), Walsh (Mass.), Reavis (Neb.), Classon (Wis.), Boies (Iowa), Christopherson (S. D.), Yates (Ill.), Goodykoontz (W. Va.), Hersey (Maine), Chandler (N. Y.), Foster (Ohio), Michener (Mich.), Hickey (Ind.), Thomas Jr. (Ky.), Sumners (Tex.), Montague (Va.), Wise (Ga.), Tillman (Ark.), Dominick (S. C.).

Recalls Pirate Days

According to cable dispatches from Italy, passengers on the American steamer "Pocahontas" will long remember their voyage from New York city to Naples. The thrilling tale would have a fitting climax if it stated that the vessel was completely manned by strikebreakers, recruited by the sea service bureau of the United States Shipping Board.

On leaving New York the strikebreakers in the engine room had trouble with the machinery, and the vessel was forced to put into Boston, where she collided with a pier. Starting across the Atlantic, she drifted in mid-ocean for days in an effort to repair the machinery, finally landing at the Azores, where the engines were patched up. Naples was reached after forty-three days at sea.

Cables from Italy state that the crew was insubordinate and that the engine room was half-filled with water, which caused the ship to list, bringing additional terror to the passengers.

All the dining room spoons were stolen, ashes were discovered in the dynamo, the rudder was disabled, and fresh water spigots opened. On one occasion two port holes were opened and the inrushing water destroyed a large quantity of supplies.

This portion of the ship's daily report indicates the trials of the officers with the "free and independent" crew.

"June 14.—All the boiler pumps stopped and all fires but one are out. Water continues to flood the engine room. Alfred B. Pablo placed in irons for refusing to obey orders, and Louis Prewath, oiler, imprisoned for abandoning his post."

The ship's record is a continuous story of incapacity, insubordination and destruction on the part of the strikebreakers, but the cables make no mention of the conditions under which the crew was shipped.

Wolves Guard Sheep

"Setting the wolves to guard the sheep" is Andrew Furuseth's comment on statements in the public press that the United States Shipping Board will work in the closest co-operation with the American Steamship Owners' Association, and that the board will consult with the ship owners.

"Come to think of it," said the executive of the Seamen's Union, "that policy is not new. It has operated for sixty years, with the exception of the passage of the seamen's law and during the war. In the latter period, however, the ship owners were dollar-a-year patriots.

"It was the ship owners who, in 1851 and 1884, secured exemption of their vessels from all liability, placing risks and dangers on the shipper and traveler, while the ship owner escaped the common liability of other business.

"In 1867 the ship owners drove the American boy from the sea by securing legislation that kept the benefits of the Thirteenth Amendment from American seamen.

"Through all these years it was on the ship owners' advice that ship builders held a monopoly which raised the cost of

INTELLIGENT EFFORT

The marine transport workers of the Pacific Coast are acting wisely in consolidating their forces into one big federation. The action is belated, but it is better late than never. In spite of the fact that the seamen's and longshoremen's organizations have been at loggerheads for a number of years, the great majority of the rank and file of both unions were with each other in spirit. The desire for more perfect solidarity has been with the men at all times, but it has been suppressed by faulty advice, until it became common practice for both seamen and longshoremen to be guided by policy rather than ideals.

The saying that "it is an ill wind that blows nobody good" was never better substantiated than by the fact that mutual misfortune has awakened and brought the marine workers together. They now realize the fact that the course previously pursued has been detrimental to all concerned. We must unite in spirit as well as in organization, even as we are compelled to suffer in common.

The Marine Transport Workers' Federation is yet in swaddling clothes, but it is destined to a strong and rapid growth. Born in the lap of adversity, it must be nurtured in a cradle of sacrifice and hardship. To hold back its progress will be impossible if the transport workers will make that quality of effort for its success which the aggressions of employers demand. Our field is world wide and possibilities are unlimited. The transport workers will not be content with merely striving for hours and wages, but living standards and conditions must be improved and advanced until we are enabled to enjoy the full product of our toil.

The present pressing needs is to compel recognition of our right to organize; respect for our rights under the law; maintenance of the eight hour day at sea and in port; a living wage and decent working conditions.

Last improvement must be made in the manner of employment, especially as this applies to seamen and longshoremen. We must assert our right to employment without interference of middle parties or bureaus. One of the most vicious hardships inflicted upon the longshoremen has been the methods of employment—where men have been compelled to hang around dock gates for hours every day for the doubtful privilege of being picked out from among the crowd for a few hours' work. This degrading system must be relegated to oblivion, along with like abuses pertaining to other marine workers.

We must build with strength that will not only achieve the objects enumerated, but we must affiliate with the international transport workers in all parts of the world, in order to be in a position to conserve the interests of workers abroad as well as at home, and to come to an understanding which will enable us to regulate our conditions of employment to the fullest extent. International action is necessary if we desire to succeed.

The time has arrived when the workers must either submit to slavery in groups, or they must assert their rights. Too long the size and weight of packages for transportation have been regulated by those who never handled them, while the workers have suffered rupture, injury and death in efforts to perform tasks beyond ordinary physical skill. We will not only regulate our hours, but the size and weight of packages, nature and conditions of cargo, and the measure of endurance, so that it is not strained to its fullest extent. Such cargoes as lime, cement, ores, fertilizer, nitre, etc., are of unhealthy and unpleasant nature, for the working of which a shorter workday should operate. Men should not be compelled to handle dangerous cargoes without the proper safeguards, or cases with broken and rusty bands, etc.; but until the workers are in position to have something to say about these matters, we shall have to accept such conditions as the combined employing class see fit to give.

With our representatives in every port of the world, and perfect solidarity among the workers, our right to a voice in industry can be asserted.

The various trades associations which have international affiliations point out to us the manner in which we can achieve our ends. They have seen fit to stop the wheels of industry at pleasure, because they had the power to do so, and their power lies in organization. Our power also lies in organization, which must include a consolidation of all the workers in one industry, and all the industries together in one federation.

Perfection of this system means hard work. Organize, educate and agitate.

A WIDOW'S RIGHT

The Labor Gazette of London recently published an interesting legal decision by the Court of Session in a case on appeal:

"By the provisions of the Workmen's Compensatoin Act, 1906, compensation is payable to a workman injured by accident only where the accident was one arising out of and in the course of the employment. No compensation is payable, however, where the injury is attributable to the workman's serious and wilful misconduct, unless the injury results in death or serious and permanent disablement.

"A seaman, employed on a British ship which was in dock in a foreign port, went ashore for recreation and got very drunk. To return to the ship it was necessary for him to climb a ladder forty feet high and eighteen inches wide. Two fellow members of the crew at midnight tried to help him up this ladder, but when he was nearly on board he let go his grip, fell into the water and was drowned. His widow and dependent claimed compensation under the Act, but the claim was resisted on the ground that the accident was not one arising out of the deceased's employment. The Sherig-Substitute adopted the contention of the shipowners, and refused to award compensation. The widow appealed.

"The Court of Session allowed the appeal. The Court held that the excessive consumption of intoxicating liquor did undoubtedly conduce to the accident. This drunkenness was serious and wilful misconduct, but as the accident proved fatal the conduct of the deceased was irrelevant. The accident consisted in a fall from a high ladder which the deceased was obliged to mount to do his duty in returning to his ship. This was an accident to which, by his employment, he was peculiarly exposed whether he was drunk or sober. It therefore arose out of, as well as in the course of, the employment, and the widow was entitled to compensation."

It is peculiar how those British Courts interpret the law. They seem to place a certain value on the workers, and even go to the extent of permitting human rights to take precedence over the "divine rights of property."

In this particular case the shipowner was unable to rob the widow of her compensation, but we shudder to imagine what would have been her chances before one of our own tribunals. In the event of her claim receiving any consideration in one of the lower Courts, the widow would probably have found herself confronted with the necessity of financing further appeals right up to the illustrious Supreme Court of the United States.

She would have to match wits with armies of corporation lawyers, fixers, adjusters, agents, etc., and would be compelled to struggle through years of expensive litigation, and finally get it where the turkey receives his around Thanksgiving time.

What a chance she would have against predatory wealth! Where would she get a Judge to maintain that the widow was not responsible for her husband's drunkenness? It would be of interest to know where we could get a Judge that would maintain that the conduct of the deceased was irrelevant in a case of like kind; or that mounting a tall, narrow ladder to climb aboard ship, while off duty, was germane to regular duty.

MUNCHAUSEN GROGGY

We always nursed the opinion that a great number of wet-nosed college vacationists, who went to sea as scabs, did so with other motives than the urge of class consciousness. Many of them with literary aspirations, desire to emulate the example of Jack London, Rex Beach, et al.; and from what is transpiring when these

"rovers of the deep" get back home, there is every evidence of a select Ananias Club among them. Munchausen will have to take a back seat from the date of the following, which appeared recently in the press at Portland, Ore.:

"How three Chinese river brigands were warded off and slain on board a small Chinese river steamer near Canton by six University of California students after the pirates had subdued the officers and crew of the steamer, was told at San Francisco with the arrival from the Orient of the transpacific steamer 'Columbia.'

"The college men were student officers upon the 'Columbia.' They had gained five days' leave while at Shanghai and took the river steamer to Canton. On the first night out, three pirates drew up in a small boat and boarded the vessel. They lined up everyone aboard and had started to go through their pockets when one of the Americans shouted:

"'Give them the ax, boys.'

"With that the six sprang at the pirates. Using the fire axes, fire hose nozzles and belaying-pins as weapons, the Americans pressed the fight until the Chinese were killed. The fight was witnessed by two American school teachers, Miss May Manning and Miss Ruth Rideout, touring the Orient, whose jewelry the brigands were in the process of removing when the Americans 'broke loose.'

"The college men were A. D. Elb, W. L. Thacker, Leland Noe, James Vance, Jack Taylor and Robert Clarke, medical students at Berkeley."

The foregoing is great propaganda to pour into the ears of the dolls on moonlight nights. They might believe it; and with the addition of a little glace fruit, the hero can find favor in their eyes.

However, if these students' medical skill does not improve over their ability to select subjects for imagination, they will never have to make excuses of overwork to patients.

SUPPRESSION A FAILURE

The fact has long been known that you cannot purchase the love of a woman or the wag of a dog's tail; neither can these things be beaten out of them. The natural desire for organization cannot be killed by disruption or destruction of the unions. The idea has come to stay and the sooner employers realize that fact the better for themselves and everyone concerned. An idea cannot be destroyed by repression.

Likened to crushing a chocolate with the thumb, it can be spread out over more ground, but the chocolate remains there just the same.

When the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce disrupted the Riggers' and Stevedores' Union of San Francisco they congratulated themselves on a job well done. They compelled organization into an association of their own construction, but many of the men who were forced by starvation to accept degradation at the hands of the employers still cherish the desire for real unionism even if it has been temporarily suppressed.

The future will prove that the gloating of the open shop advocates was entirely premature.

BRITISH SEAMEN IDLE

The Labor Gazette reports that during the first week of May, employment among seamen was exceptionally quiet, and though there was a little improvement in the following week at some ports, there was a further decline towards the end of the month, when employment generally was slack, shipping at several ports being reported at a standstill. The supply of all ratings at the different ports continued to be abnormal, and a good deal of destitution was reported to exist.

The number of seamen whose unemployment books or out-of-work donation policies were lodged at Employment Exchanges on May 27 was 37,410, compared with 32,660 on April 29 and 20,613 on March 24.

On the Thames, employment was reported as quiet; there was a temporary improvement in the middle of the month, but it was not maintained and a large number of men were unemployed. On the Tyne, employment was very bad, there being practically no demand for seamen in the third week, and a very large number of men remained without engagements. On the Tees, the demand was moderate in the first fortnight of May, but bad for the rest of the month. On the Wear, there was some little demand at the begining of the month, but this afterwards fell off, and during the rest of the month there was practically no demand for men. At Hull the demand was very small in the middle of the month, and, although the number of engagements increased somewhat in the last week, there was a large surplus of labor. At Goode and Grimsby there was great slackness, shipping being at a standstill through the coal stoppage. At Southampton employment improved somewhat in the latter half of the month, but the majority of the men signing on were for liners, and many remained waiting for berths. On the Bristol Channel employment was slack, and there was a large number of men unable to obtain engagements; at some ports matters were at a standstill at the end of the month. At Liverpool there was a falling off in the foreign-going engagements in the early part of May, but a partial recovery took place later on in the month; a large number of men, however, remained unemployed. On the Clyde employment was almost at a standstill owing to a local labor dispute, and a large number of men were without engagements. At Leith and Dundee the demand was exceptionally small, a large number of men being unemployed. At Aberdeen employment was abnormally slack during the month, many men remaining unemployed. At Dublin and Belfast, although there was some activity in the middle of the month, employment on the whole continued poor.

A little dose of adversity has a tendency to relieve expansion of the dome as well as the bread basket. It is the best medicine yet discovered for making the wage slave realize that his noodle is for other purposes than that of a hat rack. An empty paunch affects us all alike and is the strongest spur to action, especially brain action, and it is the boss that brings the results.

predatory interests chary of launching ruthless aggressions upon the rights, liberties, and living standards of the workers.

The transport workers of the Pacific Coast have been shown in the most effective manner, by hard knocks and adversity, wherein their system of unity has been lacking, and with a broader conception of what constitutes the quality of solidarity necessary to freedom and peace, they have set out to make their organization capable of meeting any emergency. In this manner is launched the Marine Transport Workers Federation of the Pacific.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

Washington, D. C., July 9, 1921.
Editor THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL:

Enclosed please find a clipping sent to me from New Orleans. It is entitled "High School Seamen Injured on Vessel":

Vernon Strawhand, son of Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Strawhand, 641 Graydon avenue, a high school student, is confined to his bed by a crushed foot, suffered when a girder fell on it on board the steamship "New Orleans." Physicians say the injury is not very serious, but it will keep young Strawhand in bed for about a week. Then he will have to use crutches for another four weeks.

Young Strawhand and Oswald Bonney, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. O. L. Bonney, 718 Armistead Bridge road, had shipped for a cruise to Europe on the Shipping Board vessel "New Orleans," which was anchored at Newport News. They were working on deck, helping to lower girders across the hatch, when one of them, weighing about half a ton, fell on Strawhand's foot. Bonney accompanied him home, but before leaving told the first mate that if he was not back by night he wasn't coming back. He decided not to go back.

University men and high school graduates here in the United States seem to take some delight in breaking strikes. It is rather remarkable, and speaks volumes for educational institutions, that their pupils should consider it their privilege, their duty, or a real lark to act as strike-breakers.

I was born in Europe, and my early days were spent there. When I first learned of students and high school boys acting as strikebreakers I was horrified. I could not understand the mental attitude that would cause them to act in that way. I could not understand the atmosphere that necessarily must exist in the institutions of learning and in the higher schools that could make such action on the part of the pupils possible. In Europe I had been accustomed to look upon students as being young men, mostly clean-hearted, clean-minded and leaders of any movement of human progress. The thing that I found here astonished me, and for the time being, brought me very acute pain. The leaders of human progress thought it their duty, or looked upon it as a lark, to help the employer to keep starvation wages or to preserve conditions that tended toward the establishment of industrial absolutism.

My later study of American institutions, of the history of the French Revolution and of social movements here in the United States has made me look upon such actions by students and high school pupils as being perfectly natural, and for the following reasons:

First, the French Revolution was an effort on the part of the commercial and professional classes to seize upon the world's government to annihilate those who stood in their way and to take to themselves all the powers, privileges and emoluments then held by the then governing class, the nobility and the clergy. The main fear of the Girondins was the fear that the revolution might go so far as to abolish privilege, and interfere with private property, no matter how it was obtained. I think it might be stated truthfully that the sum total attainment by the French Revolution was the abolition of the power of the King, the nobility and the clergy, a substantial abolition of the rights and prerogatives that this then governing class had through what is known as feudal law.

Second, while the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights adopted in the United States went directly towards the establishment of equality of opportunity, equality before the law, and equality in industry, yet the Constitution, as alopted, concerns itself mostly about the preservation of property.

Third, the development of modern society since the French Revolution tended towards the establishment of a new aristocracy and a new governing class built upon wealth and industrial privilege. In other words, we are traveling the same road that Europe traveled during the early middle ages, but our basis is wealth in lieu of land and blood.

Having these things in mind and knowing from what class of modern society in America comes the predominating number of students in the universities and in the high schools, it is not to be wondered at when they exhibit all the earmarks of the consciousness of the class to which they are either born or in which they are seeking entrance. It would not be natural, therefore, if the student at the university and the high school boy here in America should not think of an industrial strike or the resistance of an industrial lock-out on the part of the working people as an attack upon the class he is in or in which he seeks to enter. Of course, there are, because there must be, students who resist the atmosphere in which they are moving and resent the idea that they should permit themselves to be used for any purposes to establish an iron-bound industrial feudalism, with the seamen tied to the ship, the miner to the mine, the railroadman to his train, etc., under pain of penal punishment for quitting the service of his "master." and those students who are necessarily in the minority must feel like a fish out of water. They are not in their right element. And, yet, such students and high school boys as have such thoughts are the salt of the institutions to which they are attached, and they are to be pitied for the fight that they must put up more than the others who are to blame for following their own instinct.

That some of these young fellows go to work in occupations of which they know nothing, and hence are hurt, is a natural result of the university atmosphere. They have at least an unspoken contempt for the man who is nothing but a working man. Because they can do a sum in arithmetic and are perhaps able to write a decent English letter, or have some little smattering of history or geography, they think they can do any kind of work which a mechanic or a transport worker is doing. Their contempt for what they usually call physical labor, the expression used as to those men that they are "hands," is so prevalent in the atmosphere in which they live that, of course, they think themselves immeasurably superior to any man who has spent years to learn to do a kind of work about which they have no knowledge, and for which they have nothing but contempt. They seem to think—and I presume they do think if they think about the matter at all—that there is such a thing as actual unskilled labor, labor that means "hands" only. Yet, if they were to give the matter a second thought they would not be able to point to a single one who is really mentally deficient or mentally deranged, who could or did do any kind of labor whatsoever. There is no such thing as unskilled labor; that there is no such thing as purely physical labor is so obvious that this evidently never occurred to them. But what shall we say of the institutions of learning that send out each year into the world hosts of such men to be what they choose, to denominate leaders of modern society? If those young men are to be of any value in the world at all they will have to unlearn most of what they learned at those institutions of learning. It is nothing short of disgraceful to the institutions, but considering the young men in question, it is not only a pity, it is a crime.

ANDREW FURUSETH.

REFORM NEEDED

Misleading prospectuses, financial reports and other statements calculated to hoodwink the public are issued in shocking numbers in this country. Fleecing the American public by such tactics has gone on to an appalling extent during recent years. Yet how many of the wrongdoers have gone to jail? A few of the Ponzi stripe, whost methods were particularly flagrant, have been sentenced; but that's about all. They do things differently in England. The cables announce that Thomas Farrow, founder of Farrow's Bank, which failed last Christmas, has been "sentenced to four years' penal servitude on conviction of having published a report and balance sheet which he knew to be false." One of his associates was also sent to prison for four years and another for one year.

Note that the crime was publishing a false report and balance sheet. If every man responsible for issuing false and misleading reports and balance sheets in this country were sent to jail, there would be a building boom. Our laws covering such matters are disgracefully lax. An individual or a company can issue any kind of a prospectus or other financial statement in this country without danger of imprisonment. Laws with teeth in them are sorely needed to catch the swarms of unscrupulous promoters and others who extract several hundred million dollars every year from the pockets of unwary "investors." There have been ongoings higher up, also, which have not been creditable. It is questionable, however, whether reform of our laws could do as much here as a reform of conscience.—Forbes Magazine (N. Y.).

The principle of compulsory arbitration, i. e., enforced labor, may with equal propriety be extended to enforce idleness, to enforce starvation—in other words, to inflict death.

CLIPPER BOW ON WARSHIPS

Replacing the blunt prow that gave them the appearance of floating fortresses, the navy's new battleships and battle cruisers show a return to the clipper bow of former days. From most angles the new bow gives the great fighting craft the graceful appearance of a fast yacht, but coming head-on the idea of its resistless force is betrayed most forcefully.

The distinctive bows of the United States battleships, which began with the "New Mexico" class (No. 40), designed in 1914, and appearing also on the new battle cruisers, are due to a number of circumstances. It should be remembered that large naval vessels are required to anchor and get away from their anchorages on numerous occasions at short notice, and rarely, indeed, does a battleship or large vessel tie up alongside a wharf as does a commercial vessel. They always anchor in a stream, communication with the shore being effected by means of small motor craft.

The anchors are large, bulky and heavy, weighing about ten tons each, and, taken in connection with the strong chains to which they are attached, involve the utmost care in design that they will manipulate and stow properly in service.

It used to be the practice to have in the "eyes" of the four hawse pipe, two on each side, the anchors, usually three in number, ready for service. They were stowed in three of them, selected at the pleasure of the captain.

It can be readily understood that in dropping these anchors they must not touch the portion of the ship's hull below the water, as their great weight and consequent blow would damage the hull and cause it to leak. Damage also would result in striking the hull in the operation of hoisting the anchor aboard.

Development in the shape of vessels to permit them to pass through the water with the least resistance discovered in the experimental model basin at Washington, required an unusual and broad shape below the water at its extreme end. This shape, generally referred to as the "bull" or "bulbous nose," added difficulties in operating anchors when stowed in the old-fashioned way.

The next step then was to place the hawse pipe and anchors as far away from the offending "bull nose" as possible. Naturally, an extension forward offered the best solution.

Models were prepared of the conventional and new types of anchor handling, and it was then found in the case of the clipper bow that many of the objections previously encountered disappeared. Some other advantages resulted from the adoption of the clipper bow—the forecastle deck is not so wet in bad weather, one hawse pipe is saved entirely and the vessels ride at anchor much more satisfactorily.

The greatest advantage of the clipper bow is the superiority of the water-line anchoring arrangement, with the added safety of the ship.

This beautiful clipper bow therefore is a distinguishing feature of the modern capital ships of the navy and is an illustration of the initiative of the American naval designer in meeting and solving a difficult mechanical problem.

THE AMERICAN PLAN

I have just read an announcement that the Steam Schooner Owners intend to run their ships under the American plan. Good old U. S. A.! How strange those words sound when placed alongside the words "open shop." It seems that the word American would be synonymous with scab, if certain un-American gentlemen were permitted to have their way. But that is nothing strange; think of what has been done in the name of Jesus Christ.

The announcement I refer to appeared in a yellow-covered periodical called the Shipping Register, and, judging from the article in which the announcement appears, the proprietors have chosen a very appropriate color for the cover of their organ.

The article goes on to say that a fair offer was made to the unions, and that its acceptance was defeated by Vance Thompson, editor of the Seamen's Journal, whom this yellow paper asserts is a Red because he spoke for the rejection of their offer. Let me say that there was no necessity for anyone to attempt to influence the members of the Sailors' Union to reject such an offer from the ship owners; and, inasmuch as the vote stood over 1600 against acceptance to 58 for acceptance, and the vote in other coast ports ran the same ratio as headquarters, no influence is perceptible. The one clause—that stipulated we should be obliged to work with non-union 'longshoremen—assured its defeat from the very beginning. What do they think we have kept away from their ships for during the last two months? If we are ready to go to work with scabs we can do that without signing any agreement and without sacrificing our self-respect. But we were not ready to do that, as anyone could tell who had the satisfaction of hearing the angry roar of disapproval when Secretary Rosenberg spoke in favor of accepting the insulting terms.

The yellow Shipping Register lauds Rosenberg for his half-hearted and whining attempt to induce us to accept the offer. But it calls Thompson Red. If they mean that any man is a Red because he places his service to the union above his salary, then there are thousands of Reds in our union, and I myself am a Red.

Rosenberg is fond of the phrase, "Dark clouds looming on the horizon," but he forgets that "every cloud has a silver lining." We know that the steam schooners cannot make it pay with scabs, who have never seen a stick of lumber, besides being indifferent or totally inexperienced seamen. Sooner or later they will want to take union crews.

Let us wait. We can wait longer than they can, because we can work at something else while we are waiting, but if they do not soon reorganize their business efficiently some one else will take it from under their nose.

WEALTH OF NORTH DAKOTA

A few years ago the State of North Dakota, by due process of law, started a movement whereby it could be of special service to its citizens. This service is the making of loans to the farmers, and about 80 per cent of the inhabitants of the State are farmers, while 16 per cent of the people depend in some form or other on agriculture for their means of livelihood. While North Dakota at the present time produces 15 per cent of all the hard and spring wheat raised in this country, there is still plenty of room for more farms. In fact, the unbroken soil of the State could provide 100,000 more farms of 160 acres each.

It takes money to buy land, and many farmers are not in a financial position to buy land, livestock and machinery for cash. They must have loans or mortgages on their property, and it is here where the State offers to provide the necessary help. North Dakota has authorized the sale of a bond issue of $3,000,000, and the interest on these bonds is 5¾ per cent per annum, and the denominations are in $100, $500 and $1000. The bonds date from July 1, this year, and mature in the years 1931, 1936, 1941 and 1946-1948.

From the standpoint of security, we know of few bond offerings which can show a better and more stable security than these North Dakota bonds. From our observation and investigation, the bonds have behind them a security which is as strong as the proverbial Rock of Gibraltar, and in safety they compare with a United States Government Bond.

North Dakota is not only famous as a great grain raising State, but it has also extensive coal areas. In fact, the lignite coal deposits of the State are said to be about six hundred billion tons. Furthermore, there are extensive areas which contain vast deposits of brick, tile, fire and potter's clay of high grade quality. The farm lands of the State have a present valuation of about $1,350,000,000. The farm improvements and equipment amount to about $400,000,000.—From Journal of Commerce, Philadelphia.

BACK TO THE FARM

Jobless young America is going back to the farm.

The fighting Yank who left the plow to go to war and then remained in the big cities after he had returned has found starvation wages and rainy nights on park benches too much even for his fighting blood.

An approximate of 1000 men have been leaving New York weekly, and there are still nearly 500,000 men out of work in that city.

Thousands of ex-service men are congregated in New York, unemployed and not able to get away as quickly as desired, owing to lack of funds for transportation.

Among the astonishing medley of new theories being attempted at English schools is a sort of setting up of a soviet in the class. In the co-educational school the boys and girls are instructed to decide for themselves just how they shall be marked by their master and how and what they shall study.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Facing the Inevitable

"We have lost a battle, but we will win the campaign," is the slogan sounded by Andrew Furuseth, president of the International Seamen's Union of America, in a circular letter to the members of his organization upon the recent decision of the membership on the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts to declare the strike off. These men have gone back—where they could get back—at any terms which the private shipowners or the Shipping Board prescribed. The men on the Pacific Coast, having a better hold on the situation, are confident of winning a satisfactory agreement with the owners.

The struggle on the Atlantic lasted two months. The heart was finally taken out of the seamen by the decision of the Marine Engineers' organization to quit the fight. The Marine Engineers had little previous experience in strikes, and the bulk of the seamen on the Atlantic were new recruits to unionism. With the Shipping Board lined up on the side of the shipowners, the outcome was inevitable.

But now comes a possible turn of the tide. Back on the ships, the sailors and marine firemen and cooks and stewards are armed with the law—the LaFollette Act—to enforce their demands for certain conditions. For example, they are entitled to the three-watch system for firemen, and the two-watch system for sailors. Then, when in port, they are entitled to draw half their pay. They are entitled to tie up the working of the ship if these rights are refused them. Men really determined to establish their legal rights on American vessels have abundant opportunity to do so.

Furuseth points out that while the I. W. W., the O. B. U. and other elements hostile to old-fashioned trade unionism may charge that the loss of this battle with the shipowners and the Shipping Board is due to the craft form of organization, it is nevertheless true that similar battles waged by the industrial unions of the seamen in France, Holland, Sweden and Norway have likewise been lost, while nowhere can the advocates of industrial organization point to a victory. He concludes that victories do not depend upon the form of organization, but upon the spirit and devotion and strategy of the men comprising the union. He holds that the Seamen's Union still commands its own fate. It can win this campaign, regardless of the dropping away of the cowards and quitters, and it is going to do so.

Machinists Show Activity

Bringing the latest reliable information as to what European labor is planning toward disarmament and peace, William H. Johnston, president of the International Association of Machinists, will reach New York on Sunday. He comes from Berne, Switzerland, where he conferred on various proposals for the stopping of manufacture of munitions of war with the officials of the International Federation of Metal Workers.

Great curiosity exists among the Machinists as to the reasons which led the Russian Government to refuse to admit Johnston to that country. Their officials here are inclined to think that W. D. Haywood and the I. W. W. had a great deal to do with it. Indeed, the I. W. W. seems to share that view, for there appeared in certain railroad shops in Chicago last week a small leaflet which declared that Haywood had personally taken to Lenin a copy of a book called "The Lizard's Trail," written following the Harriman shop strike of ten years ago, attacking Johnston and certain other international officials of the shop craft unions as having failed to properly support the strikers. The Chicago leaflet declared that Lenin read the book and then refused to consider permitting Johnston to set foot in Russia.

The net outcome of the trip of Johnston and Chief Counsel Mulholland of the Machinists to Europe is that they have gathered a considerable fund of information as to the purposes and immediate program of European labor, and have made a special study of labor's co-operative trading and banking activities. This knowledge will assist the Machinists in their own business ventures, which are steadily broadening.

Secretary - Treasurer Davison is in Mexico City, attending the convention of the Mexicon Federation of Machinists. He is to confer honorary membership in the International Association of Machinists upon a number of the prominent liberal chiefs of the Mexican Government, and is to negotiate certain contracts which will make his union the adviser of the Mexican Government in placing contracts for machinery and rolling stock in this country.

From Orizabo, Davison wired on Thursday to Acting President Fechner here, asking that protests be filed immediately with the State and Navy Departments against the sending of American warships to Tampico, where some ten thousand to twenty thousand oil workers have been locked out by the American oil corporations in reprisal for President Obregon's decree increasing the rate of taxation upon Mexican oil. These corporations are refusing to comply with the Mexican law, which provides that in case of dismissal an employe must have either ninety days' notice or three months' pay in advance.

Fechner carried the protest immediately to the Navy Department and to Mr. Gompers, who, in his capacity as president of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, sent strong letters to the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Navy. Meanwhile Senator LaFollette introduced in the Senate a resolution forbidding the use of American naval forces in the Tampico oil fields dispute.

Catholic Unions Lose

Quebec newspaper clippings received at the headquarters of the International Association of Fire Fighters, tell of the collapse, after forty-eight hours, of the recent strike of the organized fire fighters and policemen of that city. This was the only instance in Canada where the National Catholic Union had organized the fire fighters and policemen. They had demanded an increase in pay of some $1.50 a week, when they were getting about $19 to $20 a week. The industrial arbitration board ruled against so large an increase, and they went out. But their clerical leaders, who are seeking to raise a religious and nationalistic barrier between the workers of French Canada and those in the A. F. of L., insisted that they surrender at once. Nearly one-fifth of the three hundred men who struck were suspended when they returned to work. The incident is a hard blow to the National Catholic Union in its attempt to supplant the A. F. of L. in the St. Lawrence valley.

Unemployment Increasing

Unemployment figures just issued by the Department of Labor show that the number of jobs available in establishments that normally employ over five hundred persons each has fallen 2.9 per cent in June, as compared with the May report. Thirty-nine out of sixty-five cities covered by the survey report a decrease in employment in the big shops and factories.

Living Costs Still High

At the same time the department issues a report showing that food prices, at retail, increased 2 per cent in Chicago and 1 per cent in Denver from May 15 to June 15. In New Haven and Scranton there was a decrease of 2 per cent, with a drop of 1 per cent in Portland, Me., and no change in Norfolk or Milwaukee. For the past year the decrease in retail food prices is reported as 39 per cent in Louisville, 38 per cent in Denver and Milwaukee, 36 per cent in Chicago, 34 per cent in New Haven, 33 per cent in Scranton, 32 per cent in Portland, Me., and 30 per cent in Norfolk.

These figures on food costs will be welcome enough to the holder of a steady job which pays a living wage. The Denver convention of the A. F. of L. laid down the rule that wages should be based upon a just return for service performed, and not upon the cost of living. It got away from the theory of the "fodder wage" as a sufficient ideal for labor. But wage reductions continue, under the terrific pressure of organized profiteering, brute force, unemployment and fear. And as unemployment and terrorization proceed, the significance of the market price of beans and eggs will grow less and less.

The issue before American labor, and particularly the labor employed in the railroad, coal, lumber, building and other basic industries, is how to provide regular employment and more than a living wage, and how to break the drive of the State Cossacks, company guards, private detective bands, misled legionaries, chambers of commerce and other elements seeking to destroy the organized workers' civil rights under the law.

Labor Loses a Champion

Seth Shepard of Washington, one of the ablest and most eager defenders of the civil liberties of this nation, among the younger members of the bar, died recently. He had taken a leading part in the fight for industrial democracy before the Courts, before the Postoffice Department in The Call case, and within the Episcopal Church. He had, as a lecturer in the law school of Georgetown University, effectively forwarded the gospel of human rights above property rights. His passing, at 36 years of age, is a far-reaching loss to the cause of liberty.

The child who demands the union label wields more influence than the man or woman who strikes. The strikers' place may be filled, but there is no substitute for the union label.

American vessels and drove American capital under foreign flags.

"Now we are told that these same influences will aid the Shipping Board in building up a merchant marine. Once again are the wolves set to guard the sheep."

The Shipping Board announces the appointment of three vice presidents to direct the emergency fleet corporation. Two of them, J. B. Smull of New York and W. J. Love of Baltimore, were the unanimous choice of ship owners, it is stated.

"Liberty's Foes Are Within"

The people's liberties are endangered by alleged champions of liberty, and a free press is the greatest protector of liberty, declared Senator Borah in a newspaper statement on the significance of July Fourth.

"It may seem incredible to many, but to me the most vital problem in American politics at the present time is the preservation of the great guarantees of civil liberties found in our Constitution and so long supposed to be secure and indispensable," said the lawmaker.

"It may seem still more incredible when the opinion is confidently ventured that these principles, the safeguards of our liberties, are not so much in danger of those who openly oppose them as from those who, professing to believe in them, are willing to ignore them when found inconvenient to their purposes.

"The former we can deal with, but the latter, professing loyalty, either by precept or example, undermine the very first principles of our Government, and are by far the more dangerous. It is said that Augustus Caesar finally robbed the Roman people of all their rights and privileges at the very time when he was leading them to believe he was their most zealous defender.

"One of the most common traits of the political pharisee—the man who is always professing great devotion to the Constitution and always betraying it or disregarding it—is that of constantly expressing the fear that the people may have their minds poisoned by false doctrines; hence, the necessity of censoring the press and circumscribing public meetings and arbitrarily punishing men for expressing 'dangerous' views.

"As a matter of fact, there is no one more difficult to lead astray and no one in whose keeping the true principles of free government are so safe as the average citizen. There is no tribunal before which the advocates of false, foolish, or disloyal theories may be tried with such implicit confidence of favorable results for order and law and free government, as the tribunal of the American people as a whole. A small per cent may be moved or misled, but let the political body as a whole test out the worth of any proposition and the community will be more wholesome and the public will be safer and the people will be more self-confident and more fit for self-government from the experience.

"In the days when a band of noble Englishmen were fighting for a free press, free speech for protection against arbitrary arrest, and for the right of peaceable assemblage, one of England's most eloquent men said: 'Give me but the liberty of the press and I will give the minister a venal house of peers; I will give him a corrupt and servile house of commons; I will give him full swing of the patronage of office; I will give him the whole host of ministerial influence; I will give him all the power that place can confer upon him to purchase submission and overawe resistance; and yet, armed with the liberty of the press, I will go forth to meet him undismayed; I will attack the mightier fabric he has reared with that mighty engine; I will shake down from its height corruption and lay it beneath the ruins of the abuses it was meant to shelter.'

"It was this fine insight and great faith which moved the framers of the Constitution to build in the integrity of their conviction."

"Freedom" in Porto Rico

San Juan, Porto Rico, July 16.—The tobacco trust's lockout of 10,000 cigar workers, launched last December in an effort to reduce wages and smash unionism, is still on.

Armed policemen await the word of trust underlings to club and shoot down the workers. Men and women have been railroaded to jail by the hundreds, wounded by gunshots and sentenced to long terms in jail for alleged misdemeanors. In many instances they have been refused bail and denied consultation with friends and attorneys. Homes of the strikers have been raided, and they have been attacked on the streets without warrant by policemen.

Despite these outrages, which are intended to break the workers' spirit, they are as determined as last December. The Cigar Makers' International Union is standing behind the strikers.

The fabulous profits in war munitions are indicated by a suit filed at Washington, D. C., by a Los Angeles inventor, who claims $6,250,000 for commissions on the sale of a shell that he invented. A New Jersey concern manufactured five million of these shells, which were sold to the Government for $25 a piece, or a total of $125,000,000.

NORTH DAKOTA KEEPS FAITH

Some time ago The Bank of North Dakota purchased from a wholesale paper firm twenty thousand lithographed ledger sheets at a saving of $5 per thousand sheets. When the sample sheets were submitted it was found that they did not carry the Union Label. Upon inquiry, it was learned that these sheets had been produced in a non-union shop, and for this reason the order was promptly cancelled, although it would have affected a saving of a hundred dollars. The officials of The Bank of North Dakota believe in keeping faith with the workers in industry who, by their co-operation, are helping to make the North Dakota industrial program a success.

A new microphone to collect sounds and convey them to the ears of partly deaf persons by almost invisible wires is so compact that it can be worn under a man's necktie.

Labor News

The Union Construction Company of Oakland has announced a wage reduction of 10 per cent, effective August 1.

The Building Trades Council of Alameda County has accepted a 7½ per cent wage reduction and the American (open shop) plan of the Builders' Exchange.

At Detroit, Mich., moving picture operators have secured settlements with several theaters, after conducting a vigorous contest against these concerns.

The Illinois State Senate has defeated the proposed eight-hour law for women. Trade unionists made strong efforts to swing the State in line with progress on this question.

The Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co. of Ohio announced a reduction in the wages of common labor from 36 to 30 cents per hour on July 16. The plant normally employs 15,000.

Wage reductions, effective August 1 or soon thereafter, are planned in every shipbuilding district along the Atlantic seaboard and the Gulf of Mexico, the administrative council of the Atlantic Coast Shipbuilding Association was informed at its monthly meeting at Philadelphia.

At a conference of timber workers at Vancouver it was agreed to launch an organizing drive in that State and Oregon. Wage cuts and the failure of a company "union," known as the Loyal Legion of Loggers and Lumbermen, has made it easier to preach trade unionism to these workers.

More than 1000 organized hatters of New York have defeated a 10 per cent wage cut after a three day's strike. Several months ago they accepted a cut, and now they insist that that is enough. The employers were confronted with a long struggle at the opening of the season and concluded to settle.

Appeal from the decision of the Superior Court, denying Thomas J. Mooney a new trial on motion for a writ of audita querela, was filed in the District Court of Appeals. The petition appeals from the Court's order denying the writ, which is based upon the English common law, and the ruling sustaining the demurrer of Assistant District Attorney Milton U'Ren, who represented the State at the recent hearing before Judge Harold M. Louderback.

Officers of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union have been enjoined by Supreme Court Justice Donnelly from "interfering with the business" of Cohen, Friedlander & Martin, cloak manufacturers of Toledo, O. Following a strike, the firm shut down its Ohio plant to act as jobbers, arranging for the manufacture and purchase of clothes in New York. Unionists in this city refused to do work for the Ohio firm and Justice Donnelly holds this is a secondary boycott.

Chicagoans groped their way through darkened streets one day last week as the result of a strike of city electricians for higher wages, while 2000 policemen and firemen were held in reserve to prevent an outbreak of crime or disorder. Practically every street in the city was in darkness. The first effect was a slowing up of transportation and the congestion of vehicular traffic at street intersections. The only illumination in the business district was supplied by lights within office buildings, by store windows and electric signs.

World's Workers

New Zealand reports that financial depression hangs heavily over the country and thousands are unemployed. The Labor party has made requests to the Government to provide work. Immigrants from England have added to the unemployed list and a bad winter is in store for the working classes.

A statement issued by the Amsterdam Municipal Statistical Bureau shows that 25.2 per cent of the members of trade unions affiliated to the State Unemployment Insurance Fund in that city were out of work in March, as compared with 25.1 per cent in the preceding month, and 13.2 per cent in March, 1920. These figures include diamond workers, of whom 89.1 per cent were unemployed in March, 88.6 per cent in February, and 33.7 per cent in March, 1920.

Dark clouds continue to hover over the devoted heads of the British workers, and it appears that some one of our emigrating title hunters have transplanted a few pet ideas into the domains of Johnny Bull. The national executive of the British Labor party has passed a resolution viewing with apprehension the efforts now being made to suppress free speech. British workmen had better take warning and do more than "view with apprehension" to prevent the spread of such advanced American ideas.

It is claimed by the Australian Labor Party that the only method whereby war can be prevented is by getting in touch with the workers and getting them to make a stand against militarism. The Australian Labor Conference at Sydney adopted a resolution limiting the manufacture of armaments to the Government and eliminating the individuals who "grow wealthy by the manufacture and sale of implements of war." The delegates also pledged themselves, individually and collectively, to refuse to participate in any war outside of the commonwealth. The Labor Party is not opposed to taking part in a war of defense for the country, provided it can be shown conclusively that such a war is likely to rob the Australian people of their liberty and right to self-government. The Australian workers are opposed to war and favor limitation of armaments and a proper understanding with outside nations as a means toward preventing war.

Japanese reports under date of July 15 state that troops have been called out in connection with the dockyard strikes at Japanese ports. The strikers continue battling the police in efforts to carry out a project for control of the yards by the workers. The ringleaders have been arrested and a number of strikers have been wounded during serious rioting. All the dockyards have been ordered closed for ten days, and demonstrations have been prohibited. The demands of the strikers included an increase in wages, pensions, recognition of the Dockyard Workers' Union, and a promise not to dismiss the leaders of the strike movement. The strikers in the Kavasaki dockyard, the largest in Japan, issued a manifesto in which they declared they wanted joint control of the shipyards. The manifesto proposed control of the dockyards by an industrial commission, the hours of labor to be six daily.

Domestic and Naval

The Soldiers' Bonus bill, by a vote of 47 to 29, was recommitted to the finance committee by the Senate, as requested by President Harding.

Sale of the five-masted auxiliary schooner "City of Portland" under the hammer of the United States marshal at Jacksonville, Fla., was reported. The vessel, which was built at St. Helena, Ore., in 1916 and which formerly carried lumber on this coast, was purchased by F. S. Pendleton of New York for $10,000.

For rescuing the Shipping Board freighter "West Ison" from her berth at the Harbor Island terminal of the East Waterway Dock and Warehouse Company when that property caught fire, a libel for $50,000 salvage was filed against the vessel in the United States Court at Seattle by Captain Ray Small and William Allison, owners of the tug "Aleut," and L. Royce, a deckhand on the tug.

The steamer "City of Puebla" has been sold at auction by a United States marshal in New York. The vessel is well known here, having plied out of San Francisco, coastwise, for the Pacific Coast Steamship Company for many years. The vessel was sent from here to the Atlantic Coast during the war, and had been plying on the Atlantic until the time of her sale.

A survey made recently shows that there is not a single large oil-engined vessel laid up, although probably 20 per cent of the world's steam shipping is idle in port on account of the impossibility of operating at a profit with the existing conditions of the freight market. The survey shows that motorships can operate at one-half of the cost of running a steamer, as far as the cost of fuel is concerned, which is the largest item in the expense of operation.

The importance of San Francisco as a fishing port is shown in the number of vessels enumerated for this district for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, in the Customs House. Out of 3374 motorboats numbered, 1369 were engaged in commercial fishing in the districts following: Ocean, north of San Francisco, 141; ocean, south of San Francisco (exclusive of Monterey), 29; Monterey, 421; San Francisco bay and rivers tributary thereto, 778.

Co-ordination of all Federal activities relating to Alaska are proposed in a bill introduced by Senator Cummins, Republican, Iowa. The measure was drawn after consultation with the Alaskan delegation and several business men of Alaska. Under the bill, the Shipping Board would be required to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior ships of sufficient number and tonnage to run between the United States and Alaskan ports for operation in conjunction with the Alaskan railroad.

The Japan-Nippon Kisha Steamship Company recently awarded the sum of $1000 each to the captain and crew of the American freighter "West Jester." The amount is one of the largest gratuities for heroism at sea ever awarded and is in appreciation of the "West Jester's" crew in saving the [illegible] "Taiyo Maru" from destruction by fire while lying in port at Tacoma. The "West Jester" lay alongside the burning Japanese vessel, and the captain and crew were injured by fire while fighting the blaze.

News from Abroad

There has been dissension in the Spanish Cabinet for some time. The situation culminated recently in Manuel Arguelles, Minister of Finance, tendering his resignation on the ground that the new tariff law and the commercial treaties were inimical to the interests of labor.

A wave of love tragedies is sweeping through Italy. Not a day passes without a suicide or murder, generally because of jealousy. Several cases have been noted lately where girls have attempted to end their lives, when they discovered that their sweethearts were married men.

Canton authorities have declared the West river to be within the "war zone" and have issued a warning that all foreign steamers on those waters will be subject to search. British shipping interests have entered a protest, but already one British ship, the "Taimin," has been searched and released.

In the stormiest session since its inauguration, the Austrian National Assembly has passed the second reading of the bill placing Catholic clergymen of Austria, and all church employes and servants on the salaried civil list. The sergeants-at-arms were compelled to form a line between the right and left to prevent violence.

News has been received from Belgrade announcing an agrarian outbreak of Bolshevist character in Bulgaria. There is great unrest among the bourgeoise who, in Sofia, Varna and several other towns, have broken out in open revolt against the existing peasant government, whose radical measures, particularly on taxation, have paralyzed trade.

The barkentine "Retriever," which has been lying in port at Papeete since May of 1920, after being towed there in a water-logged condition when abandoned by her crew off the Marquesas Islands, has left the Society Island port for Auckland. The vessel was purchased by the Union Steamship Company and will be converted into a barge.

The United States Shipping Board vessel "Eastern Sword," bound from New Orleans for Belfast with eight thousand tons of wheat on board, went ashore recently at Whitehead, in Belfast Lough. At latest reports she was high and dry upon the rocks. The "Eastern Sword" is a small vessel of 2228 tons. She left New Orleans June 14, touching at Charleston, S. C., four days later.

Considerable uneasiness has been created in Prague by the disclosure of a Communist plot to overthrow the Government of Czecho-Slovakia. Kutscherer, a former Czech and now Soviet commissioner at Moscow, has announced that Bela Kun, who for a few weeks was Communist dictator in Hungary before he was driven out by forces headed by Admiral Horthy, has forwarded 5,000,000 kronen, the proceeds from a sale of a number of valuable jewels, from Moscow to the Communists of Czecho-Slovakia, to be used for propaganda purposes in their efforts to overthrow the Government. More money will be forthcoming from Moscow when that is gone, it is said. Kun is also reported to have instructed the Czech delegates to the Third Internationale at Moscow not to tolerate any delay or hinderances in launching the Communist revolution in Czecho-Slovakia.

Nurse—You were very naughty in church, Guy. Do you know where little boys and girls go to who don't put their pennies in the collection box?

Johnny—It's all right, mother. I'm 'tending they're the Salvation Army. Edinburgh Scotsman.

A business man advertised for a boy the other night.

When he arrived at the office the next morning there were some fifty boys already in line.

He opened his desk and was just about to begin examining the applicants, when his stenographer handed him a card, on which was scribbled:

"Don't do anything until you see me. I'm the last kid in line—but I'm telling you I'm there with the goods."—Kewanee Union.

"Yes," said the traveler, "I had an amusing journey up to town. There were two Scotsmen in the carriage."

"How do you know they were Scotsmen?" asked the cashier, curiously. "By their accent, I suppose?"

"No; you see, they both happened to take their pipes out together. Well, they filled them and then each calmly waited for the other to strike a match."

"Well, what happened?"

"Oh, I brought out my pipe, so both of them waited for my match."

A young man who had been in the city only three days, but who had been paying attention to a pretty girl, wanted to propose, but was afraid he might be thought too hasty. He delicately approached the subject as follows:

"If I were to speak to you of marriage after having only made your acquaintance three days ago, what would you say to it?"

"Well, I should say never put off till tomorrow that which you should have done day before yesterday"—Detroit Free Press.

Two powerful colored stevedores who had some sort of falling out were engaged in unloading a vessel at a St. Louis dock. Uncomplimentary remarks and warnings of intended violence were exchanged whenever the two passed each other with their trucks.

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

WASTE AND LABOR

Engineers' Report Places Industrial Responsibilities on Labor

Watermelons. Thousands of them. Large, juicy, well-nourished watermelons decorating the Potomac river, from Alexandria to Indian Head. Some floating majestically down stream; some caught in the reeds and marsh grass; some high and dry on the shore. They had arrived in Washington one day last August when the watermelon market was bearish and, five thousand strong, they had been taken out to docks and dumped. Meanwhile it is safe to assume that the watermelon appetite of Washington had been by no means assuaged. But, Allah be praised, the market had been stabilized.

Locomotives. Thousand of them. Large, powerful, well-nourished locomotives. But with something askew. A leaky valve, a choked flue, a rickety tender. These locomotives in the year 1919 had to be shopped—hung up on cranes and tinkered with. The railroads had shops with cranes and men. But the locomotives did not go into these shops. No, not as a rule. They went to other shops, maintained by outside supply companies, leaving the men and the cranes in the home shops with nothing to do. Idle men, to be sure, can be fired—and they were by the hundreds. But idle shops and idle cranes cannot, alas, be fired. They can only sit eating their heads off in depreciation, taxes, interest, insurance and overhead generally. Meanwhile the railroads paid the supply companies for repairing their locomotives on the basis of direct labor cost plus 110 per cent for overhead and profit—a whale of a price. Meanwhile they paid in addition all the overhead on their own empty shops—making the total bill for repairs almost Himalayan. All of which you will agree is an insane and improbable procedure. Not at all. Not under the rules of businesslike acumen as practiced by all far-seeing captains of industry. This was a sound strategic move on the part of the financial managers of the railroads. For observe, they could shift the high cost to the Government, which was paying them 6 per cent over and above cost on the one hand, and throw the fear of God into the shop craft unions (who were getting altogether too cocky) on the other. Thus was justice served, and private initiative vindicated. That shops and equipment were idle, and that excess effort, time and materials were devoted to repairing the nation's locomotives was too irrelevant to merit serious consideration.

Here is a printing establishment. A union rule provides that all advertising matter coming into the shop in electrotype must be reset in type by the compositors. The union graciously sanctions the use of the electrotype, but insists that the type be set and redistributed to secure the equivalent hours of work involved in setting up the original. This folderol is sometimes solemnly enacted days after the advertisement has gone to press.

Watermelons, locomotives and printing presses. These are but three examples picked at random from the almost universal sabotage—now great, now small—of the modern industrial system. In the sum total these practices must reach amazing figures. The waste which flows from them is incalculable. And by waste is meant idle labor or idle plant, or labor and plant devoted to the production of goods or services which satisfy no recognizable human need. Employers' associations through pools, rings, monopolies and "gentlemen's agreements" have time and again restricted output—with the resulting idle labor and idle plant, and often spoiled or wasted raw material—in the interest of "all that the traffic will bear." Labor unions have been known to do likewise—over and beyond, be it understood, reasonable provisions for health and safety. It is probable that the sabotage of labor is small compared to the vast businesslike arrangements of captains of industry, but from the standpoint of waste as defined the hands of neither party are altogether clean. Could these practices be in some way obviated, the resulting potential increase in production would stagger the imagination; would perhaps double the standard of living!

The problem of industrial waste is beginning to thrust itself to the fore. Invention and technical processes have progressed rapidly in the past generation. Oil, coal, lumber, iron, copper and other raw materials have been pouring down the hopper of the industrial machine by the billions of tons. Factories, mines, irrigation projects have increased tenfold. Yet the standard of living of the masses of the American people, expressed in sound food, shelter, clothing, education and amusement, has shown only the most sluggish advance. Some statisticians assert that "real" wages have not advanced since 1900. Somewhere in the process it is obvious that there is a tremendous leakage. Somewhere the gears are clogged and the engine choked. More and more, sensible people and honest people are beginning to pry up the hood, monkey-wrench in hand. And naturally the handiest man with the monkey-wrench is the engineer—the chap who knows that "what goes up must come down"; who knows that given so much input and so much power, the output ought to be thus and so—with no wide variations plus or minus. The politician, the orthodox economist, the financier are fortunately not bound by any such realistic limitations. Waste means little to them provided the phrases are ringing, the profits are coming in, and the "immutable laws" are all in working order. So it is natural to expect the technician to be the first sincerely to face the problem of industrial waste in its larger aspects. We say "larger aspects" advisedly. The engineer has already introduced the cult of "efficiency," which is by way of being a sort of John the Baptist. But industrial waste is more—vastly more. "Efficiency" sits in judgment upon the individual plant, or the industrial process, seldom questioning the relationships of the output to human wants, the relationships of the labor involved to human psychology, the relationship of the plant to the industry, or the industry to the whole industrial mechanism. Thus we find "efficiency" methods in the manufacture of deleterious drugs and munitions of war, while the philosophy of waste condemns the whole output as not only unnecessary, but vicious.

More constructive have been the proceedings of the Taylor Society—a group of progressive engineers—who, out of the groundwork of the old "scientific management," are slowly evolving an approach which comes close to the fundamentals of waste.

In their recent hearings before the Railway Labor Board in Chicago, the railroad workers retained engineers to study the extent of waste in the railroad industry as now conducted. The finding showed that in nearly every department of railroading there were large preventable leakages, running to a total of at least a billion dollars a year. These findings furthermore were taken largely from the estimates and testimony of railroad managers themselves. Certain of the possible savings would require a considerable capital outlay; others were merely a matter of better management and administration.

Railroad executives, when faced with these charges, have shown a disposition to bluster, to bring counter-charges against the efficiency of labor, but very little has been said—or perhaps can be said—in respect to the findings themselves. In their hearts, railway executives know that the indictment is largely true. Thus Samuel O. Dunn, next friend of the railroads and editor of the Railway Age, said recently in commenting on transportation wastes: "Mr. Brandeis, a few years ago, talked about a possible saving of a million dollars a day. If he said that now, Mr. Brandeis would be a piker." Recall how Mr. Brandeis was heaped with abuse at that time!

The important point to grasp in the situation is this. Instead of the usual mud-slinging contest (of which large traces are still discernible, to be sure) between capital and labor, the introduction of the question of waste raises the issue to new and revolutionary grounds. The railway workers, in broaching the subject of managerial efficiency, have placed themselves flatly on record as having an interest in and a responsibility for furnishing the service of transportation to the American people. In its essence transportation is the carrying of the maximum of freight and passengers with the minimum of energy. The railway workers have recognized this basic engineering fact, and in effect have proclaimed that besides wages, hours and working conditions, they recognize the necessity of carrying a maximum load with a minimum of energy. In other words, if their engineering exhibits were made in good faith—as there is every reason to suppose they were—the workers desire a wasteless industry. And this is a very momentous fact to grasp indeed.

Most important of all the approaches to the question of waste, however, is the report of the Federation of Engineering Societies, on Elimination of Waste in Industry, which has just been made public. Under the leadership of Mr. Hoover, a number of basic industries have been surveyed by competent engineers. They have defined waste broadly as the failure to utilize effectively mechanical equipment, raw material or human resources. They have laid particular emphasis on the last factor—examining unemployment, personnel and labor turnover. Their findings show that while labor is responsible for some 25 per cent of the total cost of waste in the industries they have examined, management is responsible for 50 per cent thereof—or twice as much. They state, however, that they are much less interested in locating responsibility for past performance than in indicating the many opportunities for eliminating waste in the future.

The full report, which includes the surveys of various individual industries, runs into some 125,000 words, and whatever its limitations, due to the comparatively short time in which the assay was made, it will form an arresting document—almost, one is tempted to say, an epoch-making one. The conception is broad and waste is defined as measurable in physical units. Here is no nonsense about profits, money or credit, but the essence of waste—the physical stuff—labor, raw materials and plant. However wavering the initial vision of the engineers who view industry from this angle, the conclusions to which they will be driven are relentless. When industry is at last analyzed from the standpoint of providing a maximum of human needs with a minimum of wear and tear, nothing less than a new industrial synthesis comes to light. It is not too much to expect that we stand on the threshold of a new view of modern industrial progress—a view profoundly illuminating and at times disastrously critical. In due time we may expect to have a sufficient body of data—of which the Hoover report is the first authoritative contribution — to pass scientific judgment on the whole problem.

It is not too soon to suggest that the problem of waste approached in the scientific spirit is fraught with great significance to the American labor movement. The railway workers have already given a hint of what this approach may mean. Is there enough common sense in the labor movement at large to get aboard the band wagon, join hands with the engineers and take up the challenge of industrial waste? For the financiers do not think in such terms at all, the engineers are just beginning to emerge from a Stygian night, and it is only labor in co-operation with the awakened technician—the workers of hand and brain—who can seriously face the problem and ultimately take steps toward its solution.

The main contention of the labor union hitherto has been "more pay for shorter hours." This is all very well as far as it goes; the realities of industrial growth and businesslike administration hitherto have made any other course visionary and largely hopeless. But experience has proved time and again that on those rare occasions when labor has secured the whip hand, monopolistic tendencies have set in precisely similar to those of combining employers. We have seen the typesetters working on utterly useless advertising copy in order to restrict the labor output.

It should be said at this point that we are not about to break into a time-honored sob as to the necessity of union labor foregoing the few monopolistic privileges it has won. This is to be no plea for honest workmen to show their better natures, and to lie down and be good. Far from it. In the catch-as-catch-can of modern industry a union has no other choice than to fight the devil with fire. Grind or be ground, is the only realistic business ethic. But in raising the question of waste, labor has a unique and exceptional opportunity not only to advance its own position, but genuinely to serve the public interest at the same time. On one condition—that labor extend its share of industrial responsibility.

Instead of saying to the employer: "We will do the tasks you set us for the highest wage and in the shortest work hours we can force from you," labor will shortly have an opportunity to say: "This is an industry necessary to the public welfare; the boss and ourselves make this industry go (provided the boss is a technician and not a financier); we should both be responsible for its efficient conduct; we should both have something to say about how it should be run, for upon us both rests the solemn responsibility to keep waste at a minimum. Make this responsibility concrete by giving us as great a share in the management as our experience and our knowledge warrants."

Such a statement would mark the beginning of real industrial democracy—a condition flatly impossible while the boss maintains his emphasis on profits only and labor its emphasis on wages only. Not until both accept joint responsibility for the efficient conduct of industry can any genuine steps be taken toward the elimination of waste.

Again, there are certain broader implications of the question which, while not immediate, are of the utmost import to labor. We have said, and it is a matter susceptible of statistical proof, that the standard of living has increased but slightly in the past generation. A full half of the population still hovers about the poverty line; slums and destitution are still the heritage of every city, large sections of the rural population continue to live in abject misery. In other words, there is not enough of the right kind of stuff produced to go around. Vast quantities of products are drained away in luxuries and in harmful or unnecessary products. War, and preparations for war take their colossal toll. But if labor as a class is ever to rise from the relative misery and poverty of its surroundings, more of the right kind of stuff—more houses, more wheat, more shoes, more schools—has got to be produced. And only through the progressive elimination of waste can production be progressively increased.

Higher wages and shorter hours under the present industrial system turn in due and regular course to a higher cost of living, and the vicious circle is complete. Certain favored unions may dig their toes in and reap a relative advantage over their fellow-workers—but by and large the standard of living stands pat, and will so stand until the end of time, unless ways and means are devised to secure more relative production per individual, and unless ways and means are devised to see that the individual gets it. For increases in "average production" are a bitter irony. Every time a millionaire orders a yacht to be built, "average production" takes a jump. Every time milady calls for rare perfumes and strange cosmetics, "average production" goes up. Production, measured either in dollars or tons of goods per capita, has vastly increased in the past thirty years, but the production of necessary, well-made, consumable goods distributed to the individuals of the nation has shown but a slight advance. And it is only the latter figure which is really significant to the plain people.

Of course, labor may use the discovery of managerial incompetence simply as a club to strengthen its own case before the public, without the slightest disposition to assist in reducing the margin of waste. But the public will soon be disillusioned with mere cries of "You're another." Labor can make its case convincing only when it shows a genuine disposition to take an active share in bringing about more efficient operation in return for a measurable degree of managerial responsibility, which carries with it some security of tenure on the job. When the public begins to realize what a frightful mess financial control has made of industry from the operating standpoint—when the myth of the all-wise captain of industry is duly and finally exploded—labor, in conjunction with the engineer, stands a chance to step into the vacuum with new managerial proposals which should go far toward winning genuine public interest and support. (The ambiguous and much abused word "public" I take to mean all adult persons not involved in the industry under review).

The analysis of waste, and its relation to watermelons, locomotives and printing presses, promises to shed a flood of light on these fundamental matters. If labor is ever to increase measurably its standard of living it must take up the challenge which the engineer has thrown down.—The Nation.

A TALE OF HARD LUCK

Newspaper reporters sometimes observe a touch of humor, or nature, in the most matter of fact happenings which come under their observation, and they are capable of making ordinary news items interesting reading, especially so when aided by the lively imagination of some of our old-time deep-water skippers.

The recent arrival of the barkentine "Echo" at San Francisco was graphically described by a Bulletin man as follows:

"Old Man Hard Luck of the Sea gave Captain C. S. Semsen and ten men of the crew of the barkentine 'Echo' a merry voyage from the South Sea Islands, and it was a disconsolate but relieved lot of men who disembarked from the vessel that anchored in the stream.

"Captain Semsen thought the worst was over when, with his damaged craft at anchor outside the Golden Gate, he saw the tugs 'Tatoosh' and 'Sea Queen' bearing toward him to tow him into port.

"'Haul up the starboard anchor,' the captain commanded, and his storm-weary men responded.

"Out of the fog, the 'Tatoosh' loomed up ahead of the slower 'Sea Queen.' The starboard anchor by this time was resting securely at the hawse pipe.

"'Haul up the port hook,' called out Captain Semsen, and his men hove to with a will.

"Just then the 'Tatoosh,' puffing to beat its competitor, reached the little windjammer and made fast his towline. Without waiting for the port anchor to come up, the 'Tatoosh' started joyfully back towards the bay.

"Whereupon fifty-seven fathoms of chain and Captain Semsen's pet 'brand-new' anchor parted company with the 'Echo,' and echo answered Captain Semsen's well-expressed sentiments.

"The eleven men of the 'Echo' were glad to exercise their sea-legs along the Embarcadero once again. Ever since the barkentine put in the out-of-the-way port of Vila from Melbourne, they have been wondering if they were ever to see the Ferry Building again.

"When they arrived at Vila to load copra, they learned that the French captain of a little one-man trading skiff had just been served as dessert for a cannibalistic feast. The little trader, picking up copra at the tiny bays and inlets of the wildest islands of the New Hebrides group, had disappeared.

"French officials started a search for the craft, and they found it in the hands of the aborigines, while all that remained of the captain was a string of teeth on a husky warrior and articles of European garments gracing the spear-throwing champions of the tribe.

"All of which did not serve to calm the fears of the American seamen as the windjammer lay in port waiting for the natives to load it. So they breathed a sigh of relief as they departed Vila, with the barkentine loaded with spears, poisoned arrows, warlike clubs and other relics.

"It was fair sailing for a time, but the larder did not hold out. They ran out of butter, meat, sugar and other sea-going delicacies, and were finally reduced to sea bread and 'canned Willie,' of army fame.

"Then the storm broke, gaining all its fury within a few hours. About 8:30 on the evening of July 12 the jib-boom went over the side with a crash. The waves kept the deck awash, and the brine poured down into the forecastle into the crew's quarters. Next the outer and inner jibs went by the boards. The topsail stays broke under the strain of the 75-mile gale, and the topsail followed in short order. The mainsail halyard parted and the mainsail was left fluttering in the wind.

"For eight hours the storm held sway, while the men worked desperately to make jury rigs and keep the pumps going, hanging on for dear life as the torrents swept over the decks and the little vessel spun first on her bow and then on her stern. At the break of day the liner 'Matsonia,' bound for Honolulu, hove in the offing, but the only impression the sailors got was of passengers hanging over the rail when they should have been sleeping soundly in their staterooms. At the end of the eight hours the gale abated and they dropped anchor off the Golden Gate."

All of which goes to show that you can still have an interesting time in the South Seas providing you have the right kind of medicine; also there is a possibility that it was not ordinary passengers which were seen feeding the fishes from the rails of the 'Matsonia' at break of day. There is every reason to believe it was a party of California University vacationists, who are enjoying (?) their strikebreaking lark, and if they had the right kind of bo'sun they should have been washing down decks at that particular time.

Constant illustrations are given of the identical interests of capital in all parts of the civilized world. The perfection with which the system operates is exemplified everywhere, to the disadvantage of the masses.

Continued aggressions upon the rights of labor have compelled even the most conservative leaders to realize the necessity for closer solidarity among the workers.

The following address to the annual council meeting of the National Transport Workers' Federation of Britain by President Henry Gosling, and the views of Samuel Gompers, President of the A. F. of L., show that the necessity for closer affiliation of labor forces is about to be accepted.

MR. HENRY GOSLING'S PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS

We have assembled together in what is probably the most trying period we have had to face since the inception of the Federation. We, like every other industry, are faced with the effects of a world crisis for which we are not responsible. The world today is suffering for the criminal blunders of its rulers. During the war, and immediately following the Armistice, the leaders of the Government promised to make this a country "fit for heroes to live in," but we are today faced with a problem of a volume of unemployment which is the greatest within living memory. The whole nation is suffering from the industrial paralysis brought about by the futile policy of the Government, which collectively betrayed their promises to the mine workers to maintain control of the coal industry until the end of August. Decontrol was thrust on the industry at the end of March, and the mineowners, acting in collusion with the Government, sought to impose a reduction of in some cases 50 per cent in the wages of mine workers. The community during the period of control enjoyed advantages to the extent of hundreds of millions of pounds, and if the consumers of industrial and domestic coal at home had to pay the world price at varying times we should have been paying £5 and £6 per ton for our coal. Thanks to the policy of the Government, which has made one blunder after another, the demand for British coal has been seriously reduced, and the Government and the mineowners foolishly imagined that they could destroy the powers of resistance of the miners and impose their own terms upon them.

The overwhelming majority of the members we represent are dependent upon the resumption of world trade, which might easily have followed after the period of the armistice. The process of reconstruction throughout the world should have occupied our industries at top speed and should have provided an abundance of employment for all workers engaged in our various transport sections. The Government, with its reactionary tendencies, has spent 150 millions or more in trying to impose its own form of government upon Soviet Russia. Pandering to the stupid clamor of the Jingo section, it has sought to impose a crushing indemnity upon our late enemies, and in so doing has strangled world trade. It flies from one panic measure to another, and all the time we see Britain's industrial and commercial supremacy sink before our eyes. There is but one common bond between the Government and the employing class, and that is their mutual desire to force the workers back to and even below the pre-war standards of life. This the workers are resolutely refusing to accept, and in the process the country's trade and prosperity appears to move towards irretrievable ruin.

The Federation has had to resist the downward tendency of money wages. Here and there, in one section and another, they have had to acquiesce in certain reductions. The tremendous problem of unemployment affects transport workers probably more speedily than any other section of well-organized industry. In spite of this, however, the Federation and its constituent unions, by means of interdependence and loyalty one to the other, are maintaining the integrity of their ranks as solidly as can be expected.

Your Executive Council has issued a lengthy report dealing with the failure to put into operation the full power of the Triple Industrial Alliance. The retirement of Mr. Robert Smillie from the presidency of the Miners' Federation placed the chairmanship of the Triple Alliance in my hands, and I can sincerely and solemnly assure you that it was my desire and the desire of my colleagues of the Executive Council to assist the miners by every means in our power. Events, however, determined that at the critical stage we could not see our way to participate in a general strike of the transport organizations in support of the miners. I will take my share of the responsibility together with all my colleagues of the Executive Council for what transpired on Friday, April 15. My conviction is that had our critics been placed in the same position as ourselves, had they been permitted to realize the facts as we were compelled to do, they would have arrived at similar conclusions to those which animated us, namely, that with misgivings and uncertainty surrounding us it would have been a disaster to have taken part in a general transport strike movement. Even now it is not too wise to go fully into the difficulties of our own organization. Generals and admirals, military strategists and tacticians, can make their personal and intimate revelations at the conclusion of a war. Volumes of recollections and reminiscences can be and have been published when the war is ended and the peace treaty is signed, but with us it is entirely different. In the struggle between the organized workers and the organized capitalists war is never at an end. The battleground shifts and there are periods of respite, of reorganization and realignment, but the war which is called the class war is never at an end. For us to reveal all the facts and to draw all the warrantable conclusions from the facts is only more openly to expose the weaknesses known to us to the advantage of the other side.

The Federation, in co-operation with the National Union of Railwaymen, attempted honestly and sincerely to assist the miners by refusing partially to bunker steamers and to handle imported coal. It is significant that the bulk of the coal which has been imported comes from Germany, and I would remind the ultra-patriotic section of the community, together with some members of the Federation, that they were warned over and over again that the

Over 10,000,000 feet of redwood lumber is lying on the mill docks of Humboldt, due to congestion caused by the marine lockout.

Four motor ships owned by the Ocean Shipping Company, formerly the Pacific Freighters' Company, will commence operations in the coastwise lumber trade shortly.

With a cargo of 210,000 codfish, the schooner "Sequoia" of the Union Fish Company's fleet, arrived at San Francisco last week, twenty-one days from Pirate Cove.

The Shipping Board freighter "West Honaker" has been taken off the mudflats at Benicia and assigned to the Williams Dimond Company. The vessel will load grain at Portland for Dublin.

Unusually fine weather marked the round-trip of the schooner "Annie Campbell," which arrived at San Francisco recently from the South Sea Islands. From the time the craft sailed from Eureka several months ago en route to Australia and thence to Tarawa and back to this port, Captain Fonn never found it necessary to reef his sails.

According to a report prepared by R. H. Bondham, United States Inspector of Immigration, sixty-nine more ships from foreign ports entered Portland in the fiscal year just ended than came in during the previous twelve months. The total number of ships examined was an even one hundred. Four thousand sailors were examined during the year.

A survey of the lumber situation at California ports recently by steamship and lumber officials revealed the following facts: There is a shortage of 50,000,000 feet of lumber at San Francisco, and of 25,000,000 feet at San Pedro. If the full fleet of 125 steam schooners could operate, it is estimated that, in sixty days, sufficient lumber will have been transported to these important distributing ports to have made up the deficiency. The rate on lumber from Columbia river to San Francisco by steamer is $8 a thousand feet, and to San Pedro $9.50 a thousand.

Unable to sell the eight former German sailing ships anchored off Sausalito, Robert Dollar has decided to recondition them, load them with barley and send them to the United Kingdom for the Allied Reparations Commission. Some time ago Dollar placed these ships on the market at ten shillings a ton, it is said, but there were no buyers. Work of reconditioning them has begun under the supervision of Captain Thomas Smith, marine surveyor. They need refitting, cleaning and painting, as they have accumulated much sea growth.

Merger of the Peterson and the Rolph tugs in one company in the near future is reported in shipping circles. The new organization will be the San Francisco Tow Boat Company and will have a fleet of seven tugs. It is reported that J. J. Tynan, vice-president and general manager of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, and president of the Peterson Company, will head the new organization. The Rolph tugs are the "Storm King," "Relief," "Gleaner" and "Hercules." The Peterson tugs are the "Wyadda" and "Chief."

SEAMEN! WATCH FOR DEVELOPMENTS.

See Our Weekly Reports Posted in All Union Halls.

I have said that I would never be attorney for shipowners, until the seamen were shipowners. One of the purposes of my visit to Europe this summer is to acquire knowledge as to shipping conditions abroad and particularly to ascertain with what degree of success the seamen of Italy are operating ships.

Any seamen, who, with a view to becoming shipowners some time, are willing to form "a Seamen's Society for Savings" and will pledge to save one-fourth of their wages over their board and lodging per annum, said savings to be put in a depository that they themselves may select, please communicate with the undersigned.

To Make Workers Pay Taxes

The big effort of war profiteers will be to shift taxes to the poor, said Congressman Huddleston, of Alabama, in a speech in the House. He added that this "will be the great issue for the next quarter of a century."

"The rich are dissatisfied with their income and profits taxes," he said. "The profiteers and war contractors are not willing to pay for the war out of the millions they were able to amass out of it; they are no more willing to give up one penny from their ill-gotten gains than if they had won them by honest and legitimate means. The fact that they overcharged the Government for munitions and supplies; that they overcharged the people for the necessaries of life in the time of our nation's peril is no reason in their eyes why this burden of paying for the war should be placed on their shoulders. Profiteers, war contractors, big business and big finance, all the classes of wealth and privilege, will battle with all their resources to place the burden of paying for this war on the backs of the poor, of the multitudes who toil, of the plain people of this country. That is to be the great issue for the next quarter of a century."

The speaker called attention to a prediction he made when the Cummins-Esch bill was passed—that increases in rates would be based upon the so-called "book value" of the railroads, "with all the stealing and watered stock of crooked promoters from the very beginning of the railroad business."

"My prediction proved true," said the lawmaker. "The railroads were permitted to increase their rates upon the basis of their book value of $18,900,000,000. Upon that fraudulent valuation they were permitted to earn the 6 per cent return.

"Yet today you can go upon the stock exchanges of the United States and buy every dollar of stock, of bonds and other securities of all the railroads of the United States for less than $8,000,000,000. Accepting the market value of their stocks, bonds and securities as the true value of the railroads, they were given increases in rates so as to raise their net earnings to 14 per cent. Think of it! No wonder business is strangled. No wonder the people are crying out against excessive railroad charges."

Glove Hides Iron Fist

Every advance by labor is marked by three stages—open antagonism, alleged friendship with hostile design, and final acceptance.

These stages are clearly marked as labor develops power and ability to shape a substantial public opinion for the cause it pleads at that especial time.

When cornered, the second stage is greed's favorite device. It may be termed the "velvet glove" period, and now confronts organized labor in the form of company "unions," which their backers call "industrial democracy" and "employes' representation."

Wage-earners have forced practically all opponents to outwardly accept the principle of labor organization. Conspiracy laws have been annulled, and the men who no longer dare favor these laws organize company "unions" for employes. In every instance the employer holds the veto power over decisions by these "unions."

It makes no difference to these employers whether they deal with their workers as individuals, or through petty bosses. Whether through agents, or directly, in its last analysis the employer is as much an autocrat as if no company "union" exists.

The company "union" bears no resemblance to trade unionism, either in form, spirit, or purpose.

The form of the company "union" is imposed on employes and does not grow out of their experience.

The purpose of this "union" is to retain boss control of wage-earners while lulling them into the belief that they have a voice in their working conditions.

The spirit of the company "union" is paternal—the opposite to that which pervades trade unions.

Workers may be temporarily forced into their company "unions," but they will abandon them as truly as water seeks its level. They cannot be a substitute for trade unions because they are uneconomic and dishonest.

Social justice and improved working conditions is the trade union center of gravity, while company "unions" are formed by those who ignore every ideal and instinct in men who would better their lot in life.

Organized labor can shorten the "velvet glove" period of opposition to trade unionism by agitation, education and organization.

Defend Ousted Teachers

At Peoria, Ill., Miners' Union No. 4646 protests against the dismissal of eleven public school teachers, and in a resolution forwarded to the school board these coal diggers indulge in Americanisms that political agents of big business should remember.

The miners say that the teachers are ousted "for apparently no other reason than that of belonging to a labor union and voicing their opinion on a matter of State Government."

"Therefore," the resolution continues, "we draw these subject matters to your attention: That their discharge was made possible by a subsidized press that molded public opinion in a manner prejudicial to them.

"We are aware that organized labor does not constitute all of the toilers of America, but they stand for the things that are right.

"Freedom of speech carries with it the right to be wrong and to be immune from censorship.

"Closing the mouths of American citi-

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION LABEL COUNCIL SAN FRANCISCO

WEDNESDAY, JULY 27, 1921.

LIGHT WHERE IT IS NEEDED

Due to the fact that there has arisen some doubt as to the purposes and policies of the proposed federation of marine transport workers on the Pacific Coast, a little enlightenment on this subject will not be amiss at this time.

The purpose of the Marine Transport Workers is to have the various unions engaged in the marine transport industry affiliate into federations in every port along somewhat similar lines to the organization of the Waterfront Federation of San Francisco, with headquarters in a port selected by the combined federations.

The initial step was taken in San Pedro by sailors and longshoremen who felt the urge for greater solidarity among the port workers. Resolutions were passed and committees were appointed by both unions in that port, followed by like action at San Francisco and Seattle.

In preparing a policy to govern the organization, the committees at San Francisco considered a number of new and progressive propositions, among which was the necessity for regulation of the agreements which might be entered into by any one of the affiliated unions. It was understood that "Whatever agreements may be entered into between affiliated unions and their employers shall be put into operation and expire simultaneously, and that they must be approved by the federation at its headquarters."

A transfer system provides that "A member of one union affiliated with the federation desiring to work under the jurisdiction of another union affiliated with the Federation shall be entitled to transfer from one union to another without payment of initiation fee," provided, of course, that the member was in good standing on the books of his respective organization at the time of desired transfer.

A working card for members of all unions affiliated with the Federation to be issued and presented by the members on the job at request.

Owing to the misunderstanding and action of the Seattle Committee, several minor details will require straightening out before submission of the plan can be made. In the meantime, for the benefit of all concerned, the intent is not a union but a federation of unions already established and operating in the marine transport industry.

SET SAIL AGAIN

Last spring we nervously watched the threatening clouds and prepared to meet the shock of coming storm. Our fine weather canvas was furled and gear made clear for running.

The gale struck us in all its fury, from all directions at once, and it turned out to be a veritable cyclone.

One after another, the lighter sails have been carried away and we find ourselves amidst tempestuous seas riding out the gale under short canvas.

But the maintopsail still stands and the good old ship "Sailors' Union" rides out the gale staunch as ever, defiant of hostile elements. The battering has only served to make our crew more wary and determined to reach the goal for which we set out the "Brotherhood of the Sea."

Our faces are set to the final destination, and notwithstanding squall after squall from every quarter we shall continue to weather the gale until calmer seas furnish us an opportunity to set on full sail again.

Under shortened canvas, for a time it may be necessary for us to feel our way, but it depends upon the conduct of the crew as to what shall constitute the period of restricted navigation.

There may be some who might entertain thoughts of deserting the ship; there may be others who incline to shirk the discomforts or sacrifices required in duty well performed, but the great majority of the crew are made of that stern material that does not know what evasion or quitting means. These men will continue on clearing away the ribbons from the yards, repairing the damage and preparing the ship for future and more glorious conquests.

It is up to every one of us to look deep into our consciences and see in which class of seamen we find ourselves. To desert the ship is cowardly, to evade our duties and responsibilities is contemptible; but to set our teeth to the elements and struggle on, no matter what the odds, is glorious, worthy of seamen and the traditions of our calling.

Shake a leg there, comrades, and let us get down to fast sailing again; the good old ship is as seaworthy as ever.

OBTAINING RESULTS

While we are informed that the Japanese lines are getting the cream of the grain trade from the Columbia river to the exclusion of ships of all other nations, the following item in the shipping news is significant:

"Functioning of the new navigation law of Australia, which prohibits foreign vessels not paying the same wages and maintaining the same equipment as Australian ships from engaging in the coastwise trade of Australia, has seriously affected the operations of two Japanese lines. The Osaka Shosen Kaisha and the Nippon Yusen Kaisha state that there is not enough remuneration derived from Australia's coastwise trade to prompt the Japanese lines to meet these requirements, according to Sydney advices. The Japanese lines have been receiving a fair share of the coastwise transportation of coal and fruits between New Zealand ports and Sydney and Melbourne."

The manner in which the Australians solve the Asiatic problem is somewhat different to our own. While we fill and back, threaten and equivocate, the Australians make no fuss, but use direct action.

Recently we were informed of an Australian naval vessel rounding up a colony of Asiatics—which had settled in one of the provinces—and transferring them by main force back to the land of their birth. In this manner they get results.

SHIPOWNERS SQUEAL

The American shipowner is perfectly satisfied to take the best of it in any shady deal wherein the Government or the other party are the victims, but when he is on the short end himself he emits a squeal like a dying porker. The shipping news columns of a San Francisco paper recently carried information to the effect that:

"Charges have been laid before the United States Government by American shipmasters that the system of graft prevailing in South American and other foreign ports in the customs and quarantine services is now practiced on such a large scale that shipowners stand to lose thousands of dollars annually.

"The complaints state that the practice of forcing gratuities has increased heavily during the last few months. Officials of the board have intimated that the charges would be taken up with Washington and that efforts would be made to stop these annoyances.

"Gratuities at the ports complained of run all the way from tobacco to a hundred dollars, according to a report made by one captain, who stated that a three months' cruise in and out of these ports had cost nearly $250.

"Attempts to evade the 'graft' result disastrously for the offender. A master of a ship may 'get by' on one voyage, but his ship is marked and he suffers upon his next arrival.

"This system of graft in the ports named always existed, the complaint states, and it is useless for a few American shipmasters suffering from this system to try and rectify it.

"Methods for extorting money from shipmasters are varied, according to the complaint. If you leave a member of the crew behind to go from one Argentine port to another you are liable to a fine of $1000. If you bring a stowaway into the country you deposit $1000.

"Some of the ports complained of are Havana, Cuba; Bahia, Brazil; Rio Janeiro, Montevideo, Buenos Ayres, Rosario, Port Leixoes and Lisbon, Portugal."

The name of Sing Sing, in Westchester county, New York, where the best known penitentiary in the United States is located, was first settled about 1700, taking its name from the Sin Sinck Indians. In 1906 the name was changed from Sing Sing to Ossining.

During the busiest season of the year unemployment in the United States is of alarming proportion, with evidence suggesting that big business is satisfied to aggravate the situation.

There are approximately four million jobless workers, with every prospect of this vast army growing to the ten million mark before next spring.

It is unfortunate that the country has not one statesman with the necessary courage and breadth of vision to meet this emergency. The American Federation of Labor seems to have even lost the power to suggest remedial action, and none has been attempted.

We can only hope that before disaster overtakes us somebody will see the light, because hungry men are sometimes dangerous to the established order of things social.

From the manner in which the press is giving publicity to alleged proposals for conduct of a general strike in this city, we are compelled to entertain the thought that there is a Senegambian in the woodpile somewhere.

It is against all rule and precedent for the Associated Press to give even a line to any matter which would benefit the workers.

In this instance the employers must be obsessed with the belief that their tracks are well covered.

The trade union is a standing challenge to that miserable old cynicism, "Every man for himself, and the devil take the hindmost."

SHIPS AND "AMERICAN PLAN"

With bullheaded persistency the operators of steamship lines endeavor to destroy the seafarers' organizations, but the price of their obstinate efforts is slowly and surely becoming evident. Ships are deteriorating to such a degree that breakdowns have become the general rule instead of the exception; while the antics performed by some of the nondescripts composing non-union crews reveals elements of discomfort and danger to passengers which will not be tolerated for any extended period of time.

The following items from the daily press reveal the operations of passenger vessels under the American plan:

With one boiler entirely disabled, the Matson Navigation Company's liner "Hawkeye State," 22,000 tons, limped into Los Angeles harbor twelve days overdue, with many of the passengers sick on account of drinking salt water.

According to Robert Burns, Boston attorney, one of the passengers, the ship was officered mainly by college students who were hired during the marine strike.

The first assistant engineer, according to Burns, was a former boxer from Seattle; the second assistant engineer, a law student at the University of California, and the third assistant engineer, a medical student from Boston.

Burns said he was trying to get to Los Angeles for the Elks' convention, which ended a week ago.

At Gatun Lake, in the Panama Canal, the boilers became filled with salt water. When the "Hawkeye State" had worked northward as far as Salina Cruz, two of the boilers went out of commission. The ship drifted at a speed of about one knot per hour, according to Burns, and ran ashore near Salina Cruz.

The crew then struck, and demanded $5 each before they would return to work, Burns said.

Sixty-two of the four hundred passengers were booked for Los Angeles, but many of the others came ashore here, preferring to travel for the balance of the journey to San Francisco by rail.

When the supply of fresh water ran out, passengers disembarking here declared, salt water was boiled and used as a substitute. Many cases, none of them fatal, developed.

The crew is said to be composed of three hundred non-union men.

Yo Ho for a trip aboard an American ship under the "American Plan."

It's some experience, says Captain Wm. M. Gill of the San Francisco fire department.

Captain Gill recently took a trip to Seattle on the "Admiral Farragut" of the Pacific Steamship Co.

The captain wanted to sell some fire engines at the northern city. He represents the J. H. Lashbrooke Co., fire engine dealers.

Said the captain, after returning from Seattle—by rail:

"Only wish I could uncouple a section of the fire hose I was taking to Seattle while I was aboard that ship and hose down the decks. They weren't washed during all the time of the trip.

"When we hit the rollers outside The Heads July 7 the green crew of stewards disappeared. They were sick, deathly sick. Didn't show for the rest of the trip.

"We made our own beds, waited on ourselves at table and took care of our rooms.

"Some parts of the decks were filthy. Some of the passengers never reached the rail when they became seasick. No effort was made by the crew of the vessel to clean the littered decks.

"Detectives employed by the company were continually snooping around among the passengers to hear what they could hear.

"I made a successful business trip to Seattle; glad I went. But I came back by rail. No more sea trips for me under the American Plan.

"Imagine what would happen in a time of panic or peril with the lives of passengers dependent upon the efforts of those boys. Why, they didn't know a lifeboat from a fire hose."

The foregoing reveals a serious state existing under the fine weather conditions of the summer months. What can be expected when winter sets in and Old Ocean assumes its angry mood again!

Operating vessels with inexperienced crews is neither practical or profitable, but the shipowners seem determined in their efforts to destroy the unions, no matter at what cost. How blind their vision and vain their efforts the near future will reveal.

LOCKOUT AFFECTS CANAL

Commercial traffic through the Panama Canal during June was the lowest in tonnage and tolls collected for any month in the last fiscal year, according to a report from the Panama Canal office.

The number of commercial vessels was 193, compared with 210 in the preceding month and 201 in June, 1920, while tolls collected were $71,967, against $835,900 in May and $711,268 in the preceding June.

Despite the falling off in traffic during the last three months, however, the tolls for the year amounted to $11,276,899, against $8,513,933 for the year preceding.

CASES OF INTEREST TO SEAMEN

Frederick R. Graves, 256-257 Broadway, New York City, an Admiralty Lawyer specializing in seamen's actions, has won two important points in the Courts recently, and believing that they are of unusual interest to seamen, he has written in sketchy fashion the signficance of these two decisions:

Case No. 1

In Noe vs. United States Shipping Board Emergency fleet Corporation and France and Canada Steamship Corporation, a seaman sued the United States Shipping Board and the private steamship company jointly, as owners and operators of the steamship "Polar Star." The action was for damages and was brought on the theory that the vessel was unseaworthy because there was no combing, guard or protection around the hatchway, thus causing the plaintiff to fall through the opening and sustain severe personal injuries. The defendants pleaded that the Supreme Court of Kings County, in the State of New York, had no jurisdiction to hear the cause. They argued that a suit against the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation was, in effect, a suit against the United States, because the governmental agency was instituted for public purposes. The Trial Court dismissed the complaint on the defendant's motion.

The Appellate Division held that this dismissal constituted reversible error and granted a new trial. The Court adopted Mr. Graves' contentions, namely: (1) That the complaint stated a good cause of action; (2) that on the authority of United States vs. Strang (decided February 1, 1921, by the United States Supreme Court), the United States was a separate and distinct entity and that is agents and agencies were not immune from suit when they were acting in a private capacity, such as the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation was at the time it chartered the steamship "Polar Star" to the private company. This victory is especially enhanced by the fact that counsel for the seamen was opposed by the draftsmen of the Act, which created the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation. Notwithstanding this fact, he was not able to convince the Appellate Court that his view should be accepted.

The far-reaching effect of this decision will be to compel the State Trial Courts to take jurisdiction of all causes of action brought against the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation for injuries sustained by reason of the unseaworthiness of Government-owned ships, operated by private steamship companies.

Case No. 2

Judge Frank Cooper, sitting in the Federal Court for the Eastern District of New York, charged a jury in Goldsmid vs. Luckenbach Steamship Company that the Federal Employers' Liability Act applied to seamen as well as railroad employes and that the jury's verdict should be according to the terms of this law. This is the first case on record in which a seaman has invoked Section 20 of the Jones Act of June 5, 1920, amending Section 20 of the Seamen's Act of March 5, 1915.

The plaintiff in this action was injured by falling through a defective floor-plate in the engine room of the Steamship "Hattie Luckenbach." The counsel for the steamship company argued quite stoutly that the injury was caused by the fault of a fellow servant and that, on this account, the common law rule of Chelentis vs. Luckenbach, etc., was controlling, and, therefore, that the steamship company was free from liability.

Mr. Graves, however, satisfied the Court that the purpose of Section 20 of the Jones Act of June 5, 1920, was to change the common law rule, which had so militated against the interests and welfare of injured seamen. Congress was prompted by sound public policy when it endeavored to legislate in alleviation of the legal plight in which seamen found themselves to be after the decision in the Chelentis case. The attorneys for the steamship company, at first, asked for a new trial and wanted to file a brief against the constitutionality of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, as applied to seamen. After their allotted time had expired, however, the attorneys for the steamship company withdrew their objection and consented to pay the judgment without leave to appeal. The consequence of this decision is that a seaman has a precedent which he can cite to his advantage when hurt by the unseaworthiness of a ship or the fault of a fellow servant on a ship. In either case, the steamship owners are liable.

TIMES HAVE CHANGED

Editor THE SEAMENS' JOURNAL:

Do you remember the time when a new and terrifying invention was used for the purpose of killing man—when a little devil called submarine was cruising the seas? Do you remember the dark nights, when the ship, with all lights out for fear of the little devil, was stealing over the seas? Do you remember when every uncommon sound set our hearts up in our throats? We need not be ashamed of those temporary apprehensions. The bravest man sometimes fears a danger he knows is there, but cannot see. And we down in the fire and engine room, the very spot the little devil was aiming at! Were we afraid? Oh, yes, a little. But did we run from our posts? Nothing doing!

Oh, yes, we remember, we were called brave men and pointed out as heroes at that time. But what are we today? We are pointed at as a bunch of criminals, as destroyers of the American Merchant Marine. The same men who called us brave have no use for us today. They have thrown us out on the street, down in the gutter, to starvation; not only us, but our wives and children or a dear old mother or sister who are dependent upon our wages. Still they have the nerve to say: "If the workers would be submissive, there would be plenty of work."

Do you feel very friendly, comrades?

It is time we wake up; it is time we do something; it is time we use our common sense.

The American Merchant Marine is headed straight for hell, says Mr. Edgar Pennington Young, publisher of The Marine Journal. Yes, but the seamen are put in the hottest corner. It is up to us to get out of the hot corner before we perish. We have always been looking up to our leaders, expecting them to think for us, to speak for us and to act for us. We have to stop that and use our own brains and judgment. We did not get the support expected from the American Federation of Labor and our own international failed to meet the situation. Think this over and remember we are spending money on them to no use. We have a free hand today. We can do what we think is best.

Our only chance, our only safeguard, in the future, not only to us, but to all transport workers, is an amalgamation or federation of all seafaring men, longshoremen, harbormen, etc.

However, we have to start over again; but let us start right; don't let us make any more mistakes; let us take advantage of whatever we learned during the last fight and never forget that ship owners have millions of dollars, the Government and the opportunity to make the law operate in their interests only.

FRED HOLTZBERG,
Brooklyn.

A NATIONAL CALAMITY

Those seamen who have sailed out of English ports can appreciate the conditions under which the population of that country are now living. Following war, reconstruction, getting back to normalcy and its attendant industrial chaos, the country is now suffering from a severe shortage of water.

According to recent press dispatches, not for a century has there been such a drought throughout the British Isles as has now prevailed for months. Manchester, which is largely dependent for its water supply on England's Lake District, has only eighty-six days' water reserve. All municipalities are being cautioned to waste no water. From John O'Groats to Land's End the United Kingdom is like a parched Texas prairie.

The neckwaters of the Thames are now only shallow streams. Londoners have been requested to take baths in only an inch of water.

If the drought continues it may also have the effect of curtailing the output of beer. This in itself is adding to the average man's worries.

Golf courses throughout the country have been burned to a crisp during the recent rainless months. Cattle in the Highlands and Midlands are suffering from depleted water supplies. All the crops are affected seriously by the protracted drought.

England has been almost rainless, except for a few showers, since the middle of January.

Government and the employing class would have no hesitation in resorting to the underpaid labor of the German workpeople in order, if possible, to break the power of the workers in an industrial dispute in Great Britain. This we now see has actually transpired. Speaking for myself, I offer the most emphatic protest against those Unions, and especially the officials of those Unions which refused to assist the Federation in its policy of boycotting foreign coal. There are those who would desire to utilize the Federation when it suits their purpose, but who are keen to repudiate their responsibility to the Federation if and when they consider it entails any personal risk to themselves or to their own organization. We are entitled to expect the same measure of loyalty from the affiliated Unions as those Unions themselves expect from their officials and members.

Sympathetic strikes and stoppages on a large scale can never be effective unless and until the Federation has vested in its Executive Council more power to instruct its various sections to take any action deemed desirable. Loosely-knit federations have undoubtedly served a useful purpose, but the time has gone by when we can any longer rely upon scratch resolutions and instructions being made effective.

The Federation and the National Union of Railwaymen, while realizing that material help has been contributed to the Miners' Federation in the blockade policy, have been compelled to terminate this policy for reasons which will appear in the Executive Council's report.

Despite the tremendous and still growing volume of unemployment, the membership of the Federation has not appreciably declined. On the contrary, it shows a slight increase. This indicates that the membership of the various unions are realizing the need for maintaining their organization in present-day conditions, and the strength of the various unions reflects great credit upon them.

An amalgamation movement is now in process of complete fruition, and the Executive Council will report to you their intention to ask power to widen the scope of Federation activities. I trust that before we assemble again as an annual general council the number of unions in our industry will be considerably reduced in consequence of the process of fusion and amalgamation.

We have been compelled to witness a regrettable dispute affecting one section of seagoing workers. In this instance the Federation was not the negotiating body nor did it have any voice in determining the details or method of settling wage reductions. Two unions inside the Federation had agreed upon certain prescribed wage reductions. The third refused, and made a brave fight to resist the reductions, but ultimately the executive of this organization was compelled to declare the strike at an end and to order a resumption of work upon the terms accepted by the other two unions. Here I make a personal appeal to the delegates to determine as far as can be determined their own problems as affecting a section in its entirety. For one union in a section to resist proposals when two others have accepted shows clearly that infinitely better results could have been achieved by co-operation either independently of or through the medium of the Federation.

The Executive Council has had under review for a long period a union which has acted with the basest ingratitude and disloyalty to the Federation and to the constituent unions of the section concerned. This is the United Road Transport Workers' Association. In consequence of their action, the Executive Council had no other course than to expel them from the Federation. I hope that by excluding the organization from the Federation we are not excluding the members, and that the process already in operation of transferring them into other affiliated unions will be accelerated.

The time ahead of us will be a serious one. While we were recording one advance after another in the years 1916, 1917, 1918 and 1919, and even 1920, our members were enthusiastic in their confidence in us. All that we did on their behalf was applauded on all hands, but the immediate future will be a testing time for them as well as for us, and I sincerely hope that they will devote far more attention to their trades union activities than has unfortunately been the case in times past, when negotiations were more easy. We may have to give ground in accepting reductions in wages as the cost of living shows evidence of a decline, but my fervent hope is that we shall give ground as an organized force, keeping our formation intact, and maintaining the loyal co-operation of our members in order to prevent us showing divided forces to the employers when we meet them from time to time. It is as true to say today as ever before, that the employers and their representatives in the Government will give us no more than we compel them to give.

The Government which sent its delegates to the Washington Convention have refused to introduce legislation to provide for an eight-hour day. They have broken the promises they made during the war to make the conditions of life for the toiling masses materially better than they were in the pre-war period. Organized labor will be well advised to rely more and more upon its own courage and capacity than in the pious phrases and promises of capitalist politicians. No Union and no Federation of Unions can do any more than the members collectively can compel.

Two years ago one might have looked forward to a period of social betterment, but those who told us again and again during the war that blood was being shed to make the world safe for democracy are now clearly revealing their intention of making the world safe for our organized plutocracy. My advice to all those here assembled is to throw themselves into the work of consolidating and reorganizing all the forces of labor, including those of the Federation. Critics we shall have, but critics are helpful when their criticism is well informed. Pugnacity in our members is an advantage when it is well directed. Audacity is useful when audacious schemes are solidly conceived and can be deemed to carry us in a progressive direction. Loyalty and co-operation between members and officials alike is as necessary today as ever, and I trust that your deliberations here in Edinburgh will bring good results to those you represent in particular and to the working class movement in general.

MEN OF LABOR, ONWARD!

With the approach of Labor Day it is necessary that there be a stock-taking and a making of plans for the future work of our labor movement.

American labor, on its day of celebration and commemoration this year, must give to the world a message of hope, of courage, of determination and of constructive thought.

The forces of destruction and of reaction have made every possible onslaught. They have sought to disrupt, to tear down, to despoil, to imprison, to corrupt. They have sought to injure and destroy by economic might, by the passage of hurtful laws, by the abuse of injunctions, by the manipulation of wealth and by the use of that portion of the public press which customarily lends itself to the uses of the unprincipled.

The trade union movement has stood like a rock through the storm. No assault of reaction at any period of history was ever more successfully withstood. No body of men and women anywhere at any time ever manifested a sterner spirit or stood more unitedly than the American trade union movement in the face of the hostile attitude of aggressive and ruthless organizations of employers, bent upon breaking down the organizations of the wage-earners.

Our movement has now reached the point in the struggle where it is not enough to stand firm in resistance. We have resisted at every point until the drive of the labor-hating opposition has been brought to a point where it is without initiative, without enthusiasm, without what may be called driving power. This does not mean that it is not still a menace. It is a menace as long as it exists, and it remains a menace which cannot be lost sight of for a moment. But it has for the present been beaten out of its initial momentum by the tremendous effort of the trade union movement.

The time has come for Labor to assume the aggressive. We have held the line. Our positions are intact. It is the hour for a great forward movement. With a unity such as our movement has never excelled, with a spirit of determination unequalled, let us face the future prepared to take advantage of every opportunity which the future offers.

The labor movement predicates the success of every effort upon the righteousness of its position and on the strength of its organization. The principles of our movement have been tried and found true. The great need of the day is organization and more organization—more unity and solidarity. The necessity of trade unionism—always a necessity and hope of deliverance—must be carried to the unorganized everywhere.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Enslaving the Miners

If you are a coal miner in a non-union mining district in West Virginia, your relation to the mine operator is the relation of the most servile of bondmen to its master. If the operator finds that you have joined a union he dismisses you—not merely from your job, but from the place you foolishly called your home. His gunmen come, on three days' notice, and throw you and your family and your few belongings out of the company shanty, upon which you have paid the two weeks' rent. They call it "delivering you to the outside."

C. F. Keeney, president of District 17 of the United Mine Workers of America, and W. E. Hutchinson, organizer in Mingo county, told the Senate Committee investigating the Mingo strike all about this eviction feature at recent hearings. They had both been evicted for having joined the union. Thousands of others in the same region had paid the same penalty for daring to stand up and declare their manhood.

"You see, Senators," smoothly explained Attorney Avis, for the Mingo County Operators' Association, "our West Virginia Courts have decided that the relation of the miner to the company is that of servant to master, and not the relation of tenant to landlord, even though a definite rent is paid to the company for the house. It is just as though you, Senator, should dismiss a domestic servant and order her to vacate her room in your own house."

Senator Kenyon, presiding, got the idea. But he did not seem to like it. After a while he asked about the issue in the West Virginia struggle.

"It seems to be an issue of the right of the miners to belong to a union," he said. "That's it, isn't it? The miners insist that they have the right to belong to the union, and the companies refuse to employ them or permit them to stay in company houses if they join?"

Counsel agreed, and the witness agreed, that that was the issue.

Kenyon of Iowa, Sterling of South Dakota, Shortridge of California, McKellar of Tennessee and Caraway of Arkansas comprise the committee. Sterling and Shortridge, at least, are anti-labor. Kenyon and Caraway are not, apparently, prejudiced against the miners. In the hearing room sit Mother Jones and T. V. Powderly, once head of the Knights of Labor, listening eagerly. Keeney and Fred Mooney, secretary-treasurer of District 17, with Sid Hatfield of Matewan and other stalwarts of the union ranks, sit with their lawyers, Houston and Birkenshaw. Across the room are bunched seven or eight lawyers and mine officials, eagerly whispering over the moves to be made in defense of West Virginia mine despotism.

Vicious Practices Exposed

R. H. Kirkpatrick, a dark, slender mountaineer, takes the stand and confesses to his part in a frame-up against the strikers, arranged by the superintendent of the Burnwell Coal & Coke Co. last January. He tells the story so simply that it carries conviction of truth. He says that the superintendent, who was worried because their little band of strikebreaking foreigners had become unruly, called him to the office and told him that a "stunt must be pulled off." He proposed to send a man up the mountain side, to shoot down toward the mine mouth. The foreman was to be at the mine and return the fire from a rifle. Then the superintendent, with one or two other men in the scheme, were to make a brave show of going right up the mountain to drive out the attacking party. Of course, nobody was to get hurt. The shooting would be understood to be an attack by strikers, and would bring back the Federal soldiers and thereby restore the foreign scabs to obedience, and would help to break the strike.

Kirkpatrick swore that the plan was duly carried out; the foreigners being greatly impressed with the rifle battle and the quick return of the soldiers. A lot of ammunition was used up in the hour of shooting. Later, however, the superintendent dismissed him, and the foreman decided to tell the truth about the "battle."

The Senators were much amused by this ray of light upon the real situation back of the newspaper accounts of "attacks in force" upon the coal towns by "armed mountaineers."

Miners Seeking Justice

Keeney read his latest proposal, sent to Governor Morgan on July 11, 1921, for a possible settlement of the Mingo strike.

His terms were that all the miners be returned to their jobs without discrimination; that the eight-hour day be recognized; that the semi-monthly pay-day and the right of the miners to trade in whatever store they pleased be granted; that a check-weigher be allowed the men, and a 2000-pound ton be recognized; that a joint committee be established to settle local differences, with a board of arbitration for all disputes which the committee failed to adjust.

The operators made no comment upon this or any of his many earlier proposals, beyond saying that they had "nothing to arbitrate."

The Mingo strike arose from the fact that the miners suddenly decided to form unions, to protect themselves against robbery at the operators' hands. The companies dismissed more than 2700 of them for joining the United Mine Workers, and then the union called out 3000 who had joined and had not yet been dismissed. The reason for the sudden decision to organize was the refusal of the Mingo operators to pay the wage increase ordered by the President's Bituminous Coal Commission after the 1919 strike—an increase of 27 per cent. The Mingo operators granted only 5 to 10 per cent increase in pay. Moreover, they took even this raise away from the men by raising prices 5 to 20 per cent at the company stores.

"Any man who tried to trade at the outside stores, where prices were very much less, was changed to a worse place in the mine, where he could not earn so much," said Hutchinson. "For years, I got only from $5 to $20 actual money every two weeks for myself and wife and two children, after my store bill was taken out."

One Vinson, opening the testimony for the operators, made a wild speech against the United Mine Workers, claiming that the union had undertaken to seize and confiscate the coal mines of the Nation. Kenyon tried to pin him down to proof, but he was too hot and fanatically anti-labor to do more than point to the demand of the union for the "full social value of the product" as being a demand for confiscation of the mines.

The Senators are unwilling to go to West Virginia for any testimony or investigation that can be had here at the capital. However, they will visit Mingo county when the necessity arises.

The Worst Expected

Whether the good results achieved eight years ago in the case of the Cabin creek coal war will be duplicated this year for Mingo county is open to doubt. This is not a year in which organized labor is respected by our politicians. The present administration is anti-labor to an extreme degree. President Harding is about to appoint one George McClintic, a notorious corporation tool, to the Federal Bench in West Virginia, in defiance of the protest of organized labor, the organized farmers, numerous civic organizations and decent citizens. The United States Senate will confirm the appointment. In this environment a helpful investigation of industrial autocracy and terrorism in West Virginia has little chance. The most that can be expected is that the Senate will again show the country that labor must send its own spokesmen to the National Legislature and to the executive and judicial branches of the Government.

Machinists Head Returns

Aside from the Mingo hearings, the labor event of the week here is the return of William H. Johnston of the Machinists from Europe, with unchanged mind on the subject of Russia's need for American trade. He was excluded from Russia, through some mistake in policy at Moscow, but he was not embittered on that account. He found all of Europe suffering from the industrial depression and organized labor anxious for genuine peace and disarmament and reconciliation which will permit of a restoration of trade across all frontiers.

Johnston is in great demand as a speaker, since he has made a study of the tendencies in the British and German labor movements and their apparent drift back toward parliamentary and industrial methods of agitation.

MEDITATION!

Men of the sea in numerous crowds
Are walking now down at the "Fronts";
Their horizon seems to be darkened by clouds
And words of protest are passing their mouths,
As the weeks now turn into months.

They were compelled to leave the ship,
Not willing to crawl to such terms
Imposed on them as the master saw fit,
Taking their rights away, bit by bit,
Making them slaves in return.

But don't be hasty, you men of the world,
For the sky's not as dark as it seems.
The storm is naught but a passing squall,
The fortified castle is soon bound to fall;
You can then build your shattered dreams.

F. HARMS.

MEN OF LABOR, ONWARD!

tion of Labor, both those who give their full time to the work and those who serve as volunteers, the officers of national and international unions, of State federations, city central bodies and local unions, have ever been faithful and self-sacrificing; but the movement calls upon them for redoubled effort, for a greater consecration to the work and for a more energetic deliverance of the message of organized labor.

In addition it should be considered the sacred duty of every individual member of the trade union movement, every member of the great rank and file, to constitute himself an untiring organizer of men and women for the great tasks that lie ahead.

Labor Day this year should be made a red-letter day in the history of organization work. Upon that day our movement everywhere should so conduct itself as to compel for its ideals and its practical purposes the attention of all wage-earners. The observance of Labor's great holiday should be so ordered in every community as to drive home the message of trade unionism and to carry to all hearts and minds the thought that the organized labor movement is the great movement of workers for human freedom and progress.

The trade union movement is dedicated to the proposition that autocratic control of industry must be destroyed in order that there may be a full development of human freedom, and in order that all men and women may have a voice in the determination of their destiny.

This is a purpose worthy of the best effort of a great wage-earning population. It is an ideal to fire the souls of men. It is the great task of the labor movement.

This task, this great constructive effort for human freedom, can be accomplished only as the workers organize. Democracy enters into modern industry only through the organization of the workers. Autocratic control, with all of its brutality and injustice, remain in full flower where there is no organization of labor.

The greatest contribution which the members of our movement can make today to the cause of human progress is the unrestrained giving of effort in the work of organization.

Set Labor Day as the day upon which our great effort is to begin. Set Labor Day as the day upon which we cease holding the line and begin to move forward in a great resistless wave. Upon that day let there be demonstrations, let there be great gatherings of the workers. Let there be inspiring public addresses and distribution of the literature of our movement. Let there be everywhere enthusiastic celebration of Labor Day. In those communities where lately there has been an abandonment of Labor Day demonstrations, let there be a revival of them. Let there be a full utilization of every proper means of carrying to the great masses of our wage-earners the necessity of trade unionism, and from that day on let the work of organization go on with such a vigor, such an intensity and such an inspired purpose as our movement has never known.

It is the hour for action. Rally the forces of labor everywhere for the great forward movement. Bend every energy to the work of organization.

Through organization our movement will achieve every good purpose, and through organization will be defeated every selfish, greedy and undemocratic purpose or reaction.

The voices of the defenseless call upon us. The eyes of the downtrodden are turned toward us. The tide of progress waits upon our effort.

Men of Labor, be up and doing! Organize the unorganized. Unite and federate the organized in solid phalanx. Men of Labor, be up and doing! March forward and upward to the goal of justice, freedom and humanity!—Samuel Gompers, in the American Federationist.

"BERTIE MINOR" WRECKED

The schooner "Bertie Minor," from Makambo for San Francisco, was picked up at sea in a leaking condition and towed into Vila, New Hebrides, by the steamer "Makambo." The vessel arrived at the New Hebrides port prior to May 9 and the delayed message was just received here recently from Melbourne when the captain of the "Makambo" made his report.

When taken in tow, the schooner's pumps had broken down and part of her cargo had been jettisoned to keep her from foundering. The vessel was leaking, and the remainder of her cargo of copra will have to be discharged.

The "Bertie Minor" sailed from Makambo for San Francisco on April 4.

zens, whether civilian or public officer, is not good business in a free country. Repression has profited nothing in any age or in any country, but on the contrary it has fomented rebellion, inflamed radicalism and embittered the liberal."

Refuse Wage Cut

Federal Judge Alschuler, arbitrator in the meat packing industry, has refused the packers' demand for a horizontal wage cut of 5 cents an hour. Approximately 100,000 workers are affected by the decision. The arbitrator held that reductions in the cost of living are not as pronounced as employers claim, and in some instances there has been no decline. Taxes, he said, are constantly mounting, street car fares remain 60 per cent above pre-war prices, while gas, electricity and fuel continue at high rates.

"Newspapers, a most general necessity, remain at the highest point, from 100 to 200 per cent above 1914 prices," he said. Among other costs which have not started to decline, the arbitrator named rents, telephone and telegraph service, freight and passenger rates, while such essential foods as milk, bread and bakery products, fruits and meats show only slight decreases.

The Kansas Trades Unionist observes that business men were amused when wage workers were caught in the toils of Allen's kangaroo court, but these business men have changed their tune. The president of the Southwest Coal Operators' Association at Pittsburg, told Allen's "can't-strike" court that the Governor is chiefly responsible for the demoralized condition of the coal industry.

Labor News

Machinists at Peoria, Ill., have secured a satisfactory adjustment of their strike in commercial shops.

The Philippine Labor Congress has voted to invite Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, to visit the Philippines, should he go to Japan.

At New Orleans the Saenger theaters have locked out organized musicians who refused to abrogate a contract and accept a 20 per cent wage reduction.

The Denver Street Car Company has rewarded its "free and independents" by slashing wages. These employes broke the recent strike of street car men who resisted wage cuts.

The Illinois State Legislature refused to pass a full crew bill, urged by trade unions and the railroad brotherhoods as a safety measure of interest both to trainmen and the traveling public.

Boston.—Coopers employed by the American Stave and Cooperage Company are striking against wage reductions. The shop is controlled by the Lucas E. Moore Stave Company and has large interests in southern States.

Loaded with inexperienced men, the barkentine "Anne Comyn" developed a decided list and it was necessary to discharge 180,000 feet of lumber and reload before the vessel could leave the Everett mills for San Pedro.

At Los Angeles, Cal., thirteen motion picture studios have been affected by the strike of their mechanics against an order reducing wages. About 1200 men are now out, according to a statement by representatives of producers.

Victor Andrews, owner and editor of the Houston Labor Journal, was found in a semi-conscious condition on the seawall at Galveston, Texas. His condition is reported as serious. He is thought to have been attacked and robbed, according to the police.

Searching investigations and several arrests have resulted from the deportation of a number of Japanese from Turlock, Cal., by the white melon pickers working in the district. The raid came as a climax to a period of friction between Mongolian and white workers.

Longshoremen of the Columbia River ports are considering the acceptance of proposed reductions in wages from 90 to 80 cents per hour for straight time and from $1.35 to $1.20 per hour for overtime. Such reduction was previously agreed to by longshoremen of the ports on Puget Sound.

Employing printers of St. Paul, Minn., decline to act on the Governor's suggestion that differences over the forty-four-hour week be arbitrated. The State has created machinery to adjust industrial disputes, but the employers and their secret backers will not accept this peace plan.

Hope for a settlement of the deadlock between Washington coal miners and operators which last March resulted in the closing down of twenty-nine commercial mines in the State, was abandoned by both sides when operators mailed notices to striking miners asking them to vacate on or before August 31 houses leased from the companies or standing on ground owned by the companies.

World's Workers

According to recent messages from Dusseldorf, Germany, coal miners throughout the Ruhr district have gone on strike. One of the demands of the strikers is for abolition of the coal tariff agreement. The strike of the laborers employed on lands controlled by the municipality of Berlin, in progress for some time, is threatening to develop into a general strike of all the municipal workers in support of the agricultural laborers. Their leaders say that partial returns of a vote show there will be a two-thirds majority for a strike. The Communist organ, the Red Flag, declares that, so far as the electric and tramway workers are concerned, the two-thirds majority already has been exceeded.

The eight-hour day and forty-eight-hour week are established by law in Belgium. In a letter to the Ministry of Industry, Labor and Food, the King said: "I have just ratified the hours of employment Act, the result of long discussions in Parliament and of an agrement for which the Chamber and the Senate have made praiseworthy effort of conciliation. The eight-hour day has therefore been won legally. It remains now to win it from an economic point of view." Greater production on the part of the workers and new methods on the part of the employers that Belgium may export to sustain two-thirds of its population. This country can only support one-third of its population, the remainder depending on industry and commerce.

In England, disillusion is the fate of those who believe trade union activity can be supplanted by Government boards that will enforce fair working conditions and a living wage. Apprehension is being felt in labor circles at the apparent lack of official interest in the question of trade boards. Originally instituted to force the sweating employer to toe the line and pay at least a living minimum wage, their arrival was hailed with general satisfaction. The number of boards have steadily increased. Unfortunately there has been a marked hostility on the part of many employers who have adopted every conceivable method of frustrating the beneficial results of the trade board movement. Now, however, it would seem that this hostility, fatal to the badly paid worker in a weak trade union, has spread to the ministry of labor.

A tense situation appears to be developing in Japan between labor on the one hand and the Government and capital on the other. The dispatch of troops to Kobe because of the situation created by the dockyards strike there has inflamed the workers, many of whom at secret meetings in Tokio adopted a preliminary plan to organize Japanese labor into a vast federation, similar to the American Federation of Labor, in defiance of Japanese law, which does not recognize labor unions. It also was decided to inaugurate a strike of 200,000 workers in Tokio unless shorter hours and more wages were granted. The employes in the Government are taking a leading part in the agitation. One thousand employes of the Formosa Sugar Company in Kobe have been dismissed and the plants of the company closed, and another thousand workers in the Dunlop Rubber Factory have gone on strike.

Domestic and Naval

There were 69,960,834 passengers carried by the Municipal Railroad of San Francisco during the past fiscal year. Out of this entire number, but one passenger was killed.

A total of 29,201 aliens were naturalized in June, of whom 6453, or 21 per cent, were Germans. Austrians numbered 4014, Italians 3508, and nationals of Great Britain 3313. The smallest number, nineteen, was from Spain.

Eighty-three days from Mollendo, Peru, the five-masted barkentine "Katherine Mackall" recently arrived at San Francisco in ballast. A part of her bowsprit was gone, the result of being run into by the Japanese freighter "Koyo Maru," while in port at Mollendo.

For a reason not yet reported, the steamer "West Haven" of the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Line, returned to Baltimore recently. She sailed from the same port two days previously, bound for San Francisco, and laden with intercoastal freight.

The steamer "Effingham" of the European Pacific Line, en route from Columbia river to the United Kingdom with a general cargo from Portland, struck the rocky banks of the Columbia river at Stella, Washington, sixteen miles from Portland, and sank. The crew was saved.

The "K-182," an American fishing vessel of Bellingham, has been seized by the Canadian Government steamer "Malaspina," Captain Newcomb. She was found within the three-mile limit of the west coast. Poaching, it is alleged, was taking place. The "Malaspina" brought her prize into Esquimalt harbor. She had given the "Malaspina" a chase of one mile.

While U. S. Shipping Board officials prepared to seize more vessels operated by the U. S. Mail Steamship Company, officials of the firm charged that foreign influences were behind the Government action against it. Led by Elmer Schlessinger, general counsel of the Shipping Board, officials took over the "George Washington," "America," "Susquehanna," "President Grant" and "Agamemnon." The board charges that payments due the board have not been made.

On her last voyage with 160 passengers on board the Admiral Line's steamer Queen, from San Pedro to San Francisco and Seattle, encountered engine trouble 100 miles south of San Francisco. A wireless was sent out by Captain George Zeh, master of the steamer. The Admiral Farragut, also bound north from San Pedro with passengers, responded and took the vessel in tow. The Red Stack tug Sea Monarch was dispatched and towed the Queen into port.

Naval authorities have been advised that the United States Naval Hospital at Yokohama, Japan, maintained for the officers and men of the American Asiatic fleet since 1845, is to be abandoned. The buildings, which are on leased ground, will revert to the Japanese Government, in accordance with a clause in the agreement made at the time the hospital was established. Economy is the reason assigned by the Navy Department for the closing of the Yokohama hospital.

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

SEEKING THE FACTS

Senator La Follette Requests Investigation of Marine Lockout

In an address to the Senate. July 25, 1921, MR. LA FOLLETTE submitted the following resolution, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Senate Resolution 113.

Whereas a controversy has existed since May 1 last, and still exists, between the United States Shipping Board and the men employed upon its ships and between the men and the private owners of American ships, whereby hundreds of ships, including those owned by the Government and those privately owned, and many thousands of men have been made idle; and

Whereas the loss to the owners of the ships as a result of the controversy has amounted to many millions of dollars, and the loss to the men in wages alone has amounted to several million dollars monthly; and

Whereas it is reported that as a result of this controversy, large numbers of American seamen are leaving the sea to follow other pursuits, thus threatening the success of the program for the upbuilding and maintenance of an American merchant marine upon which billions of dollars of the people's money have already been expended; and

Whereas the people of this country, who are the real owners of the ships controlled by the United States Shipping Board, have the right to know fully all the facts respecting this controversy; and

Whereas the settlements recently made of strikes and controversies between seamen and ship owners and operators in Great Britain and other countries have released the full maritime resources of those countries to compete with the disorganized Merchant Marine of this country; and

Whereas the continued disorganization of our Merchant Marine must result in closing foreign markets to our agricultural and other products, except as they may be carried in foreign ships upon terms dictated by foreign rivals, presents a situation which menaces the interests of all classes of our people; and

Whereas grave charges against the integrity and efficiency of the management of the Shipping Board and of the public business and the property committed to its care have been made in the press and in the public debate in the United States Senate; and

Whereas it has been charged in the press and on the authority of responsible men and organizations that in the present controversy the Shipping Board has used its great power in a manner inimical to the men and hostile to organized labor: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof to be appointed by it, is hereby authorized and directed to make a thorough and complete investigation into the controversies above mentioned and the causes thereof, and into the questions of wages and working conditions involved in said controversy, and into the claims and contentions of the respective parties to said controversy and the merits thereof, and into the conditions existing in the marine service of this country on both publicly and privately owned ships; and that said committee thoroughly investigate the methods and practices of said Shipping Board, including its attitude toward marine workers and their organizations, and the agreements, understandings, and relations, if any exist, between the ship owners or operators in the United States, including said Shipping Board, and all associations of ship owners among themselves and with the ship owners or operators or associations thereof in other countries, and any control or attempt to control the shipping interests or business of this country, or any portion thereof, or the regulation thereof, by any foreign interests, concerns, or influences whatsoever, and to report its findings and conclusions thereon to the Senate with all convenient speed.

The said committee is hereby authorized to sit and perform its duties at such times and places as it deems necessary or proper and to require the attendance of witnesses by subpoenas or otherwise, and to require the production of books, papers, and documents, and to employ counsel and other assistance and stenographers at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page. The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses, sign subpoenas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned as a witness before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who fails or refuses to obey the process of said committee or appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation shall be punished as prescribed by law. The expenses of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers of the committee or subcommittee signed by the chairman and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

MR. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, some weeks ago I introduced a resolution in the Senate providing for an investigation of certain practices of the Shipping Board, and of the controversy which has existed since May 1, last, between the marine workers and the various owners and operators of American ships, including the Shipping Board. About that time the Shipping Board was reorganized and its personnel largely changed, and I have waited during the several weeks since to learn whether the plans and policies of the new board promised a solution of the labor controversy, and indicated an abandonment of those practices of the old board, which have been so justly condemned.

The present board has shown that so far as its labor policy is concerned, it is identical with that of its predecessor, and if its purpose is to change any of the vicious practices of the old board, such purpose has not manifested itself in action so far as I have learned.

I have, of course, no purpose to embarrass the present board by the resolution for an investigation which I have offered, nor in anything that I may say upon this subject. It must not be assumed that an investigation such as I propose is in any way hostile to the Shipping Board or its plans or purposes. On the contrary, it should be distinctly helpful to it.

Here is a board of seven men not one of whom, so far as I am aware, ever had any experience in the management of operation of ships or in the business of marine shipping until appointed to his present position. Yet these men are made responsible for the operation of something like 1,400 Government ships, and the disposal of hundreds of others. They are to supervise the construction of ships contracted for, open trade routes, establish trade agencies throughout the world, and generally to build up our maritime commerce.

Of the operation of these ships, Admiral Benson said on April 27, last:

> We are losing money every day, practically on every ship that we are sailing. We have, as you know, at least 50 per cent of the fleet tied up. We are spending millions every month to keep the ships going. The taxpayers of this country today are spending, as near as I can recall the figures, from $14,000,000 to $15,000,000 a month to keep our ships going—what we are running. (Stenographic report furnished by Shipping Board of hearing on wage reduction of seamen, pp. 48, 49.)

Probably $4,000,000,000 of the people's money have already gone into this enterprise, and hundreds of millions, and probably billions, more will be spent under the direction of this board. (See statement of former Commissioner Joseph N. Teal, Congressional Record, March 3, 1921, p. 4678.) All this vast enterprise is taken over by the Shipping Board in a condition of almost hopeless confusion and disorganization. Under these circumstances, whatever information can be obtained by an investigation of the entire subject certainly ought to be welcomed by every person who wishes to see the Shipping Board succeed in the gigantic task which has been assigned to it.

But more than this. There are two charges which have been constantly made against the Shipping Board almost from the time of its organization down to the present moment. One is that British influences have shaped or influenced the shipping policies of our Merchant Marine, and the other is that the Shipping Board has been hostile to the labor organizations of the sea. If these charges, or either of them, have any basis in fact, then the facts ought to be fully known and the situation properly dealt with. If neither of these charges are true, that fact should be established, and the Shipping Board freed from the suspicion entertained by millions of our people today that its policies are un-American and can never result in building up a genuine American Merchant Marine.

I propose briefly to examine both of these charges, not with the purpose of proving their truth, but with the purpose of showing that they both have sufficient foundation in fact to not only justify but to require the investigation which I propose.

Let us consider the labor charge first.

American Seamen Essential to the American Merchant Marine

I start this discussion with the proposition, which will not be controverted by anyone at all familiar with the subject, that we can never have an American Merchant Marine unless we can attract to the marine service and retain in it genuine American seamen and officers to man and operate the ships. I am not going to take the time to elaborate that proposition. Not only does the history of every maritime power in the world prove its truth, but the manifest purpose of every country in the world today, except the United States, with any maritime pretentions to man its merchant ships with its own citizens, shows how universally the truth of the proposition I have just stated is recognized by the maritime nations of the world.

What good would a fleet of even ten thousand merchant ships have been to us during the late war if they had been manned by the nationals of some other country—possibly alien enemies. Such a fleet would have been a liability and not an asset, at least until such time as we could have trained up American seamen and officers to operate the ships, and this would have been a work of months or years. Even in time of peace we could not maintain American ships manned and operated by foreign seamen. The interests of such seamen would be foreign. If they were able to save a little money, they would leave the service and return to their native land. Seamen are not made in a day or a month, but it is a process of years and means years spent on board ship. The officers necessary to navigate American ships could never be obtained except from American crews.

For a hundred years we have had the money;

we have had the business; we could easily have had the ships. The reason we did not have a Merchant Marine was because we had not attracted American seamen to the service.

Labor Policy of the Shipping Board

It follows from what I have already said that one of the most important, and possibly the most important, duty of the Shipping Board is to adopt a labor policy which will attract to our ships genuine Americans of the kind which so largely predominate in our railroad service and other skilled and responsible employments. No matter what business reforms the Shipping Board may adopt, no matter what economies it may devise or what trade routes it may open, if it adopts a labor policy which drives American labor from the ships, our attempt to build up an American Merchant Marine will be a colossal failure, and the billions of dollars of the people's money will have been uselessly squandered.

The situation resolves itself into this: We cannot have an American Merchant Marine without American seamen. We will not have American seamen unless we pay the wages and create the working conditions which approximate at least to American standards.

The present members of the Shipping Board, when they were appointed a few weeks ago, inherited the labor dispute then existing between the seamen and the Shipping Board. So important do I deem this subject that I am going to ask the indulgence of the Senate to make a brief statement of the principal points of difference in that controversy.

Points of Difference Between the Men, the Shipping Board, and the Shipowners

The seamen engaged in that controversy belong to two organizations. One, the National Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association; the other, the International Seamen's Union of America. The engineers' association numbers about sixteen thousand men. The bulk of them are on the Atlantic Coast. The International Seamen's Union numbers about 100,000 men made up of three groups. The sailors, or deck department, constitutes one group; the firemen, oilers, watertenders, coal passers, and wipers make up the engine department other than the engineers, and constitute another group; and the third group consists of the marine stewards, cooks, bakers, butchers, and waiters, known as the steward or culinary group. A further group, not involved in the present controversy up to this time, is made up of the masters, mates, and pilots, and its organization is known as the National Association of Masters, Mates, and Pilots. Their contract does not expire until August 1, 1921. The word "International" is used in the name of the Seamen's Union, because it has branches in Canada. Otherwise it is purely an American organization.

From May 1, 1920, to May 1, 1921, the agreement in force between the private owners, the United States Shipping Board, and the marine firemen, oilers, watertenders, and so forth (one of the groups of the International Seamen's Union), provided the following scale of wages:

	Wages per month.
Deck engineers	$100
Pumpmen	100
Donkey men	95
Storekeepers	95
Oilers	95
Firemen	90
Coal passers and wipers	75
Watertenders	95

This contract also provided that in port the working hours should be from 8 a. m. to 12 m, and from 1 p. m. to 5 p. m. It also provided for overtime work not necessary for immediate safety—which means practically work in port—at the rate of 60 cents per hour and subsistence for the crew when not fed on board the vessel at the rate of 75 cents per meal, and when compelled to sleep ashore each man was entitled to 75 cents per night for a room. It was further provided that the representative of the seamen's organization should be granted permission to visit vessels, upon presenting a pass signed by the owner at the time of paying off, and at such other times as were agreeable to the representatives of the owners, but under no consideration should the representative of the organization interfere with the men at work. There were various other provisions designed to secure the health of the men and cleanliness of their quarters. This contract was typical of those made with the other seamen's organizations engaged in the present controversy. The wage of [illegible] provided in the agreement was $85 a month and $80 a month for marine firemen. With the [illegible] as a base the wages were slightly higher or lower according as the ratings of the men in the respective groups were higher or lower than the able seamen or marine firemen.

On January 7, 1921, the representative of the committee on wages and working agreement for the American Steamship Owners' Association wrote Mr. Percy, secretary of the seamen's organization, urging a renewal of the wage and working agreement mentioned and saying a definite reply to us as soon as possible. Every [illegible]

On January 26, 1921, Admiral Benson, acting chairman of the Shipping Board, addressed a letter to the seamen in which he urged acceptance of the terms laid down by the Owners' Association. In this letter he said:

> I am in accord with the program which has been submitted to you in the attached letter, and feel sure that we can count upon your hearty cooperation in taking such steps as are necessary to keep more of our ships in operation, and more of our officers and men in the position to earn their livelihood by the practice of their profession.

On January 31, 1921, the men replied to the steamship owners' letter, as follows:

> The American Steamship Owners' Association,
> Whitehall Building, 17 Battery Place,
> New York City.
> Gentlemen: Your favor of the 25th inst., signed by J. McCarthy, vice-chairman of committee on wages and working conditions on board ship, received. After giving your communication the most serious consideration, of which our joint grievance committee is capable, we respectfully submit the following to you:
>
> You are urging a revision "at the earliest practicable date, of American wages and working rules," and you do this for the following reasons:
> "1. The general decline in the volume of seaborne commerce.
> "2. The intensifying competition of foreign ships operated at lower costs than American ships."
> We respectfully beg to submit that your first reason seems to us to be of such a nature that any alterations in wages, overtime, or working rules will not meet the emergency. We are aware that a very large percentage of the tonnage of Norway, Sweden, Italy, and Great Britain are at present laid up. We, not knowing the real cause, have to accept as a cause what seems to be the common understanding, namely, that the poverty of Europe, resulting from the war and peace, has made Europe unable to buy American products, either with gold or any other commodities, and that this has resulted in the stoppage of international commerce.
> Your second reason—"intensifying competition of foreign vessels operated at lower costs than American ships"—seems to us to have some merit, and we feel that under certain conditions we could induce our membership to accept a revision of existing rules and conditions.
> We beg to assure you that we are deeply and earnestly concerned about the development, the profitable operation, and the permanency of an American Merchant Marine and a real sea power for America. Feeling as we do, that in a large sense our interests are common, we shall be pleased to co-operate with you toward the ends sought to the utmost of our ability, and in such a way as to retain under the American flag not only all the vessels, but to man them with a sufficiently large number of citizen seamen, so as to make the Merchant Marine truly American.
> You submit three concrete propositions. The first is immediate elimination of overtime. Second, readjustment of subsistence and room allowance; third, substantial reduction in wages to a basis which will enable American vessels to meet successfully the wage cost of our principal foreign competitors. We assume that in making these propositions, you are thinking of them as principles which you will be willing to modify upon a closer investigation of the facts as they exist here, in Europe, and in Japan. We further assume that you are willing to go into and examine all the facts and that, having thus examined the facts and come to some reasonable understanding that would be constructive and helpful to the building up of an American Merchant Marine, you would be willing to enter into an agreement for another year based on such facts and understanding.
> We beg to assure you that we have from original sources some concrete and late information dealing with wages, subsistence, and overtime paid in European countries. We find that there is none of them who do not pay overtime for certain overtime work, and we find further that our own laws and our own decisions here in the United States run in the same direction. If it be your idea to revise the rules under which overtime is being paid, we shall be pleased to co-operate with you. We feel the same way about subsistence and, to some extent, about wages, but all these would have to be based upon a mutual understanding arising out of mutual goodwill and mutual and co-operative work for the building up of an American Merchant Marine.
> We respectfully suggest that a conference be called at the earliest possible date, to go into the whole subject matter with a view of such revisions as can be agreed upon and as will then be made the basis for an agreement to carry us through another year.
> Again assuring you of our utmost concern and our willingness and desire to co-operate with you on the propositions which we both have in view, and awaiting an early reply, we beg to remain,
> Very respectfully yours,
> EASTERN AND GULF SAILORS' ASSOCIATION,
> By PERCY J. PRYOR.
> GUS ERICSON.
> MARINE FIREMEN, OILERS, AND WATERTENDERS' UNION,
> By OSCAR CARLSON.
> JAMES LYNCH.
> MARINE COOKS AND STEWARDS' ASSOCIATION,
> By P. H. GRIFFIN.
> D. E. GRANGE.

On January 31, 1921, the men also wrote Admiral Benson, as follows:

> Hon. William S. Benson,
> Chairman, United States Shipping Board,
> Washington, D. C.
> Dear Sir: Your favor of the 26th inst., received and same has been submitted to our joint grievance committee, together with the letter which you referred in your communication. Inclosed please find copy of letter, which we have this day felt it our duty to send to the American Steamship Owners' Association.
> In addition to what we have said in the letter to the American Steamship Owners' Association, we respectfully beg to call your attention to the fact that as chairman of the United States Shipping Board, you are operating about two thousand American vessels, or these vessels are at least operated under regulations voted upon and issued by you.
> [illegible] years ago there was about 5 per cent of American citizens sailing before the mast in American vessels. The latest census taken in the only way it could be taken indicates that 51 per cent are native Americans. We have no means of accurately ascertaining the number of naturalized Americans, but we do know that there is a considerable number of them.
> [illegible] the difference in wages of foreign vessels sailing in competition with American vessels was in some instances so great that competition was impossible, and American vessels went under foreign flags.
> The [illegible] of the law of the States and of general evidence has brought this large number of native Americans to sea. They are now leaving. We don't know what they are going when they arrive back home. They are leaving because of lack of work—the disposition of a large number of American shipowners to employ foreigners in preference to Americans—and further, because of the strong rumor that wages are to be cut, and existing conditions destroyed.
> As stated in the letter to the American Steamship Owners' Association, we stand ready, eagerly ready, to co-operate for the upbuilding of a real American Merchant Marine and of a real sea power for America. We hoped, and still hope, to have the co-operation of the shipowners. We felt sure, and we still feel sure, that we shall be permitted to co-operate with you and the American Government, even though we should not be permitted to co-operate with the American shipowners.
> The number of vessels which the Shipping Board controls will determine the wages and conditions for other ships, if the Shipping Board shall so desire. We beg to remind you that the shipowners and seamen of Europe, and it may include Japan, are now meeting at Brussels, Belgium, in an endeavor to arbitrate the hours of labor in maritime commerce, and to come to an understanding about such other things as may be possible, and we do not feel that they are seriously considering the interests of the American Merchant Marine. We feel that in the coming year or two, perhaps three, it will take all the co-operation, goodwill, and strength of all the different factors constituting the American Merchant Marine to defend the interests of the growing Merchant Marine and sea power of the United States.
> In the earnest hope and expectation that such co-operation may be arranged for, and that such meeting will be called for that purpose and that such meeting will be successful, we beg to remain,
> Most respectfully yours,
> EASTERN AND GULF SAILORS' ASSOCIATION,
> By PERCY J. PRYOR.
> GUS ERICSON.
> MARINE FIREMEN, OILERS, AND WATERTENDERS' UNION,
> By OSCAR CARLSON.
> JAMES LYNCH.
> MARINE COOKS AND STEWARDS' ASSOCIATION,
> By P. H. GRIFFIN.
> D. E. GRANGE.

Admiral Benson merely replied acknowledging receipt of this letter, and the owners' association did not reply to the seamen's letter at all.

Thereafter, in April, 1921, a conference was called at New York, between the men, the owners, and the Shipping Board. At this conference the owners finally delivered their ultimatum by presenting the form of contracts they would require all men to sign if they were to continue service on the ships after the thirtieth day of April, 1921. A copy of the contract proposed for the firemen, oilers, and watertenders, is herewith submitted. This contract is typical:

Proposed Firemen's, Oilers', and Watertenders' Wages

	Wages per month
Deck engineer	$75.00
Pumpman	75.00
Donkeyman	70.00
Storekeeper	70.00
Oiler	70.00
Fireman	67.50

The proposed contract was significant for what it omitted as well as what it contained. It abolished the three watches, or the fifty-six-hour week, for the men; it denied the right of the men to have a representative of the union present when they sign on or are paid off; it reduced subsistence allowance to an impossible basis; it abolished all pay for overtime, and cut the base wage 25 per cent or more. And even the provisions of this proposed contract are subject to abrogation any time on thirty days' notice. Of course, this form of contract was rejected by the men. The proposals of the men were either all rejected or not considered at all, and the meeting ended. It should be stated in this connection that before men take service on board ship, they are called up and individually required to sign the articles which contain the substance of the contract. If they refuse to sign, they are ordered off the ship. It was for failure to sign this proposed contract that the men were ordered off the ship by the officers. The so-called strike of the men, therefore, is really a lockout by the owners.

At the New York conference in April, between the owners, the Shipping Board, and the men, it was specifically stated by the seamen's delegation that the matter of first importance was the development of the American Merchant Marine. The second was wages and working conditions. It was pointed out that when the so-called seamen's bill became a law, it was generally admitted that there were less than 7 per cent of native Americans sailing under the American flag, licensed officers excepted. On the 1st of December, 1920, there were 51 per cent of native Americans, licensed officers excepted, sailing under the American flag, and there was at least 10 per cent additional of naturalized citizens in the same service. This included the Lakes, coastwise, and ocean vessels.

Subsequently a meeting was called by Admiral Benson in Washington, in which he met the seamen's representatives, and after some discussion it was proposed by the seamen to submit the matters in controversy to the President of the United States, who, under the law, exercised large control over the board. This proposition was rejected. The men, however, as a last resort, did address the President on the subject in a communication dated April 29, 1921, which contains a complete but brief review of what had occurred in the conferences to which I have referred. The letter is as follows:

> Washington, D. C., April 29, 1921.
> Mr. President: This is a report and a prayer. All the agreements and arrangements between shipowners organized in the American Steamship Owners' Association, the United States Shipping Board, the organized marine engineers, sailors, firemen, marine cooks and stewards, these last three consti-

WOULD EXPLOIT MISERY

The submerged are always subject to capitalistic exploitation, and we have never seen employers fail to take advantage of condition of hardships and unemployment; whether it was to force an oppressed man to leave his respective locality, so his discontentment would not spread, or to make use of him as strikebreaker in other ports where strikes are on, where men are either trying to better their wages and working condition or, as of late, are determined to retain as fair condition as possible. Employers, with the aid of purchased intelligence, are always able to substitute men forced into submission for those yet to be attacked. This is a standing fact, of which each labor union has had its own experience. Men not belonging to any union can find jobs every day at places declared unfair by organized labor. Employers will even send them across the country to any place in order to break a strike.

Of late this art of hiring strikebreakers has become a business of international importance, most of all in Europe and especially in Germany, a country in size little bigger than the State of Washington, with a population of over fifty million souls, whose industries have to a great extent slowed down, thus facing a critical situation of unemployment for its vast millions. That such a country should prove itself a fertile field for strikebreakers to ship men to other ports might be anticipated, for, after all, hunger is a strong factor and men will do anything to obtain food, even to strikebreaking.

Logically, the best and most numerous class of people to use as strikebreakers from Germany is the seamen, since that country was stripped of its merchant fleet, thus leaving the men without their tools to earn their living with, and shipowners, especially those of Norway, were very quick to use German seamen to combat those who were striking in Norway. Such stories have been circulated here very frequently and German workingmen were gaining a reputation as professional strikebreakers. It is, therefore, gratifying to receive word from unions in Germany showing the other side of the question.

The Schiffarts Warte, official organ of the German Seafarers' Federation, in its latest issue arriving here, urges all seamen to stay away from unfair ships, saying in part: "Ships in any part of the world against which a strike has been declared, must not be manned by any seaman, even if owners are willing to pay union wages; nay, even if they should be willing to pay ten-fold union wages, which is an old trick, and German seamen might remember this from their last strike in 1907. Whoever accepts any position on any such ships deserves no better than a traitor in war and should be treated accordingly.

"The Norwegian sailors were notified on March 31 that their wages would be reduced 40 per cent, to take effect immediately, which the men, however, refused to accept, and on the date of May 8 a strike was declared by a majority vote of two thousand to eight. The shipowners accepted the challenge and took steps to send to Germany for sailors to take the striking men's places. The German seamen, however, declined any such proposition. But the shipowners made every effort and every inducement was thrown to the German seamen to scab."

In spite of miserable conditions in their own shipping and serious unemployment, few scabs were obtainable. The seamen's strike in Norway is now history, the men went back, accepting a 12-17 per cent reduction in wages instead of 40 per cent, and it is pretty safe to assert that such fair terms were made possible by virtue of the firm stand which the German seamen took in the controversy between Norwegian men and shipowners.

By standing pat, these seamen have shown the world that without shipping, and practically down and out, they still refuse to be used as scabs and help defeat their fellow working men in other countries, knowing that the result would be low wages and long hours, not only for the men striking but for themselves as well. High school and university students would do well to take notice and to guide themselves in future by a little more consideration for those men endeavoring to maintain their right and whose places they are only too willing to occupy in the present strike in this country. F. H.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Arising out of the recent conference of delegates of the various waterside organizations, held at the Trades Hall, Sydney, to consider matters relating to waterside workers generally, the constitution and preamble of "The Transport Workers' Industrial Union of Australia" has been made available.

The preamble sets out that the interests of the working classes can be advanced by an organization so constituted that all its members in any one industry or in all industries shall take concerted action when deemed necessary, thereby making an injury to one the concern of all. Also that as the working class creates and operates the socially operated machinery of production and distribution, it should direct production and distribution, and determine working conditions.

Union's Objective

The objects of the new organization are:

1. To improve the standard of living and conditions of members; reduce working hours and generally protect their interests; to educate members and build a union for the purpose of abolishing capitalism and substituting in its place the social ownership of the means of production and distribution.

2. To promote industrial peace by all amicable means; to make industrial agreements; to combat lockouts, and to prevent all strikes that are not properly authorized by the union.

3. To establish funeral, sick, accident or other insurance or assurance funds or benefits.

4. To constitute and manage co-operative systems for the necessities of life, manage clubs in the interests of members, and generally carry out such other objects as the committee of management may from time to time think fit.

A proposition is also put forward to establish a system of education by propaganda and literature for the education of the workers to class consciousness.

Pacific Coast Marine

Announcement is made that the "Hawkeye State" has been assigned to the Pacific Steamship Company and will be placed on the run to the Orient from Puget Sound.

Manned with a crew of strike-breakers, the steam schooner "Multnomah" rammed and sunk a barge of the Success Towage and Transportation Company in San Francisco bay waters last week.

The steamer "Mexico," which arrived in San Francisco last week, is the first passenger vessel flying the Mexican flag to be seen at the port for years. The vessel will go up for repairs and sail on her first run from San Francisco August 15.

Advices from San Pedro dated July 28 state that union longshoremen at that port have refused to work on board steamers manned by non-union seamen. The "Fort Bragg," the "Admiral Goodrich" and the "Coquille River" are the steamers affected.

Several fishing boats operating from San Diego for albacore recently made catches which brought in over one thousand dollars a day. Fishermen report that albacore are running in unprecedented schools about fifty miles northwest of Point Loma.

The first actual step by the Government toward widening the main channel in San Pedro Harbor has been taken by the War Department. It had advertised bids for the dredging to be opened July 29. The estimate involved the removal of more than 1,250,000 cubic yards of silt.

Repairs to the extent of approximately $40,000 were required on the Shipping Board "535" liner "Hawkeye State," under Matson operation, and the time needed for the repairs forced the company to further postpone the sailing for Honolulu and Hilo.

Inaugurating the Canadian Government Merchant Marine Service between Ocean Falls, Victoria, Vancouver, British Columbia ports and San Francisco, the big freighter "Canadian Rover" arrived at San Francisco last week with a full cargo of paper.

When just north of the nine fathom buoy off the entrance to the Golden Gate, a log raft, consisting of 7,000,000 feet of lumber, snapped her towline and went adrift. The tug "Hercules," which was towing the raft from the Columbia river to San Pedro, sent out a call for assistance. The tug "Relief" from this port responded and assisted the "Hercules" in again securing her tow.

Portland steamship operators and shippers declare they will fight to the last ditch any effort of Puget Sound operators to have Portland join the North Pacific Westbound Conference. Portland's experience in the past of having Puget Sound operators fix rates applicable to the Columbia river no longer will be tolerated and that they hereafter will operate as a separate conference.

Cut in stevedoring charges at Portland will be made August 1 in line with the new wage schedule for longshoremen on the Columbia river. The stevedoring companies will decide on what the new schedule shall be. Wages of longshoremen will be cut 10 cents an hour on all commodities August 1, following a recent agreement reached by the employers and employes.

I have said that I would never be attorney for shipowners, until the seamen were shipowners. One of the purposes of my visit to Europe this summer is to acquire knowledge as to shipping conditions abroad and particularly to ascertain with what degree of success the seamen of Italy are operating ships.

Any seamen, who, with a view to becoming shipowners some time, are willing to form "a Seamen's Society for Savings" and will pledge to save one-fourth of their wages over their board and lodging per annum, said savings to be put in a depository that they themselves may select, please communicate with the undersigned.

Lynch Law Rampant

New York, July 30.—Lynch law is rampant in this country, says the New York World, which calls for the law's protection to the individual.

"In the South," says the World, "there are bodies of men organized to set aside ordinary procedure and take immediate revenge on persons, white or black, who by word or deed violate the sacred codes that have grown up around the color line. In the North the differences of opinion are mainly economic, and he who advocates what seems radical or dangerous to the majority—or even in some cases to a minority—lays himself open to being horsewhipped or run out of town. To be a Non-partisan Leaguer in Kansas, a United Mine Worker in Mingo County, or an I. W. W. in Washington, often robs one automatically of the protection of the courts and the authorities.

"If the law is to retain respect, it must come to the assistance of the individual, who is fast losing his ancient liberties of speech and action before the illegal assaults of the crowd. The lynching spirit, once sporadic and universally condemned, grows fashionable and general. The law has been lenient too long."

Would Reduce Wages

Sydney, New South Wales, Australia, July 30.—"The agitation for a reduction of wages in Australia is positively wicked," says the Australian Worker, which declares that the war cost the rich nothing, and that they now possess undreamed of wealth.

"There are simpletons," says the Worker, "who actually believe that every section of the community was hurt by the great conflict. It is incredible to them that in that time of world-wide agony men should be battening on the pain and sorrow of the nations, and reaping a hideous harvest from the slaughter of the battle fields. Yet it is true.

"The war did not depress Australian industries. Nor did it prejudicially affect the operations of commerce and finance in this country.

"On the contrary, it stimulated business in every sphere. New industries were established to supply the needs of the combatants. Old ones were suddenly flung into a whirl of accelerated production. Trade immediately felt the impulse of this industrial activity. The shops were crowded with customers buying at high prices. Trade investors and speculators jostled one another in the banks.

"Be it remembered always that the war cost the rich nothing.

"The Government conducted its military operations on borrowed money, for which it paid exorbitant rates of interest. Instead of levying on the wealth-owning class, in order to maintain its armies in the field, the Government implored them to lend their credit, and taxed the workers to meet the interest bills.

"Thus the rich grew richer than they had ever dreamed of doing, and a staggering debt was piled upon the backs of the workers, to be borne by them and their children for generations.

"One would imagine that even Mr. Plute would be content.

"He is not, however, in the least content. He wants to give his rapacity a third arm.

"Wages, he says, must be reduced. And he throws out broad hints that the workers must learn to live on less.

"He could afford to do it, too."

Co-operation in Europe

Baltimore, July 30.—Co-operation among European farmers is increasing, according to Dr. Thomas B. Symons, director of the University of Maryland extension service, who has returned from a three months' visit to England, France, Holland and Belgium.

He said agricultural conditions are bad, and while co-operation tends to brighten the prospects, "there are other conditions which make the situation of the American farmer ten times better than that of his European brother."

"In co-operative work," he said, "it is evident that Denmark leads the world, particularly in the marketing of dairy and pork products and eggs. In Ireland and Holland the spirit of co-operation has resulted in important achievements, and in practically all of the countries I visited the desire for co-operative effort was apparent. In fact, it seems to me that co-operation everywhere is destined for a remarkable growth during the next few years. The salvation of the farmer will depend upon it."

TO DEMAND FAIR PLAY

Washington reports state that Shipping Board representatives will confer with British shipowners in London in an effort to obtain fair treatment for American merchant vessels in the award of trade privileges in foreign ports. The Board announced that Captain Ferris, district manager at London, had been instructed to make representations particularly against alleged discrimination in the awarding of contracts for carrying Egyptian cotton to British and American ports.

It was considered probable, however, that the conference would have a still broader aspect, and that the Board would insist that its vessels have equal footing with British ships in the awarding of contracts for the transport of all classes of freight.

The Board is understood to have complained to British shipping lines that American vessels have been denied cargoes of Egyptian cotton, although in many instances their bids were lower than those of British ships, which got the contracts. Captain Ferris is understood to have instructions not only to protest against such discrimination, but to insist that half of both the direct and indirect cotton shipments be carried in American bottoms.

LEARN BY EXPERIENCE

A compensating feature of the recent lockout is a sudden realization brought home to union members that the labor movement carries with it certain obligations in addition to those rights which are protected as far as possible by the strength of organization.

While the surface of the industrial sea is undisturbed, it is only natural that we have a tendency, to some extent, to drift along with the current, only to be rudely awakened when the storm of opposition strikes. Although it may be too late, for the time being, to fittingly prepare to meet the shock, we are educated by the experience, and are, therefore, less inclined to present the same weaknesses or repeat the mistakes. If we should fail to learn by such experiences, our repulse would be a calamity. But our weak spots have been brought to light, and an interested and observant membership must endeavor to remedy the situation, unless the effect of lessons taught by adversity are to be entirely lost.

One fact forcibly impressed is the lack of real live interest upon the part of a large percentage of members in the welfare of the organization. If men, who are more concerned in their own personal desires than the interests of the union, are permitted to nest as officials of an organization the rank and file are to blame for allowing them to entrench themselves. The most perfect plans and earnest efforts of a general are wasted if his subordinate officers are incompetent, unfaithful or careless; the whole morale of the army is destroyed, and defeat is inevitable.

Being human, we are not impeccable. Therefore, it is necessary for us to avail ourselves of every safeguard. This we must accomplish.

Our first requirement is to understand our position. We are a mere unit on the great industrial field; therefore, a more perfect solidarity as workers is a pressing necessity. This can only be attained by means of organization, education and agitation. Where our present organization is imperfect we must apply the remedies, no matter how harsh they may appear. Where dead wood is revealed remove it; but support and encourage the earnest and faithful. If anyone has an idea for strengthening our cause it should be pushed forward until adopted, or until it has been proven useless.

Whatever else, we should stand by the union with all the force within us; unorganized we are the prey of every ruthless exploiter, devoid of resistance.

While keeping in view the brotherhood of the sea, the necessity for solidarity with our fellow-workers ashore is imperative.

EMPLOYERS MAKE MISTAKE

Unless something transpires which will check the onward career of commercial tyranny, now sweeping through the civilized world, there is grave danger that a practical illustration will be given to the old saying that "those whom the gods would destroy they first make mad."

Not satiated with enormous wealth gleaned from war conditions, those who think only in profits are gnawing at the foundations of our social structure. They are mere automatons in the progress of a system which is destroying the race. Carried on by the force of a relentless machine, drunk with temporary power, and filled with arrogance, the captains of industry are bringing destruction to all the organizations of the masses. In addition to the labor movement, fraternal and beneficial associations are feeling the weight of present conditions, neither are the churches immune from detrimental effect. However, there is consolation in the thought that even the organized employers can make mistakes. They have determined upon decimation of the American Federation of Labor, and in that effort their interest will be poorly conserved.

As at present constituted, the American Federation of Labor is anything but a menace to the employing interests; in many instances it operates to their advantage. The system of craft organization in its present form precludes solidarity of the workers. Where the leaders of the several unions are not imbued with the natural ambition to climb, or are unaffected with political aspirations, the Courts are effective in nullifying the obsolete weapons of strike or boycot. Trade jealousies and jurisdictional disputes split the contenders into hostile camps to such extent that the common enemy is frequently lost to sight. The policy of entering, as crafts, into agreements—which are regulated by employers to terminate at different times, according to their requirements—has become one of the handiest tools for subjection of the workers, due to the fact that unionists are compelled to work against each other's interests in organized form.

The spirit of unionism is too strong to utterly destroy the labor movement in America, and success of employers to disrupt the American Federation of Labor would only result in a more progressive and effective system of organization.

The American Indian's extinction is only a question of time. The last of the race, however, can receive consolation from the reflection that their people rejected assimilation and wage slavery. They pass from the haunts of men unconquered and untamed.

A MESSAGE FROM FURUSETH
(An Editorial)

To the Officers and Members of the International Seamen's Union of America.
Dear Comrades:

The battle is fought and lost. We have lost many battles before and this is only one more battle lost. To the real fighter for ideals a battle lost means nothing; but that for the time being he must change his tactics. We are not fighting to win battles. We are conducting a campaign to recover our true status among men. Washington lost many battles before he finally won. Bruce lost again and again and yet he won in the end. Sverre lost battle after battle but won at last, and so with Gustav Wasa and Frederick the Great. Let this be a comfort to you. This battle is lost, but the campaign is not unless you shall will it so. Let me recall to your memory some of the battles we have lost both on the Pacific, on the Atlantic, and on the Lakes. But in our campaign we have won more than any other union that ever was organized in modern times.

Our campaign began on the Pacific. It has been a campaign for the freedom of the seamen of America. This campaign we have won and that victory is not lost. We have the freedom of the law for which we fought. That law is our weapon now. If we shall have the courage to use it right, we shall by the by look back upon this defeat as on a pleasant memory. We lost worse than this on the Pacific in 1886. We lost much worse than this again in 1893, but we did not lose courage or hope, we only changed tactics and fought on to new victories. We lost on the Lakes, but we did not quit. We lost again and again on the Atlantic; but we changed our way of fighting and we won another battle. We can and shall win again, if you can see the way and have the courage to walk it. We must again depend upon our own strength, whatever other unions may do; we cannot beg bread from friend or mercy from enemy.

In every union of men there are three kinds of men. First, the strong men who know principles, who know what they are fighting for and who have the character to follow principles. To such men there are no defeats. There are lost battles but no defeats, there is an end, but it comes with death only. We have many such men in our union. If we had them not our campaign would never have been conceived, or it would have been at an end many years ago. Let those men come together, take stock and move on with our campaign. Second, there are strong men without principles, who are in the union not for principles, but for their own gain. They use the rest in their efforts to climb. These men will now leave us. Let them go. It is good riddance of bad rubbish. Let us be glad to see them go. They are of no value in our struggle for the seamen. Third, there are the men who but dimly understand, but the majority of these "Will feel and follow truth if only you and you

When you speak be wholly true."

Those who hold us in secret contempt, those who hated us and those who feared us will not be full of joy. "The seamen are defeated," so they will whisper, speak and sing. Let them. It pleases them and it does not hurt us unless we be fools. The One Big Union crowd will tell us that our form of organization is no good, or we would not have lost. They had their strike in Holland and lost; in Sweden and lost; in Norway just now, and lost; in Canada not long since and lost. What have they done but losing? The I. W. W. will tell us that they know how to fight and win. Ask where they have won? They cannot tell of any place. The International Transport Workers' Federation will say: If you had been together with the teamsters, the longshoremen and the railroadmen, you would not have lost. And yet that was the case in Holland, in France, in Sweden, in Norway, and they lost. They will tell you that our Union is too narrow. It does not contemplate the changing of human society. It does not contemplate the seizing upon the State and the vessels. True. We know what is impossible. We know that the two hundred thousand men who go to sea cannot transform the United States with its one hundred millions of population—with its thirty millions of men. We know that even the million you might be dreaming of as a complete membership cannot do this; but we knew that we could change the law so that seamen would be as free as other workers, we knew this law could be passed, we worked on and we accomplished the miracle of freeing the seamen of these United States and all other seamen who come here.

The battle is lost, "yes," but not the campaign. The struggle will go on and finally we shall win. We set out to liberate the world's seamen and we shall win. First, because we are right; second, because we are not quitters. We knew how to fight and we knew how to change tactics in the past. Have we lost this knowledge?

If the shipowners shall use their victory to the fullest extent—and they will, you may count on that—the worst they can do is to refuse employment to men known to be or to have been members of the Union. They did that twice on the Pacific, they did it on the Atlantic before. They did it on the Lakes. They did it in England; they have done it everywhere, yet they accomplished nothing except for the time being. Then the man too well known in one place went to another and shipped as a non-union man. He, as you said in your resolution, took the strike to the ships and then used such means as he could to fight and win. We are now in position to do this effectively. And we can do it all within the law. Under Sections 2, 4, 7 and 13 of the Seamen's Act we can, without violating any law, compel the shipowners to change their tune and to sing a different song. And we need only to insist upon the law of the land being carried out and honestly obeyed. How you may do this will be shown to you from week to week.

Of course, you will not be able to make any money to speak of, but you never did except for a short time and only a few of you. Let us accept the real situation as men, who have higher thoughts than a few cents, more wages and a few minutes' less work per day. He that would earn money shall lose it; but he that is willing to lose money for principle's sake shall gain it—after awhile. Not now. We must fight and win first. The shipowners chose the very best of time. One-half of the vessels laid up and men idle months before the struggle began in earnest. Not more than one-half of the shipping is at all likely to move in this coming year. Those who cannot get to the ships must find some kind of living somewhere else, that cannot be helped. Then the shipowners picked the time and the battlefield, and we could not avoid the battle. It was but reasonable that they should win. The shipowners of the whole world were in it and the United States Government paid the expenses. It would have been a miracle if we had won. Then our position could never be brought to the front, because we had as advance guard the Marine Engineers. They had neither the organization nor the stamina to fight a long battle. Their councils were divided, their real strength frittered away. When they, as the advance guard, were defeated, we as the main body, lost our fighting spirit and quit. Under the circumstances, that was perhaps not a serious mistake; but that water is over the dam. Our work is now to reorganize our forces, remain true to our own ideals and purposes and fight on, using our own methods. If we have the courage and the will, all shall be well. If we have not, or if we can think of nothing better than to hunt for strange gods and become unfaithful to our own ideals then, of course, we shall disintegrate and reductions will follow reductions and misery and hopelessness will follow misery and we shall not deserve anything better. God hates the coward and quitter. In his cowardice the quitter hates himself, but that is not you, at least I will not believe that until you shall prove it by your own action. I believe that you have the fortitude, the courage and the will, and if I be right in that, then nothing is lost but some of the fat from our heads. If we be what I think we are, then nothing has happened, except a temporary sickness—some fever, from which we shall rise purified and strengthened to work out our ideals and our purposes with greater zeal and more purity of soul.

With reference to those who did not fight us, to them we should offer the same conditions upon which we would have settled with all. If they be not willing to accept that, we shall have done our full duty and they must then act as they shall think proper.

We have fought for the seamen of all countries, but more especially to so change American law that native Americans could come to sea. We won and they came. If they are willing to join in our fight for an American Merchant Marine, they will remain and fight with us. If they be true Americans they will. If they be not, they will quit again. It is up to them. Let them choose.

Please give to this your most careful thought and let me know what you think you will do, and the way to fight, if you do not know it, shall be promptly sent to you.

Respectfully submitted,
ANDREW FURUSETH.

At the beginning of 1921 there were approximately 38,000,000 trade unionists throughout the world. Of this total, 32,500,000 are in the United Kingdom, Germany, United States, France, Italy, and Russia, leaving 5,500,000 for other countries of the world. Germany heads the list with over 9,000,000 unionists.

News from the Atlantic Coast

A REMEDY SUGGESTED

Editor THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL:

Most of us understand to some extent the reasons underlying our loss of the strike. Unemployment, which enabled the shipowners to obtain a considerable supply of scabs, and economic conditions in general were against us. In 1919, when the docks were stocked with merchandise, and charters were plentiful, we won. Employment was easily obtainable, and men took scab jobs only for the so-called "romance" supposed to be connected with sea life, not to get three squares a day.

In 1919 the strike was won the day it was declared. There was never made a determined effort to break it. We were kept out for a few days, so that we would not get drunk on our own strength and demand more at our next opportunity.

The unions were stronger before the strike than in 1919. In 1919 the union membership was much larger than it is now, but there was a large percentage of men who had just begun going to sea, consequently they were not educated union men. Unemployment preceding the strike drove these men away, leaving us seasoned union men who were on the job to stay.

In our last strike we also fought the capitalists with reason, which, by the way, is a futile proceeding. Andrew Furuseth pointed out to the Shipping Board that their intentions and devices were known to us. Did Admiral Benson feel ashamed or guilty? He went right on disguising his double dealing with the opaque cloak of 100 per cent Americanism, which, like charity, covers a multitude of sins. Of course this is not an argument against the use of propaganda. It is useful in keeping our class together and to enlighten the "public," who obtain their ideas and convictions from the capitalistic newspapers (most of them anyway) and are never or seldom guilty of thinking for themselves.

I have stated my belief that we were stronger in the last strike than in 1919. But our strength did not amount to much, because the craft system of unionism has shown its weaknesses. Our conservative policy will do no longer. The gap between capital and labor grows wider every day. Even the reactionary dreamers, who used to paint the beautiful picture of capital and labor walking together arm in arm, are almost if not extinct.

Years ago, when most of the manufacturing was done by hand, each and every workingman was a skilled craftsman. Each had skill in his hands, which could not be taken away from him or acquired on short notice. Therefore it was all right to organize by crafts. But modern machinery reversed all that. The skilled craftsman became a machine operative, and the boundary lines between crafts became very thin, thus enabling one craftsman to take the job of another. We can apply this reasoning to ourselves.

In the days of sailing vessels, seamen were skilled craftsmen. This skill was only obtainable by long years of hard work and study. Consequently, when the sailors left the ship, the remainder of the crew could stay on board, yet the ship was crippled. Because of the skill necessary to sail a ship no other craftsman could take the job. But with the advent of the steam engine, seamen lost a good portion of their skill. Instead of using sails to harness the potential power of the wind, we merely use the power created by the engine room. During the last strike the small arc of our craft was well demonstrated. It is possible to learn steering in a very short space of time. Other necessary work can be learned quickly. This cannot be continued indefinitely, but it has been successful in breaking our strike.

Various attempts have been made to preserve craft lines. The idea of establishing a vocational school is one of these. They cannot succeed, because once the world moves ahead it will not turn back.

High initiation fees are often used as a makeshift, but this is a very destructive practice. The non-union worker who wishes to join a union and finds the initiation prohibitive becomes a foe of unionism. It is from this class of workers that scabs are often recruited during strikes. In this way organized labor is making enemies in its own class.

Faultfinding is vicious and destructive if a remedy is not proposed. There is and can be but one remedy—organization along industrial lines. In the last strike we cooperated with the other unions and found it satisfactory. Then why not consolidate?

As I have stated before, the gap between capital and labor grows wider every day. Peace and industrial liberty are impossible as long as capitalists hold their power. So we must organize industrially and adopt an uncompromising attitude towards capitalism. We must use our collective strength, not only in our struggle with capitalism, but to secure for us a final liberation from wage slavery.

IS THIS AMERICANISM?

Editor THE SEAMENS' JOURNAL:

Dear Comrade:—Enclosed find a true copy of a document entitled "Notice to Seamen," which appeared in the offices of the Sea Service Bureau here in Newport News on the 22nd of July, 1921:

> In order to secure the best men available for ships, and to show impartiality, we are adopting the system of keeping on file all discharges and passports of seamen seeking work, that so care to entrust same to our keeping. Such discharges and passports left with us will be returned to the owners on request.
> In connection with the above, we reserve the right to give Americans preference, all things being equal.
> Signature: G. S. McKENZIE,
> Sub Agent Sea Service Bureau.

The above is a true copy of a "Notice to Seamen" posted in the office of the Sea Service Bureau of the City of Newport News, Virginia, on the 22nd day of July, 1921.

JULIUS NELSON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 25th day of July, 1921.

[Seal] J. EUGENE POOL,
Notary Public.

The agents for the Sea Service Bureau immediately started to collect the passports and discharges from those men that were willing to trust their papers in their care. In view of the unemployment among seamen, there were many that were willing to so entrust their papers, expecting, of course, to be able to ship ahead of those that for some reason or another were unwilling to trust their papers to the agents of the Sea Service Bureau.

Shipping masters and crimps have always tried and too often succeeded in controlling seamen and making them dependent upon them (the crimps and shipping masters) for their job through withholding from them (the seamen) their passports, discharges and clothes. Sometimes the seamen lived in the boarding house maintained by the shipping master himself, sometimes in another house maintained by somebody that was working hand-in-hand with the shipping master, and the shipping master always insisted that he bring his clothes to the house. That was done for one reason only—Advance. Advance, having been abolished by law in both American and foreign ships (still flourishing in foreign ships, but under cover), there were men that were willing to take advantage of the law and assert their independence and go elsewhere (aboard of the ships, some other shipping master or the union hall) for employment, leaving their clothes with the boarding master with whom they had been stopping, leaving him (the boarding master), so to speak, to hold the bag. And along came the war. The seaman had to have papers, passports and such things, papers of identification, without which he could not obtain employment. The shipping masters lost no time. In addition to his clothes he now demanded the seamen's passports, and quite often got them. I recall several instances where men were sent down from New York to Newport News to join sailing vessels, had left their papers with the runner for the shipping master in New York, the runner retaining the papers until the men arrived aboard the ship. It is a very effective way to control the men, or in the language of the waterfront, it prevents the seamen from backing out.

Shipping is slack, very few men shipping out, but men that are furnishing men for ships must live; there is competition for the seaman's job, not that they (the men that furnish men for ships) are willing to go aboard of ships and take his job; no, no, no; they are competing among themselves about furnishing ships with men.

Officers of the ships (captains, mates and engineers) are beginning to rebel against the Sea Service Bureau usurping their authority as officers aboard ship. They (the officers) are not allowed to hire men that they know are competent, men that have sailed under them in other ships, men that they know, without first going through the Sea Service Bureau; but lately some of the more independent of the officers have disregarded the orders from the Sea Servive Bureau and hired some of the men that they know wherever they could find them, and it is this sort of thing that the Sea Service Bureau is trying to stop, and also trying to prevent the men from looking for their own jobs somewhere else. That is the reason, as far as I can see, why they (the Sea Service Bureau) have copied the tactics of the shipping masters and crimps.

JULIUS NELSON, Agent,
Newport News.

OLD TALES FROM AN OLD SEA

Does not the Book of Genesis tell us that the sea was created before mankind? It is older than those who sail it. No wonder, then, that with all our devices for safety and comfort, we cannot tame it —cannot even civilize the conditions which those who follow the sea for a livelihood must encounter. For a good many years we have been hearing of the improvement of the sailor's lot; we have been told of better food and better quarters, better treatment and better pay. Since the United States has resumed a place as a great shipping power, there has been an especial effort to draw American youth back to salt water and to paint conditions there as having become almost ideal—a complete revolution from the old sailingship days, with their "salt horse" and moldy hardbread, their allowance of a quart of water per day per man for all purposes, their theory of discipline as a state of servitude to be maintained by oaths, officers' fists, and handy belaying-pins.

Of course there has been a vast change for the better. Yet now and again something happens showing how hard it is to introduce, not democracy (still far off) but bare humanity into the relations beween "master" and "men"—words which themselves tell an eloquent story. Facts have come to light in regard to two recent voyages which illustrate the point. The American steamship "Pocahontas" arrived at Naples lately with a story of a delayed voyage, lasting more than a month, and charges of insubordination and sabotage among the crew that carry one back to old-time cut-throat and pirate days. The story as told in the newspapers is that of the captain; it usually is. The crew's side comes out only rarely.

After leaving Boston, the "Pocahontas" experienced constant difficulty in maintaining any speed. According to the captain's story, the engine room was flooded on June 5; one of the seamen was placed in irons. The next day two port holes were mysteriously opened and a quantity of supplies was ruined. The day after that ashes were discovered in the dynamo and the men in charge of it were placed in irons. Later, the rudder was disabled. The story of the rest of the voyage, as recorded in the ship's log, reads much like a page from a remote past:

June 14—All the boiler pumps stopped and all fires but one are out. Water continues to flood the engine room. Alfredo Pablo placed in irons for refusing to obey orders, and Louis Prewath, oiler, imprisoned for abandoning his post.

June 16—Arrived at Punta Delgada and discovered an attempt to burn the ship.

June 21—First Engineer G. W. Hinckley and Fourth Engineer F. B. Hinckley and Engineer McMurtrie and Steward Fleming placed in irons, charged with plotting to delay the voyage.

June 22—A slight fire in the hold extinguished.

June 27—Eight feet of water on the lower decks, conduit pipes punctured.

July 4—Engineer Prendergast threw himself overboard. Body recovered. Found both hands tied with large pipe between so he was unable to swim.

Now let us turn to a crew's story, as told by papers filed in a suit in the Municipal Court of New York City. The case will come to trial next autumn. On October 6, last, a vessel of the Northern Steamship Company left New York on a foreign voyage. Upon arrival at Rio de Janeiro the cooled drinking water of the crew was shut off, the chief engineer declaring that the tank was leaking. Nothing was done to fix the tank, and after drinking water of a temperature of 97 to 100 degrees for two days, the crew protested in a body to the captain. He did nothing for them, whereupon permission was asked to go before the American consul. This was at first refused, but finally a delegation of eight was allowed to visit the consulate, where they found the captain had preceded them and complained that they were Bolsheviki. It happened that seven of the crew had been born in Russia, but nearly all of this number had first papers as American citizens.

After some discussion it was promised that the water tank would be fixed, and the men returned to the ship. That night seven of the crew, including one American, were arrested on a charge of mutiny, taken ashore, and confined in jail for fifteen days. Mutiny, it will be recalled, can occur only on the high seas, and all that had happened had been in the harbor of Rio de Janeiro. From prison the men were taken in double irons aboard the steamship "Huron." The captain of this vessel protested against this manacling as unnecessary, and refused to transport the men in that condition. The prisoners were then taken aboard the steamship "Rushville" and carried to New Orleans. There they discovered that they were accused of complicity in the Wall Street bomb explosion, but although Department of Justice agents had them on the rack for five days, not a scintilla of evidence was produced against them, and they were released —penniless and without their wages.

These are two stories from a sea that is older than we are—a sea the conditions of life on which seem as hard to tame as the waves and the winds themselves. We can tame those conditions only as we tame human nature; and the nature of men who follow the sea is a little more untamable than that of most of the rest of us.—The Nation.

Americanization has made little headway among the unorganized foreigners employed by the Standard Oil Company at Bayonne, N. J. The work is retarded, says the chairman of welfare work, by shyster lawyers and real estate sharks. "So long as American crookedness is the foreigner's idea of America, it will be difficult to Americanize." he said.

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA BONDS

The public enterprises for which the bonds of North Dakota have been issued have been approved by the people at several State-wide elections, and the bonds have been tested and approved by all Courts, including the Supreme Court of the United States, by a unanimous decision. There can be no further appeal.

* * *

The North Dakota program of public service is not experimental. New York has erected at Gowanus Bay a State-owned elevator with a million and a quarter bushels capacity, and will erect one more at Oswego and another one at Buffalo. Among the States that have created rural credit banks or boards are South Dakota, Montana, Oklahoma, New York, Oregon and Wisconsin. In the States of Kansas, Illinois, Michigan and Minnesota the people are making strong efforts to get at least a partial control of farm credit into their own hands.

Seven hundred and fifty thousand people in the Minnesota twin cities pay on an average $1 per day for their food. How much of this ten and a half million per year does the farmer get? Very little. At least three-fourths of the cost to the consumer is made up of interest and transportation charges, commissions, additional commissions, profiteering pools, wholesale, jobbing and retail marketing charges. Can't we straighten out these old-fashioned, narrow and crooked trails?

MEN QUITTING ARMY

Discharges from the United States Army were requested by 20,000 enlisted men in the first ten days in July, according to figures made public by Secretary of War Weeks.

When Congress recently ordered the Army reduced to 150,000 men, it was objected to in some quarters on the ground that there is a moral obligation on the part of the Government to let the men serve until the end of their enlistment. Advocates of a smaller army showed that the enlistment paper the soldier signs permits authorities to release him any time they see fit, and that this disposes of the moral obligation claim.

The number of men who are demanding releases seems to surprise Army officials.

MOONEY CASE WON'T DOWN

The Mooney case will not down, says the New York Globe, which declares that "the case is of chief interest to the generality because it showed so clearly the dangers, under American systems of criminal prosecution, of what might be called legal lynching.

"It is important that justice be given Mooney, not primarily because it is unpleasant for him to spend his time in jail, but because otherwise the case will certainly serve as a precedent for other legal lynchings.

"There is a certain type of American, often very influential and used to having his own way, who needs to be taught sharply that when his desires clash with the law he cannot have his own way."

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Adders Come Forth

Tom L. Lewis, once international president of the United Mine Workers of America, but now in the employ of the coal operators as secretary of the operators' association in the New River field in West Virginia, was testifying before the Senate committee investigating the Mingo County mine strike.

He was earning the operators' silver. The Mingo operators had sent for him and put him on as a witness for their side.

"Do you consider the United Mine Workers of America, under their present leadership, to be a menace to the Nation?" he was asked.

"I certainly do," replied the bosses' witness.

"And do you consider," asked Attorney Houston for the union, "that the Operators' Association is a menace?"

"I do not," was Tom Lewis' reply.

That was the only question asked of him by the lawyer for the union. His former comrades were content to let the Senate committee judge of the testimony of a man who had gone over to the enemy after having been defeated for re-election to the highest office in the union. They were not surprised nor disturbed by his charge that the United Mine Workers had become dangerously radical, that it had endorsed the Plumb Plan of public ownership and democratic operation, or that the unionization of the remaining fields in West Virginia and Kentucky would be an injury to the Nation and to the cause of industrial peace.

Lewis did his best for his employers by trying to show that the conventions of the organization since 1912 had demanded the "full social value of the product" for the workers. He claimed that this would mean the virtual confiscation of the mines by labor and the Government.

Then the operators played another ex-union card. This one was C. C. Kennedy, secretary of the Kanawha Coal Operators' Association, who for seven years was president of District 17, in West Virginia, and who never had more than one thousand members in the district. Now the membership is between fifteen thousand and twenty thousand. Kennedy swore that he believed in the "open shop," and denied that free speech, freedom of the press or freedom of assemblage had been abridged in West Virginia. He answered Senator Kenyon's question as to whether a republican form of government was maintained in the State, by saying that he thought there was. Under further questioning, he admitted that the only fields in which there had been no disorder were the unionized fields.

Earlier in the week Senator McKellar lent interest to the hearings by challenging the honor of one Lively, a union member who became a secret operative inside his organization for the Baldwin-Felts detective agency. McKellar protested against the cowardly betrayal of the confidence of the men with whom he had taken an oath of fealty to the principles of the union. None of the operators blushed.

Temporarily closing the investigation, Chairman Kenyon stated that he could not set the date for their resumption at the scene of the trouble in Mingo County. As the operators have taken most of the time here in presenting testimony, the union will get first consideration in the number of witnesses to be heard in West Virginia.

Workers' Prospects Uncertain

The inquiry has proved what the whole country already had had an opportunity to learn through the labor and liberal press—that the coal operators of the Williamson field, Mingo County, have used the power of armed thugs and ruthless State cossacks, reinforced by local volunteer bands of anti-union business and professional men and scabs, to deprive the native coal miners of that field of the right to belong to a union. Strikers' tent colonies have been raided and shot up, men have been murdered in cold blood, rifles and machine guns and bloodhounds have been conspicuous, in this "law and order" campaign to save the operators' oligarchy from the peril of the union.

It would be too much to expect that Senator Kenyon and his associates would seriously undertake to restore civil liberty to the miners and their families. These people, standing their ground as best they can, are hounded and hunted like wild beasts by the mockery called law in West Virginia. And as though to typify the spirit in which the present political powers deal with labor, President Harding sent to the Senate this week the nomination of George McClintic, anti-union fanatic from Charleston, to be Federal Judge for the southern district of the State.

Strike Not Probable

Railroad labor negotiations go steadily forward. The railroad managers have not as yet either accepted or rejected the offer of the four running trades and the Switchmen to enter into joint conference for settlement of disputes as to rules and conditions of employment. If no answer is received before September 1, or if the managers refuse to enter the conference, or if a conference is held and proves a failure, the whole situation will be laid before the President, the Railroad Labor Board, Congress and the public. The membership of every railroad labor union will have had ample time in which to make up its mind, after full discussion of all the possibilities of the problem, as to whether a strike must be called.

H. E. Wills, legislative representative for the Locomotive Engineers, said that the railroad corporations have "made thousands of scabs" since company money financed the promotion of the unauthorized strike of switchmen, and that these scabs, driven from the brotherhoods for breaking of contracts, are being held in reserve by the companies. They are numerous enough to deal with a small walkout, but should the majority of the railroad workers quit work in self-defense this force will be powerless.

Autocratic Treatment

It appears that President Harding, treading in the footsteps of former President Taft in this as in other matters, has "investigated" the deportation from Arkansas of the international officers of three of the railroad brotherhoods who were directing the strike on the Missouri & North Arkansas Railroad. This strike was called to enforce an order of the U. S. Railroad Labor Board, violated by the receiver of the road, who was also its president or manager. The deported men came to Washington, saw Harding at the White House, and told him how this Federal receiver had organized the mob which kidnaped them and deported them from the State.

Harding's method of "investigatin," as explained by himself to a friend, was characteristic of Bourbon methods everywhere. He simply sent down to the man who organized the mob, and asked him for the facts! Having received a denial from the guilty party, he dismissed the whole matter with a shrug of the shoulders, and went outdoors to pose in a photograph with a new set of callers.

Strange as it may seem, the railroad workers are not satisfied with this system of royal justice.

Vicious Methods Revealed

John Skelton Williams furnishes the sensation of the week. The former Comptroller of the Currency, in a speech reproduced in the Congressional Record, charges that the Federal Reserve Board, which is the heart and brain of the financial system of the United States, deliberately "deflated" the small country banks by means of ruinously high charges for the use of loans, while granting huge sums to the big New York banks for speculative purposes at very low rates. He charges that W. P. G. Harding, head of the Board, encouraged this process, although Williams protested that it meant ruin to the farming and wage-working masses and to the small banks.

Williams has been summoned before a joint committee of Congress which is investigating the depression in farm prices. His charges seem to confirm the statement made by Jett Lauck before the Railroad Labor Board some months ago, that the Wall Street banking groups deliberately caused the financial collapse in this country in order to weaken labor and the farmers and to further enrich themselves.

EXPLORERS USE NEW FOOD

If Donald B. MacMillan and his six venturesome companions who sailed from Wiscasset, Maine, last week succeed in reaching Baffin Land in the frozen North, they probably will celebrate with a banquet on shipboard with such delicacies as "fresh" raspberries, spinach and green corn.

They have taken along a quantity of foodstuffs prepared by a new process of dehydration which, its sponsors claim, leaves the dried product capable of restoration to its original bulk, color and taste by soaking in water. The process is said to differ from ordinary drying methods in that the cell walls are not broken down during preparation.

In addition to fruits and vegetables, the MacMillan party's dehydrated food supply included roast beef hash, reduced to bits; unrecognizable fish, also capable of being made "fresh" and a few bales of grass for the party's dogs and catnip for the ship's cat.

The trade union is the prime conservator of individual liberty, as distinguished from the political club, the conservator of public liberty.

Always demand the Union Label!

SEEKING THE FACTS

tuting the International Seamen's Union of America, will cease with tomorrow night.

The shipowners offered us a reduction amounting to 25 per cent on wages and subsistence, and the abolition of all pay for overtime work. This took place in the month of January. We wrote them a letter offering to meet them to do the utmost possible to come to an understanding, to take effect immediately, and to run until April next, 1922. There was no meeting until the 19th of this month. Then they offered us conditions that were utterly impossible for us to accept. We countered with certain propositions which we deemed of absolute necessity for the upbuilding and preservation of the personnel of the Merchant Marine of America. They refused. We met them again on the 25th, and they refused to consider our proposals. This ended the meetings in New York.

Admiral Benson, chairman of the Shipping Board, called everybody interested to meet here in Washington on Wednesday, the 27th. There was a 10 per cent reduction in the cut proposed to us here, making it 15 per cent of the actual wages signed for on the articles; but the total cut would, under the rules proposed, be from 40 to 60 per cent of the actual income of the men employed; but no other change in the other things, except that in so far as the carrying out of the law was concerned, the Admiral declared himself entirely in favor of the carrying out of the law, and that he would do what he could to have the law enforced.

We submitted as a proposition that in the matter of employment the American citizen would have the preference for any rating which we would be qualified to fill, and that men with intention papers should have the next chance of employment, basing their preference among them upon the length of time that such intention papers had been held. This was refused. There were several other propositions made, and refused. Whereupon we made the offer to submit the entire question to you, declaring ourselves willing to accept whatever you should deem most advantageous to the building up of a Merchant Marine for the United States, and that in order to prevent any stoppage at all, the present condition should remain until you had an opportunity to act upon the situation. This was first refused by Admiral Benson, stating that he would not burden you with this matter. It was then peremptorily refused by the shipowners. We renewed our offer, and again were refused. Whereupon it was stated by us that we felt that we did not burden you by submitting our judgment to yours. We felt that we were doing our duty to you and to the Merchant Marine.

We now respectfully submit the matter to you in the firm faith that you will act for the development and maintenance of the Merchant Marine.

(Signed) W. S. RROWN,
President, Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association.
(Signed) ANDREW FURUSETH.
President, International Seamen's Union of America.
To the President of the United States.
The White House, Washington.

Without waiting for the President's answer to the seamen's letter, or to take any action in the premises, the owners on the next day, April 30, when the existing contracts had expired, excluded the men from the ships, and the lockout was on.

An examination of the history of these negotiations shows that there was never any serious objection on the part of the men to accept a cut of 15 per cent in wages. The men refused to accede, however, to the proposals in which the Shipping Board and private owners agreed, to wit:

(a) Denial of the right of the men to have a representative of the unions present when they sign on or are paid off;

(b) Abolition of the three watches or fifty-six-hour week for the men;

(c) Abolition of all pay for overtime;

(d) Reduction of subsistence allowance;

(e) The refusal to enter into any contract with the men exceeding six months, or which was not subject to termination on short notice.

That the Shipping Board, as charged by the men, used its great power through the allocation of ships to prevent the men making more favorable terms with shipowners is shown by the orders which it issued. I quote from the Journal of Commerce, May 7, 1921, mail edition, page 20:

Washington, May 5.

Admiral Benson declared today that any operating companies which violate instructions not to sign on men at the old wage scale, will have their vessels withdrawn. These statements from the Shipping Board chairman also declare between forty-five and fifty ships cleared today from various ports. Immediately following statement in the press this morning that several companies have taken on men at the old rate wage scale, Admiral Benson started an investigation to determine the truth of the report. It was said that the Polish-American Navigation Co., United States Transport Co., and the C. W. Morse Co., operators of Government vessels, had agreed to pay the former wages. "There will be no leniency for these companies," Admiral Benson said, "if it is found that the reports are correct."

When it is remembered that at the time this order or statement was issued, a number of the lines were ready to sign up with the men on terms more favorable than those offered by the Shipping Board, it is readily seen how this threat, which amounted to notice that allocations of ships would be withdrawn from such companies, operated to prevent a settlement. Besides this the American Ship Owners' Association, Chambers of Commerce, and other institutions of great financial power combined to destroy the resistance of the seamen by all means in their power. For example, here is a telegram, under date of May 4, 1921, sent by the executive officers of the seamen in San Francisco to their New York office, which reads:

Seafarers' Council interviewed Frey, of steamers "Yale" and "Harvard." Is paying scale and overtime as of 1920 and, in some instances, more. Not member of American Shipowners' Association. Stands alone in that respect on Pacific Coast. Is desirous of meeting all demands of organization, but fears to sign twelve months' agreement, on account of Chamber of Commerce in Los Angeles and San Francisco, who would bring influence to have his fuel supply stopped. Immense pressure is being brought to bear on Vice-President and General Manager Frey from American Shipowners' Association and other sources, as shown us by telegrams. Council favors operation on these two boats only, with no other exceptions, in view of knowledge at their hands and existing circumstances.

In addition to this, I have in my possession original affidavits, which, if they are true, show coercion and deception on the part of the agents of the Shipping Board in procuring men to sign up for sea duty. I also have a blank form of a letter purported to be signed by a representative of the Shipping Board and used in sending nonunion men, with their expenses paid from Chicago to Seattle, to take the place of union seamen. I do not care to put these original documents into the Record, but will be glad to submit them to the committee which undertakes the investigation under the resolution I have offered.

Not only have the new members of the Shipping Board done nothing of which I am aware to repudiate the acts of their predecessors, but they appear to have ratified and confirmed them. In the report of the proceedings of the convention of the American Federation of Labor held in Denver, I find the following, purporting to be a press dispatch from Washington under date of June 17, 1921:

The "open shop" will be strictly enforced in the American Merchant Marine, Chairman Lasker, of the Shipping Board, announced Thursday. Mr. Lasker emphasized that there will be no discrimination against union seamen, provided they make no attempt to harass non-unionists or men who were hired to fill their places in the recent strike.

In the same report appears a telegram sent from the seamen's representatives in Washington to the president of the International Seamen's Union, at Denver, which says:

Representatives of the Atlantic district union this morning officially met with O'Connor and Benson, as subcommittee for the new Shipping Board, at which undersigned were present. Both commissioners stated plainly that the new board would not give unions' agents privilege of visiting docks or ships. They also definitely stated that no new agreement would be ratified for longer than six months.

As illustrative of the attitude of the great labor bodies of this country, I quote further from the resolution adopted by that convention and contained in the published reports of its proceedings, in which it is directly charged:

That the Government, with its power and money, is to create, foster, and perpetuate the non-union shop, proscribing the union men; and, second, that there is to be a further general reduction of wages in January, 1922.

Again, in the same resolution, it is said:

The United States Shipping Board is now, while hiding behind the smoke screen of hostility to trade unions, torpedoing the Merchant Marine and sea power of these United States.

It will be said by some that this is prejudiced testimony. I am not discussing that. It is the testimony of all organized labor in this country concerning the United States Shipping Board. If it represents an erroneous view, it should be corrected by giving the widest publicity to the truth. If it represents the correct view, then certainly the public is entitled to know it.

That this view is not peculiar to organized labor appears from the article of Horace B. Drury in the Journal of Political Economy, volume 29, January, 1921, where, in the course of a most friendly discussion of the workings of the Shipping Board, he says:

The practical operations of the Shipping Board have, to a very large extent, been in the hands of a small group of shipping men, who represented in their former associations a group particularly hostile to trade unionism.

AID THE UNEMPLOYED

Denver.—As an aid in relieving unemployment, all State Federations of Labor and Central Labor bodies are instructed to urge State, county and city governments "to immediately make provision to carry on such public works as they now may have under consideration," in a resolution adopted at the recent convention of the American Federation of Labor.

"The present period of unemployment is causing great suffering among the wage-earners and their dependents," the resolution states.

"It is apparent that a portion of this industrial depression is artificial and was manufactured by profiteering for the purpose of lowering living and working standards, weaken the organized labor movement and break the morale and spirit of the workers."

Those who describe the strike as a measure of "brute force" should remember that, after all, nothing is accomplished by thought or talk alone.

Labor News

Paper makers of Salem, Oregon, have organized under the international union of that craft.

Following a cut in longshoremen's wages at Portland, Ore., announcement has been made of a reduction in the wages of grain handlers from 70 to 62½ cents per hour.

The San Francisco Allied Printing Trades Council has recommended to all affiliated unions that they participate in the parade that will be a feature of the Labor Day celebration on Monday, September 5.

In addition to working out a plan for payment of unemployment benefit to its members, the San Francisco local of Machinists' Union has under consideration the establishment of a summer camp. Such a camp may be made a permanent institution.

At Peoria, Ill., the Plumbers' and Steam Fitters' Unions have adjusted their strikes and signed a union-shop contract for three years. Last year's rates for steam fitters have been accepted and the plumbers agree to a reduction of 50 cents a day.

Abolition of the annual agreement plan, termination of their recognition of the California Oil Workers' Union and a sweeping wage cut of $1 a day in all lines of oil-field labor, to become effective on September 1, are high lights of a program agreed on by operators in the industry in this State.

After three weeks of negotiations in New York the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America has renewed last year's rates with the following press associations: United Press, United News, International News Service and Universal Service. Attempts were made to cut wages 20 per cent with a general reduction of working conditions.

The limit of injunction abuse was reached recently at Tacoma, Wash., when Judge Askren ruled that the Tacoma Labor Advocate could not be sold near a struck bakery in the city. The Court holds that this is picketing. How this compares with employers' methods in untruthful newspapers is well known to unionists.

After a two weeks' strike organized cloak makers of Philadelphia won a complete victory in the shops of cloak jobbers and sub-manufacturers. The union has also secured an agreement with the Cloak Manufacturers' Association. Former standards are retained and the employers agree not to send work to shops that are unfriendly to the union.

There are eight million women in this country engaged in gainful occupations, said Dr. Amelia Henry Reinhardt, of Oakland, Cal., in an address to the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs. She said that 50 per cent of the women are teachers and 37 per cent occupy secretarial positions. Only sixteen hundred have graduated in law.

Striking bookbinders employed by the R. R. Tigley Company at Long Island City, were surprised to learn that their boss had secured a decree in the Supreme Court Justice Cohalan made the announcement and issued an injunction against picketing. The company made the usual claim to Justice Cohalan that its plant is running at top speed. The Court thereupon, ended the strike and affirmed that picketing is unlawful. The only difficulty with the decree is that the bookbinders reject the honorable Court's decision.

World's Workers

Profiteers have taken advantage of the malaria epidemic in tropical Argentine to raise the price of quinine to $200 a pound. The prohibitive price has caused many deaths among the poor.

A general strike proclaimed by the extremist parties at Rome as a protest against recent outbreaks at Grosseto and Montreotendo, in which numerous Communists and Fasciati were killed, has been initiated. The authorities are taking vigorous precautions to maintain order.

Labor disputes at Kobe, Japan, have been marked by bloody fighting. Rioting occurred recently, in which it is estimated fifty persons were wounded and a sanguinary clash occurred when seven thousand shipyard strikers paraded to a local shrine. The paraders were stopped at the Temple gates by five hundred police, who attacked with sabers and clubs. Many workmen were wounded, some seriously. One hundred infantrymen were called out to reinforce the police. The situation continues menacing. The municipal assembly has adopted resolutions condemning the police for using swords.

In his speech at the opening session of the Chamber of Deputies the king of Italy urged that the law makers strengthen the various co-operative institutions with a view to promoting other forms of labor associations; that the working classes be given an opportunity to learn self-government in relation to their economic life; that all social welfare institutions be supported, and the various insurance societies and funds strengthened; that representatives of all classes be called upon to express an opinion on the serious labor problem, and that, in carrying out these recommendations, the strictest impartiality be preserved in regard to all shades of opinion.

The Government of Belgium has annulled Article 310 of the penal code which imposed exceptional penalties on persons who, "with the object of bringing about an increase or decrease in wages, should interfere with the free exercise of industry or labor by means of violence, threats, fines, prohibition, interdictions or proscriptions, or by meetings or by acts of intimidation directed against those who work themselves or cause work to be done." On its face, the Article seems only applicable to threats and violence, but it has been interpreted against trade unions and has been an obstacle to the development of trade association and the free exercise of the right to strike.

Czecho-Slovakia at the present moment is inundated with articles of luxury, which while building up big profits for certain individual capitalists, are impoverishing the country. The large manufacturers recently instituted a series of lockouts against the workers. In the district of Aussig alone thousands of workers have been forced into the streets. In the same way in the districts of Bodenbach and Karlsbad, and also in that of Eger, unemployment is chronic. The workers have in many parts of the country proceeded to the occupation of the factories. In the north of Bohemia the German section of the Communists Party is very powerful. The north of Bohemia moreover is a most important country from the industrial point of view. There the textile and glass industries, and also that of engineering, have developed intensely.

Domestic and Naval

The steamer "Seekonk," from Mobile for Hamburg, was towed into Falmouth last week with her boilers in need of repairs.

Cunard Line officials report that its liner "Mauretania," which caught fire recently at Southampton, England, was not as badly damaged as first dispatches stated.

Three men were killed and five seriously injured by an explosion on board the steamer "Ardmore" while the vessel was lying at the Morses' drydock in New York.

When the W. R. Grace steamer arrived at Port Townsend last week from ports of the West Coast it was reported that the vessel had been delayed in several ports by strikes of marine workers.

The Shipping Board freighter "Quillwark," from Glasgow for Hampton Roads, arrived at Brest July 11 for repairs to her bunkers and boilers. The vessel sailed from the French port July 19.

There is a shortage of 1,250,000 houses in America, according to John Ilder of the United States Chamber of Commerce. "The people of America, because of this, are beginning to accept a lower standard of living," he said.

All civilian employes of the United States Navy in San Francisco and vicinity are to be affected by the general order putting all navy yards and stations on a five-day week basis of operation temporarily, according to announcement at the Twelfth Naval District headquarters.

Making five knots an hour, the big United States Shipping Board freighter "Liberty Land," en route to San Francisco from Norfolk, loaded with coal for the Navy Department, limped into San Pedro with engine trouble. The extent of the damage is at present unknown.

A recent cablegram to the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce stated that the freighter "West Henshaw," which went aground in Manila harbor, had been floated. A survey revealed that the vessel was leaking slightly in her double bottom, but that the craft was proceeding to Hongkong.

Orders have been received at local naval headquarters that the army transport "Great Northern," which has been laid up for many months, is to enter regular service for the navy. The vessel has been moved from Sausalito to the transport dock and will shortly be placed in commission.

The United States Shipping Board freighter "Major Wheeler," built during the war at the Hanlon shipyards, is reported to have encountered engine trouble on the high seas while en route from Charleston to Bremen. The message said the engineers were trying to effect repairs at sea, but it may be necessary to put into New York.

The Shipping Board recently laid charges before Assistant United States District Attorney Wilford H. Tuffs that members of the crew of the Shipping Board steamer "West [illegible]" had cut the lines of the steamer "Des Moines Bridge," getting the vessel adrift, put water in the latter's oil supply and in the cargo holds while the vessels were in harbor at Dublin together. The "West [illegible]" had a union crew and the "Des Moines Bridge" a non-union crew, and this, it is alleged, resulted in the hostilities.

The German minesweeping fleet that has been operating in the Kola bight on the Northern Russian coast is reported in a special dispatch from Vardoe, Norway, to have been fired on by Russian land forts. The German fleet returned the fire, but no damage is reported on either side. The German fleet, which left Wilhelmshaven a week ago to clear the White Sea of mines under the provisions of the Versailles Treaty, has retired to Vardoe to await further developments.

There is an estimated excess of 100,000,000 bushels of the 1920-21 Australian wheat crop, more than domestic normal consumption demands, according to a survey reported to the United States Department of Agriculture by the American consul at Melbourne. The present crop is estimated at 134,000,000 bushels, and is larger than any crop since 1918, and nearly three times as large as last year's crop. This wheat is pooled and under Australian Government supervision.

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

GERMAN LABOR LAWS

The Effect of Labor Regulations Under The New German Republic

By L. Krause, of Germany

The new German labor law is characterized by an important preference given to the employees in opposition to the former law. It consists, on the one hand, in a material improvement of the working conditions, but, above all, of the wages and working hours. Further advantages are the acknowledgment of the professional organizations of workmen, the abrogation of all existing restrictions of the right of coalition and the introduction of the constitutional principle instead of the former absolutistic one. That principle is carried through in the workmen's committee laws up to the most extreme consequences.

The personal ties between employer and employee have been loosened more and more. The latter faces the employer no longer as an individual but merely as a member of a labor organziation (trade union) which has undertaken to safeguard his interests, and which in exchange requires him to submit entirely to its decisions.

The accomplishment of the duties imposed upon the employer is controlled by the State; it can be enforced by penalties. A most characteristic feature of the new legislation is the strengthened position of authorities. Their collaboration in fixing the working conditions has grown to a degree quite unknown up till now. Thus, these authorities have the right to declare collective contracts binding, not only for the parties concerned, but for people in general; and, whenever a quarrel arises on the subject of working conditions, especially on wages, they can make compulsory awards.

Since the revolution these collective contracts have enjoyed a great furtherance and have been much extended. Formerly they were mostly applied for settling the hourly wages, but today they are extended to almost all questions touching labor conditions. The fundamental rules referring to collective contracts are contained in the regulation of collective contracts and the settlement of labor disputes of December 23, 1918. This regulation has for its special object to settle some questions of particular interest, above all the "invariability" of the stipulations of the tariff (wages). This has to be understood that labor contracts are invalid in so far as they differ from a settlement on the base of the tariff. However, the invalidity of single rules shall not be attended by the inefficiency of the whole labor contract. On the contrary, according to a special prescription of the law, the inefficient rules are replaced by the respective stipulations of the collective contract. Deviations from the latter are in general only admitted in two cases: first, in so far as the collective contract itself admits of such differing regulations. This may be the case for instance for workmen who are unable to do the full amount of work. Secondly, in favor of the workmen. Therefore, for the latter the conditions of the collective contracts are only minimum conditions.

By principle the effect of the collective contract is limited to the concerned parties only. In the first place it comprises the contracting parties, i. e., single employers and unions of employers or employees who have passed the collective contract or who became subsequent parties to the same; but the former legislation did not know any liability of the collective contract beyond those who were practically touched by the latter. At present, authorities are entitled to declare collective contracts generally binding on the following conditions: the collective contract proposed to become generally binding must previously have had a dominant importance in the trade in question, i. e., it ought to have served as a rule for the majority of workmen of the trade and within the district concerned. The generally binding stipulations of the contract are applicable to all labor contracts in so far as the latter are subject to them with regard to locality and trade. The employer need not be a contractor in the trade whose working conditions are regulated by the collective contract. Thus, a collective contract declared generally binding in the building trade is not only binding for the building contractor, but, for instance, also for the owner of machine works who occupies builders' men or for the owner of a house who charges them with repairs.

Although hourly wages have been the rule since the revolution, yet task-work is by no means abolished and it is exactly regulated by the collective contracts. Up to the time of the revolution, the task-work conditions were drawn up in most cases with regard to the interests of the employer, but those which are now in force also safeguard the interests of the employees. Formerly the rate of the task was based on the work of the best and speediest workers, whereas it depends now upon the time spent by an average workman in doing the work. Therefore most workmen are now able to keep the time per piece on which the price is based, without tiring themselves out and without impairing their health. Those men who are above the average thus earn a surplus amount of wages corresponding to their greater output due to more intense and skillful work. The present German collective contracts calculate without exception the price per piece of work according to the output of an average workman.

In general these contracts put the earnings by task-work into a determined proportion to the wages fixed per hour. They fix a so-called excess of task-work by which task-work can exceed hourly wages. According to most collective contracts the rate for task-work is by 10 per cent to 25 per cent higher than the rate fixed for time. As a case in point, it can be mentioned that the collective contract of the metal industry at Essen determines that "for average work under normal conditions, task-work wages of 10 per cent over the hourly wages agreed upon are allowable." According to the contract in force in the German wood trades all the task-work rates are fixed, "that with an average work within the regular working time an amount of 115 per cent of the average wage stipulated by contract is realized." In the contract of the piano industry surplus earnings of at least 12½ per cent must be realized. In the German brush and lead pencil industry at least 20 per cent. In the porcelain industry at least 25 per cent.

In addition, the collective contracts contain a great number of safeguards which protect the task-worker against a reduction of his earnings in case of an undeserved prolongation of the time per piece. The contract for the textile industry in northern Bavaria stipulates, for instance: if the material is heavily running, an extra amount has to be granted so that the average rate for task-work may be reached. The contract of the metal industry at Zwickan (Saxony) stipulates: involuntary waiting for material and tools has to be paid for according to the hourly wages agreed upon, provided the workman announces the default in time. The collective contract of the clock industry in the Black Forest stipulates: if a workman attends to several machines, one or several of which are stopped without his fault, he is entitled to an indemnification for the lacking machines at the rate of the regular hourly wages.

Furthermore, the collective contracts often contain stipulations which render the arbitrary reduction of the task-work rate, formerly very common with employers, quite impossible and in this way they fully secure the task-worker the fruit of his work. The collective contract of the metal industry in Brandenburg, for instance, stipulates that task-work rates can not be changed or only in cases when other working methods, machines, tools or materials are used. The contract of the metal industry in Wurtemberg stipulates: fixed task-work rates can only be reduced if the change is founded on an alteration of the working methods, technical improvements or essential changes of the number of pieces for parts to be manufactured at the same time, or in case a very obvious and heavy error has been committed in the calculation. It ensues that the claims of the workmen, which they upheld before the revolution with regard to task-work, have now been almost fully complied with. It must still be mentioned that also the questions of guaranteed wages on account payments, disputes referring to task-work, etc., have been so well regulated by the collective contracts that the majority of the working people raise no objections to them.

The fact that the German working people are generally satisfied with the forms that have been given to task-work and that there is no oppositon by principle to the task-work system any more is proved by the following judgments pressed upon it by three large unions. The German Woodworkers' Union writes: "Most of the workmen are of opinion that, provided the stipulations of the collective contract are strictly carried out, any prejudicial effect of the task-work can be obviated."

The opinion of the German union of textile workers is as follows: "In our industry no complaints can be heard of the task-work system. This satisfaction is, above all, owing to the stipulation that the highest hourly wages agreed upon serve as a base for fixing the task-work rates. It is not allowed to do task-work below the hourly wages. In many cases the collective contracts have been so far developed that even in case of bad work, task-workers are entitled to the average task-work rate."

The Union of China Workers gives the following judgment: "Since the wages and working conditions have been settled by contract between employers and workmen's unions, much has changed with reference to task-work in favor of the workmen." Thus the collaboration of the workmen in fixing the wages is assured. All wages per piece have to be reckoned according to task-work rates fixed by contract, i. e., not according to maximum but average output. For similar articles the wages must be the same, also for home-workers they are not allowed to be reduced. The lists of prices and wages must always be open to workmen. The weak workman is warranted minimum wages also for task-work. The possibility to realize higher earnings in hourly wages without running the risk of seeing them reduced at the will of the employer renders the workman now more inclined to accept task-work and cases occur where the workmen themselves demanded task-work instead of the work per hour customary before.—American Federationist.

REAL FACTS NEEDED

Just returned from Russia, where for a month he was the only Non-Communist journalist, Lewis Gannett publishes his first article, "Is Russia Abandoning Communism?" in The Nation for August 10. Mr. Gannett corroborates Senator France's opinion, published July 31, that trade should at once be established between America and Soviet Russia. The new economic policy of stimulating small industry and peasant production involves a definite compromise of the principles of Communism.

"Whatever you call it, they are changing their policy, both in home economics and foreign politics. For the sake of British trade, they have agreed to abandon revolutionary propaganda in British Asia, and to the great regret of Indian revolutionaries they are keeping their promise. They have given up hope of immediate revolution in Western Europe and are negotiating with capitalist governments, bargaining and compromising to obtain the needed locomotives, agricultural machinery and electrical material; they are devoting themselves, primarily, to the problem of economic reorganization at home, and care little what elements of the original program must be sacrificed."

This is made imperative by the economic collapse and extreme famine.

"West European countries, nearly three years after the armistice, are only beginning to recuperate; Russia, after years of war, naturally lags behind them. * * *

"The only real opposition to the Bolsheviks inside Russia today is a Left opposition which, by whatever name it calls itself, is in tendency and fact anarchistic, and which, if it succeeded in overtoppling the Bolsheviks, could for the present only plunge the country into chaos and worse hunger. It is an opposition which resents concession to foreign capitalists, which rejects the bourgeois specialists who are reorganizing some of the factories and should return to the system of direct collective management of the factories by their workers. * * * A rabidly anti-bolshevist engineer said to me: 'Lenin and Trotzky must stay. They are the only men capable of organizing Russia. They alone can inspire discipline. Indeed, the Communists are the only disciplined people in undisciplined Russia—that is their power.'"

Mr. Gannett expresses his own estimate of the Soviet leaders thus:

"Where western statesmen look months ahead, Lenin, Trotzky and Bukharin look years ahead; where others play checkers, they play chess. They work out the complicated interplay of economic factors; they care not a rap for prestige and are ready to abandon any cherished policy if it proves a failure."

SUPREME COURT vs. CIVIL LIBERTY

A striking little pamphlet showing the startling restrictions on free speech, free press and the right of labor to organize, strike and picket, has just been issued by the American Civil Liberties Union. It is entitled, "The Supreme Court vs. Civil Liberty," and gives the essential points of seven cases decided since 1917, under which every traditional American right of free expression of opinion has been set aside. In all the cases Justices Brandeis and Holmes delivered dissenting opinions, the gist of which is quoted in full.

Three cases cited are under the Espionage Act: that of Jacob Abrams, Mollie Steimer and others at New York; the editors of the Philadelphia Tageblatt, and Pierce and others in New York for distributing Irwin St. John Tucker's "The Price We Pay." Another case involves the Minnesota State Sedition Act, another the mailing privilege of the "Milwaukee Leader," and two the rights of labor to organize and boycott, involved in the Hitchman Coal Co. case in West Virginia, and the Duplex Printing Co. case in New York.

In introducing the opinions, Albert De Silver, one of the union's directors, says:

"In respect to freedom from unlawful searches and seizures, the Supreme Court, in a number of decisions culminating with the recent case of Gouled vs. United States (Feb. 28, 1921), has so clarified and extended previous decisions that a liberal interpretation of the constitutional provision is now assured.

"However, in respect to all the other phases of civil liberty mentioned above, the Supreme Court has gone over to the side of reaction. By judicial construction it has forged a powerful weapon for those who believe in governmental suppression of ideas deemed to be dangerous."

Since the new members of the present Shipping Board took office, the marine engineers—who must be distinguished from the so-called deck engineers—have signed a six months' agreement accepting a 15 per cent cut in wages, and agreeing substantially to the other conditions laid down by the Shipping Board and the private owners respecting the union which I have enumerated. Marine engineers are, of course, really licensed officers, and their pay is about double that of the ordinary seamen. This so-called settlement, of course, means that the whole question will be reopened by this organization, in January. There has been no settlement, however, with the groups constituting the International Seamen's Union. The strike has merely been declared off on the Atlantic Coast, which means that many thousands of the seamen will leave the sea service in fact, already have done so—and that others will make the best terms for themselves possible, renewing the struggle at a more opportune time.

Our entire force of seamen is, therefore, dissatisfied, and smarting under a sense of wrong and injustice. Those who intend to continue in the marine service are only waiting the time when the demand for seaman will enable them to open the battle again with greater hope of success.

How different is the situation presented by our chief maritime competitor, Great Britain, and, in fact, every other country with whom we must compete upon the seas. The responsible authorities in Great Britain adopted exactly the opposite course from that pursued by our Shipping Board. Instead of making war upon the seamen's organizations, she has fostered and encouraged them. The Government, with the assistance of the unions, has established training schools from which the boys are sent on board ships to serve their apprenticeship in order to become able seamen. This practice of shipping boys or young men on board ship to learn the business was adopted to some extent in our Merchant Marine by agreement with the unions during the war, and the United States Shipping Board abandoned the practice at the first opportunity.

The result of the British policy is that British seamen have accepted a wage cut of £2 10s. per month, amounting to about 15 per cent of their war-time wage, other conditions remaining unchanged, and as a consequence the seamen's unions of that country are working in harmony with the shipowners to extend British maritime trade.

I am permitted to quote from a letter under date of June 14, last, written by J. Havelock Wilson, member of Parliament, president of the Sailors' and Firemen's Union of Great Britain and Ireland, and also a member of the maritime board, in which, writing to Mr. Furuseth, president of the International Seamen's Union of America, he said:

> It seems strange to me that the owners in America are so strong on the "open shop," whereas the owners on this side are doing everything they can to make it the "closed shop." . . . As a matter of fact the great majority of the owners have turned the entire shipping of men over to us, and many of them have expressed the view that they do not know how they could do without us.

This is one particular, at least, in which we could well afford to learn from our great maritime rival.

A careful review of the controversy between the American seamen and the shipowners shows that the question of wages was secondary; that the men were at all times willing to sit down with the owners and revise the working rules; that it was the conditions on board the vessels and the conditions attendant upon the signing on and paying off of the men that were the primary points of dispute, for in this was involved the question whether or not the men would remain at sea, and whether or not we could have a Merchant Marine manned by American sailors. The fight which the seamen have been making is much more than a fight for themselves. They have been making a fight upon the issue of which depends the question whether we shall have an American Merchant Marine or not.

The wages which they have offered to accept are far below that necessary to maintain an American standard of living. According to the Monthly Labor Review for December, 1919, the cost in August and September of 1919 of maintaining a family of five at the health and decency level was $2,126.47.

Of the budget referred to, the Monthly Labor Review said:

> It was intended to establish a bottom level of health and decency, below which a family cannot go without danger of physical and moral deterioration. This budget does not include many comforts, which should be included in a proper American standard of living.

While the above and all similar figures are more or less approximations, they demonstrate conclusively that the wages received by seamen, even their war wages, if you please, do not permit a decent standard of living. On such wages no sailor could hope to maintain a home, however humble, or support a wife and children.

I am aware that it is said that seamen's wages must be reduced in line with the policy of economy demanded of the Shipping Board. Look at the facts for a moment. Admiral Benson, testifying before the Subcommittee on Appropriations, May 9, 1921—see page 551 of the hearings—said:

> I think that the question of wages is always a little exaggerated, because under any system it is not much over 10 per cent of the total cost of operation.

I think the figures usually given are from 7 to 8 per cent, but accepting Admiral Benson's figures, it follows that out of every thousand dollars' cost of operating a ship, 10 per cent, or $100, would represent the seamen's wages. Fifteen per cent of this, which is the reduction insisted upon by the Shipping Board and agreed to by the men, is $15. Therefore, it follows that the proposed reduction in wages would only amount to $15 out of every thousand dollars cost of operation, or $1500 out of every hundred thousand dollars cost of operation.

The mistake of an unskilled or inefficient crew in looking after the machinery, or in the amount of fuel unnecessarily consumed, would more than offset this so-called wage saving in a single voyage. It is not a question of wages at all. It is a question of destroying the men's organizations, and of subjecting them to working conditions which they will not stand, and ultimately a question of driving the American seamen and the American Merchant Marine from the sea.

Think for a moment of the profits made and the surplus accumulated by every steamship company that has been engaged in business during the last five years. I have before me the figures showing the profits made, and surplus accumulated by the principal ones. I am not going to stop to read them. They are fabulous.

Compare these profits with the $75 or $100 a month received by even the able seamen, and it is obvious that the real controversy does not hinge upon saving a few dollars by cutting the monthly wages of the men. Besides all this, American shipowners are already given a subsidy by their exemption from taxation, providing only they will put the money back into new construction, which far more than equalizes any difference in wages that may exist between this and other countries. I refer to section 23 of what is commonly called the Jones Act. (See Congressional Record of March 3, 1921, p. 4687.)

I am not aware that American seamen have ever claimed special credit for helping to win the World War. They are entitled, none the less, to great credit for the heroic and patriotic part they played in that work. Early in the war the representatives of all American seamen joined with the Shipping Board, with the Secretary of Labor, and with the private owners in an earnest appeal for all American seamen to return to American ships. More than that: At their convention in Buffalo, N. Y., December 3 to 12, 1917, they issued and gave nation-wide publicity to the following call:

A Call to the Sea

To all seafaring men ashore or afloat:

The International Seamen's Union of America, in annual convention assembled, representing the organized seamen of America, submits the following to all men of seafaring experience, ashore or afloat:

The Nation that proclaimed your freedom, now needs your services. America is at war. Our troops are being transported over the seas. Munitions and supplies are being shipped in everincreasing quantities to our armies in Europe. The bases are the ports of America. The battle fields are in Europe. The sea intervenes. Over it the men of the sea must sail the supply ships. A great emergency fleet is now being built. Thousands of skilled seamen, seafaring men of all capacities, who left the sea in years gone by as a protest against the serfdom from which no flag then offered relief, have now an opportunity to return to their former calling, sail as free men, and serve our country.

Your old shipmates, men who remained with the ship to win the new status for our craft, now call upon you to again stand by for duty. Your help is needed to prove that no enemy on the seas can stop the ships of the Nation whose seamen bear the responsibility of liberty.

America has the right, a far greater right than any other nation, to call upon the seamen of all the world for service. By responding to this call now, you can demonstrate your practical appreciation of freedom won.

All men of seafaring experience can get further information on this subject by applying to any representative of the United States Shipping Board or to any officer or representative of the International Seamen's Union of America, or any of its district organizations. It should be understood that this statement is not issued because of any real shortage of men at this time. We must be prepared, however, to man the great new merchant fleet, now building. Men must be ready, and in training. It is in recognition of this need that we, as a duty to the Nation, submit this call to all seamen.

International Seamen's Union of America

After the war was over and the victory won, Robert P. Bass, director of the Industrial Relations Division, in his report to the United States Shipping Board under date of February 1, 1919, had this to say of American seamen:

The most serious aspect of the marine and dock labor situation, however, was not the expansion or the danger, but the extreme need for continuous and efficient labor and the ease with which groups or individuals might have delayed traffic. As time passed, the possibility of any interruption of traffic became constantly a matter of greater and greater national concern. The whole situation, indeed, was such as to afford unusual temptation to the men to try to take things into their own hands, and there were a few industries where there were better opportunities or more dangers in the matter of enemy propaganda. . . .

Fortunately for the success of the allied cause, no such disaster occurred. . . . The burden placed upon marine and longshore employes was carried loyally and successfully. . . . Not only was a tremendous volume of material handled effectively, but in the whole field of marine and dock labor there was no serious disaffection or interruption of traffic during the period while the United States was at war. As far as the licensed officers and seamen on vessels were concerned, the elimination of strikes was practically complete, which was also true of the crews on harbor craft and barges. . . .

The successful operation of America's merchant fleet during the war was to a very large extent due to the patriotism and sound leadership which prevailed among the men.

These are the men who now justly complain that the Government which they labored so heroically and patriotically to serve has, through the United States Shipping Board, denied them the opportunity to work on American ships at a decent wage and under decent conditions. One of the first results of the labor policy of the Shipping Board will be, that the extremely turbulent element of the seamen's organizations, encouraged thereby, are now trying to secure

Reports from Rogue River indicate the salmon run is very light this year, but the time is near at hand when the big run always occurs, that is, near the middle of August.

Two Japanese steamers have been chartered by Mitsui & Co. to load lumber at Gray's Harbor and the Columbia River for Japan. The vessels are the Kaisho Maru, 4424 tons, and the Yeikoku Maru No. 2. 4423 tons.

Local steamship men have been notified that orders will soon be placed in the Northwest for 40,000,000 feet of fir ties for shipment to the Atlantic side. Ten 9000-ton vessels would be required to carry such a consignment.

Shipping companies at Vancouver, B. C., who are interested in the Vancouver-Australian trade, have decided to meet San Francisco's recent cut in rates. After September 1 canned salmon will move from British Columbia to Australian ports for $16 instead of the present rate of $18. Building paper and roofing drooped from $15 to $12, doors and inside finishings in lumber from $17.50 to $15 and steel rails from $15 to $11.

With the sailing of the steamer "Excelsior" from New Orleans for Havan August 6, regularly weekly sailings between the two ports will be re-established by the Southern Pacific Company's Atlantic steamship lines. The Southern Pacific's Atlantic steamship lines form a link in the company's Sunset-Gulf route, over which western freight is moved both to Cuba and New York. Service between Havana and New Orleans was interrupted during July, but with the sailing of the "Excelsior," a regular schedule will be maintained again. Both passengers and freight are carried.

The freighter "Canadian Exporter," which grounded in Willapa during a dense fog, broke amidships and the two parts lay at right angles. The breaking up of the ship was witnessed by the crew of a revenue cutter standing a few hundred yards away. The ship seemed to be lying easily on a spit, and, as the tide came in, the swells began to break quite heavily. The ship was seen to give a lurch and parted in the middle. The bow swinging toward the shore with the current. A small tender from the cutter was busy taking off members of the crew, but there was little danger, as the sea was not rough.

Because she is foreign built and is owned by a corporation in which American citizens own less than 75 per cent of stock, the steamer "China" of the China Mail Steamship Company, Limited, which runs into San Francisco, is prohibited by the Merchant Marine Act from carrying passengers in the coastwise trade according to Attorney General Harry Daugherty. Daugherty stated, however, that the "China" might continue to carry passengers between San Francisco and Honolulu until February, provided a permit was obtained from the United States Shipping Board. The "China" was admitted to American registry by special Act of Congress in 1898 and has been plying between San Francisco and Hawaii for several years. She was formerly the crack liner of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

I have said that I would never be attorney for shipowners, until the seamen were shipowners. One of the purposes of my visit to Europe this summer is to acquire knowledge as to shipping conditions abroad and particularly to ascertain with what degree of success the seamen of Italy are operating ships.

Any seamen, who, with a view to becoming shipowners some time, are willing to form "a Seamen's Society for Savings" and will pledge to save one-fourth of their wages over their board and lodging per annum, said savings to be put in a depository that they themselves may select, please communicate with the undersigned.

Gold Standard Shaky

The gold standard as a basis for money is wabbly, according to Dr. R. Estcourt, writing in the Annalist, financial publication in New York.

For many years the gold standard was supposed to be as fixed as the solar system, and patriots have "fit, bled and died," for this belief only to be now told that this standard is a fiction and that numerous little nations in Europe have no gold and no interest in gold, and that "they can realize that a gold standard would increase their burdens by making it needful to acquire a supply of the metal at present prices in terms of their individual currencies. This would be good business for those who have gold to sell."

It is stated that 50 per cent of the gold in circulation is owned by the United States and that Great Britain and Japan are the only other powers that have gold.

"Thus, this country, the British Empire and Japan have a trade interest in the resumption of specie payments. Most others have a trade interest opposed to such resumption," it is stated.

"It is daily becoming more obvious that a return to the gold basis is quite impossible with the present political map of Europe. Either that must be changed or the gold standard must be superseded. The gold standard to which we have been accustomed is a fiction. The standard as generally understood has long since disappeared, but gold remains the measure of value. That measure, however, will have to be abandoned in favor of some commodity that is present in all countries if we are to recognize the existing political divisions of Europe. Without extensive federation a gold basis is impossible outside a few countries possessing gold."

Dr. Estcourt takes occasion to hand this jab to the sales tax theory:

"The French Government has levied a sales tax which yields only about one-third of its estimate, so great has been its interference with business."

Bosses Are Incompetent

Let metal trades employers pay less attention to fighting trade unionism and more to their business, would be a good summary of a report issued by the committee on elimination of waste in industry of the American Engineering Council.

The report states that idle men and machinery are causing a loss of nearly a billion dollars a year in the metal trades industry. This estimate does not include the value of materials that could be utilized.

Instability of labor employment and faulty management, the committee said, are major causes of waste in this, the largest manufacturing industry in the United States, both in number of employees and value of products.

The average waste due to labor turnover mounts into millions, and most of this constant changing of labor can be avoided. Modern employment methods, embracing the study of "why men quit," are urged.

It is estimated that at present about 80 per cent of the responsiblity for waste, or non-production, rests with management, and it is declared that the need is imperative that the management of labor be elevated to a higher plane.

"We have 2,000,000 unnecessary 'separations,' the equivalent of 2,000,000 workers annually separated and rehired," says the report.

Manufacturers are called upon to hasten a return to normal conditions "by producing goods as economically as possible, so as to make selling prices low enough to attract buyers."

Will Fight Allen's Law

The Executive Board of the Kansas State Federation of Labor has started a publicity campaign to repeal Allen's "can't-strike" law. As an indication of the oppositon to this law outside of organized labor, the unionists all attention to the signed statement of the jury that convicted President Howat for violating the law. The judge instructed a jury to find a verdict of guilty, which they did. Then the jurors made a public statement that they believed the industrial law was wrong. The jury was composed of ten farmers and two business men.

"We are convinced," the Federation officials say, "that if it is possible to win over to our way of thinking, a jury of farmers and business men, it is possible to convince the farmers throughout the State that the Industrial Court law should be repealed. The Kansas State Federation of Labor in conventon has twice condemned the court and pledged moral and financial support to the mine workers, who have stood the brunt of this battle. We must now do more effective work.

"Watch for the beginning of our campaign, which will start at once in the southeast and finally cover the entire State. When the crusaders reach your community lend them every possible assistance in their effort to carry the truth to the people."

Sid Hatfield Killed

Sid Hatfield, former Chief of Police of Matewan, was shot to death and C. E. Lively is charged with the crime.

Lively operated a restaurant at Matewan, and at the recent trial of Hatfield and others, who were accused of the death of Albert Feltz of the Baldwin-Feltz detective agency. Lively acknowledged that he was a detecive and that he operated the restaurant to spy on the miners.

At the recent hearing on the Mingo County lockout, conducted by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, in Washington, Lively testified that prior to his West Virginia experience he was a detective among Colorado miners. He said he killed a man in self-defense, surrendered and remained in jail for sixteen months, as he "did not want a trial." Later he was

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 10, 1921.

PLACE THE RESPONSIBILITY

While bound for San Francisco from Portland, the steamer "Alaska" struck on Blunt's Reef, off Cape Mendocino, last Saturday night.

To date, authentic information is meager, but over fifty persons are reported dead or missing, and the vessel will be a total loss.

If the statements of a number of the survivors are correct, the disaster establishes one of the most sordid records of cowardice and incompetence that ever disgraced a vessel's crew.

The first statements of those rescued can usually be accepted as most reliable or uncolored; therefore the following press reports from Eureka, where the victims of the wreck were taken, claim the most careful consideration:

Accusations that gross inefficiency of the crew, amounting almost to criminal negligence, was responsible for the high death toll of the steamer "Alaska," which crashed into the northern end of Blunt's Reef, were made by nine survivors who are in the Sequoia Hospital suffering from injuries received when the vessel went down.

They are: Arthur J. Franklin, Chicago; Owen Tevlin, Indianapolis; F. C. Germano, Portland, Ore.; Lew White, vaudeville actor, Seattle; Nathan Bass, 1005 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco; Edgar Horner, Oregon City; Jacob Wyzansky, retired merchant of Butte, Mont.; Mrs. Jacob Wyzansky, and U. P. Dyer, La Grande, Oregon.

Franklin charges the wreck was caused through inefficiency and that after the vessel struck practically all of the crew with the exception of the captain deserted the ship. He claims that the vessel was unseaworthy and that attempt was made to make up time lost by cutting in close to the coast.

Only Five Sailors

Franklin asserts, and in this he is borne out by other passengers and one of the engineers of the vessel, that only five men aboard had seamen's certificates. The crew, he declares, was made up of inexperienced men, student seamen.

"There was not one of the crew who knew his place," he said. "Not one of them knew how to handle the lifeboats. The vessel was on a course seventeen miles off the coast when its course should have been at least thirty-three miles off the coast. The vessel was unseaworthy and never should have been allowed to leave port. Two of the mates and the two wireless operators deserted the ship, in fact all of the crew except the captain left the steamer while passengers were aboard."

Charges Crew Inefficient

Dyer, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Dyer, 716 Eighteenth street, Oakland, also charged that the vessel was manned by an inefficient crew.

He said: "There were only five or six experienced seamen aboard, the others did not know what to do when the ship struck. This wreck with its terrible loss of life is the result of replacing experienced seamen with students."

Wyzansky, Mrs. Wyzansky and Bass assert that when the vessel struck the passengers were told by the officers that there was no danger and were ordered to their staterooms. This, they say, caused some of the passengers to lay aside the life preservers they were wearing.

Seamen Cut Ropes

All tell stories of how, when the lifeboats were being lowered, inexperienced seamen slashed the ropes, causing two boats to crash on boats below them filled with men and women, overturning them.

Mrs. Wyzansky, according to her husband, was stepping into a lifeboat when the ropes were slashed. Her boat crashed into a boat which had not been given time to leave the sinking steamer, overturning it and imperiling the lives of the occupants.

Several of the passengers, including Bass, maintain that the "Alaska" was plunging at full speed through a thick fog. The fog horn had been sounded thirteen times when the crash came, Bass declares. He holds that the vessel struck the reef twice, first without injury and just as the orders had come from the bridge to reverse the engines it struck again, tearing its bottom out.

Full Speed Ahead

S. A. Carlson of Seattle, third assistant engineer of the "Alaska," who was on watch at the time the vessel struck, admitted that the engines were full speed ahead. Carlson was one of the last men to leave the boat, plunging up from the engine room just as the vessel went down.

The passengers were unanimous in their praise of the rescue work carried on by the crew of the coast guard station and of the "Anyox" and of the care given them by the people of Eureka.

Without attempting to place any blame, or to comment on the conduct of the ship's crew, the coroner's jury reached a verdict of "Drowning, caused by the steamship 'Alaska' striking Blunt's Reef and sinking, precipitating some of the passengers and crew into the sea."

This stereotyped verdict does not altogether harmonize with the testimony which was of an altogether different character.

Henry Hanson of Fortuna examined three of the officers of the "Alaska" and three of the passengers. From their testimony the following facts appear to be established:

First—There was no heavy fog and the weather was good when the "Alaska" struck Blunt's Reef.

Second—No orders were issued to the passengers as to their distribution among the fifteen lifeboats.

Crew Not Trained

Third—The crew was not trained to handle the lifeboats and there were not enough men assigned to the work of launching them and manning them after they were launched.

Fourth—Some of the lifeboats lacked all auxiliary equipment, even sea plugs and oarlocks being missing.

Fifth—The "Alaska's" captain, undoubtedly among the lost, was in the wheelhouse and not on the bridge at the time the steamer first struck. He was last seen assisting two women to reach a lifeboat.

Sixth—Notwithstanding the lack of leadership from among the crew, the morale of the passengers was remarkable after the crash came.

The witnesses from among the passengers were George Goodall of Spokane, Miss Mabel Landberg of St. Paul and Nathan Bass of 1005 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco.

The officers who testified were William E. McClintock, first officer; G. G. Morgan, purser, and J. J. Mitchelson, radio operator.

Among the passengers, the most striking testimony was that of George Goodall, who said he had traveled since he was eleven years old, and had been all over the world.

"In my experience," he said, "crews are usually schooled in handling boats. In the case of the boat that capsized, while it really fouled the side of the ship, instructions to the crew were to lower this end or that end. If there had been a man directing on the boat deck, to give proper orders, the boat could have been held until all the passengers were on and then lowered properly. As it was, one end was dropped, while the other was suspended in air, and all the passengers were thrown into the water. That boat was not handled right."

Miss Mabel Landberg of St. Paul said that she was one of three cousins, who were separated at the time of the disaster. She and her cousins were in the boat that struck against the side of the "Alaska" and were pitched into the sea.

Summing up the testimony of passengers, it is evident that while there was a slight mist the weather was fine. That the sea was smooth is evidenced by the fact that a child was picked up by the United States Coast Guard crew in the vicinity of the wreck at daylight, after being kept afloat by a life preserver for about seven hours.

A number of passengers declare that the loss of life was aggravated by rank inefficiency which characterized the handling of lifeboats, and there are further complaints as to the poor condition in which the lifesaving appliances were maintained.

Such allegations are of serious character and demand investigation. If substantiated, they constitute the perpetration of an outrage, and those responsible should be made to suffer for their criminal acts.

The investigation should be immediate and thorough, without consideration as to whose ox is gored.

There is always the possibility, however, where some measure of blame may rest upon a Government bureau for laxity in fulfilment of its duties; or for having failed to uphold the laws entrusted to its enforcement. If such is discovered to be the case ,it is hardly to be expected that another bureau, no matter how constructed, at this crisis, would dare to drag the whole unvarnished truth to light. At the present time and until we receive further enlightenment on the whole pitiful catastrophe we can only surmise. Perhaps we shall never know. Only the dead may know, only those who left Portland with the feeling that those entrusted to safeguard the lives of the traveling public were functioning in proper manner.

BRITISH TRADE SHIP

While our commercial interests have been pursuing a narrow policy which has reacted detrimental to American trade, the British have been diligently engaged in cutting the props clean from under our foreign commerce.

In conformity with their aggressive bid for everything in sight, a new feature has recently been added to the British methods in the struggle for trade.

According to information recently received from the Consulate General's office at London:

"A joint stock company has been registered at Somerset House, London, under the name of British Trade Ship (Ltd.), with a nominal capital of £12,000, with the object of building a large vessel of a special type to be used in cruising round the world as a floating exhibition of British manufactures. The boat is intended to be so designed as to accommodate a large number of wares, comfortable quarters for exhibitors, and ample room for receiving visitors at the numerous ports at which the vessel will call."

Although the scheme is in its incipient stage, some of the most prominent shipping men of Great Britain will be included in the first board of directors.

The Britishers may be slow to catch the point of an ordinary joke, but when it comes to catching the trade it requires unlimited energy to get ahead of them. The recent lockout in the American Merchant Marine has tended to give traders of other maritime nations a good start, and none have profited greater thereby than the British.

UNIONS BLOCK REACTION

The recently organized joint legislative committee has shown its value thus far in three important cases, where the resources of labor were concentrated against reactionary proposals in Congress.

The first bill provides for the abolishment of preliminary hearings in extradition, permitting accused persons to be spirited away without opportunity to safeguard their rights in the place of their domicile. The second is House joint resolution 171, permitting the importation of Chinese coolies in bond into Hawaii, breaking down the principle of Asiatic exclusion. The third is taxation legislation which would permit the nation's war-made millionaires to escape tax free with their booty and shift the burden on consumers.

At the initial meeting of the joint legislative committee, called by President Gompers, twenty-seven representatives were enrolled, representing the A. F. of L., and various international and subordinate bodies. President Gompers was elected chairman of the joint committee, with William C. Roberts of the A. F. of L. legislative committee as secretary.

The purpose of the conference is to bring together trade union legislative representatives, stationed in the nation's capital either permanently or temporarily, so that their activities will be co-ordinated. This permits labor to center all of its forces upon any given proposition. In addition it serves as a channel through which there may be a constant flow of information concerning legislation, as each representative reports at once any situation needing attention. This is communicated to all representatives, and when necessary special meetings will be called.

Constant inter-communication is maintained through the office of the secretary, with regular reports made by mail and emergency notices transmitted by telephone.

Labor is a necessity to human existence; being such, it is obvious that under natural conditions it should be a pleasure, not a penance.

INJUNCTION DISMISSED

The suit filed by the United States Government against the six marine unions was dismissed by Judge Jeremiah Neterer in the District Court at Seattle, Wash., July 27, 1921. Permission was given the Government to amend or file a supplemented bill of complaint, but announcement of further action was withheld by the District Attorney's office.

The suit was filed by the Government last May and asked a permanent injunction against picketing of the waterfront by striking union seamen and judgment of $10,000 per day from May 1 and another judgment of $10,000 daily until the entry of final judgment.

The unions named as defendants in the complaint were the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association No. 38; Masters, Mates and Pilots of the Pacific, Seattle branch; Marine Firemen, Oilers and Watertenders' Union of the Pacific, Seattle branch; Sailors' Union of the Pacific, Seattle branch; Marine Cooks and Stewards of the Pacific, Seattle branch, and the local branch of the Neptune Association of Licensed Masters and Mates of Ocean and Coastwise Steam Vessels, Incorporated.

In his decree Judge Neterer declared that the contention of the Government that violence during the strike was countenanced by the unions was without foundation.

"Because several parties acting independently may wrong another by conduct which may have the same resultant effect does not give such other party a right to sue all wrongdoers so acting in one action.

"There are no averments which would indicate that this party was acting pursuant to any authority or plan on the part of this association," the judgment read.

That the unions were not interfering with the United States in picketing the waterfront property of shipowners was Judge Neterer's declaration in his decision.

"Considering the contention of the defendants," he said, "in so far as is material to a determination of issue presented, it may be said that the plaintiff has the right to prosecute an action where the interstate commerce or the carrying of United States mails is interfered with, or national highways are obstructed: In re Debs, 158 U. S., 564.

"While the Supreme Court did say that the scope and purpose of the bill in that case was only to restrain possible obstructions on highways along which the interstate commerce travels and mails are carried in exercise of these powers, it is competent for the nation to remove all obstructions on highways, natural or artificial, for the passage of interstate commerce and carrying of mails. The bill of complaint in this case is indefinite in that no direct charge of obstruction of highways or of carrying of United States mails or interstate commerce appears, nor physical interference with docks, wharves or vessels or cargo or passengers, to or from such properties, nor threatened interference."

No man can ever gain an understanding of the labor movement as long as he harbors the fallacy that the strike or boycott is a creation of the "labor leader."

A CASE OF SALVAGE

In forwarding the following copy of an opinion handed down July 29, 1921, by Judge John C. Knox, U. S. District Judge, New York, Attorney Arthur Lavenburg states:

"This is a great victory for all merchant seamen. The Standard Oil Company declined to recognize the crew's claim for salvage, because both vessels were owned by the Standard Oil Company, and secondly, because the company's representative directed the master to render the salvage services and consequently it was not voluntary on behalf of the crew. Judge Knox quickly disposed of these two contentions as being without merit and decided the case in favor of the crew."

United States District Court, Southern District of New York. Karl Karlsson et al., libelants, against Standard Oil Company of New York, respondent. Arthur Lavenburg for libelants, Courtland Palmer for respondent. J. D. Knox:

The answer herein admits that the S. S. "Socony" was disabled with a hawser in her propeller, and needed assistance. Request therefor was made by wireless to respondent's representative in Tampico, who directed the master of the "Comet" to render the necessary assistance. This she did by proceeding a distance of one hundred miles to the location of the "Socony." Here the "Comet" shot the "Secony" a line and, after three attempts, a wire hawser was made fast to the "Socony" and she was towed by the "Comet" into Tampico.

It is doubtless true that whether a particular service is one of towage or salvage involves a question of fact. In view, however, of the admissions in the answer, there seems to be no doubt that the "Socony" was in distress and required assistance in order to reach her destination or a place of safety. This, I think, amounts to salvage. The service may have been of a low order, but, nevertheless, it was not required as an existing duty resting upon the crew of the "Comet." I think, too, it may safely be said that a disabled and helpless vessel off the Mexican coast was in some peril.

The circumstances that both the "Comet" and the "Socony" were owned by respondent is of no consequence in view of the Salvage Act of August 1, 1912.

Libelant's exceptions to respondent's answer are sustained.

U. S. District Judge.

HOPE AND FAITH

"The sentence imposed upon you men by this Court shall be served in the State Prison at Thomaston, Maine." Thus were the words of Judge Sanborn. And the next stage in this tragedy is the gray, stern-looking building upon the shores of Maine, where one may, from the upper windows, catch a glimpse of the ocean, smiling unceasingly, eternally breaking on the cliffs year out and year in, and beyond that the horizon and a sail now and then. That's the view our Comrades Andrade and Clausen and six others have been granted for their activities during the recent strike. To watch the ocean rising and falling for several years, the ocean they have sailed upon with hope in their heart, to watch the ships pass by, the ships they have manned and the ships upon which they have tried, oh, so hard, to make life bearable for all of us.

But the boys are not whining, not complaining of their fate; no, they are cheerfully bearing the restraint and the hardships which a prison sentence from two to eleven years must necessarily carry with it. Why are they full of hope, why do they smile in spite of it all? Because they have confidence in you, comrades; because they believe that some day when they are free men again that they may find a stronger and better organization than ever. Are they justified in that? Is their only hope going to be shattered? Personally, I don't believe it. I know that we will come back stronger and cleaner than we ever have been. All that it requires is confidence and faith, because the cornerstone of every venture in life is hope and faith.

Hard knocks should not weaken us, the waves of mistrust and dissatisfaction should not wash us away. Let us unite again to meet the common foe.

For the sake of those that have made the supreme sacrifice, for the sake of those that are languishing behind prison walls, let us get together and clear the decks for a brighter and better day, and when the gates of Thomaston prison open for our comrades let us have a union that will make them proud to belong to. Let us have a brotherhood of the sea that will cause them to think that their sacrifice has not been in vain. In the meantime the waves will wash the cliffs and I can hear them murmur: "Success lays in unity."

BRITISH SHIPPING SUBSIDIES

An interesting discussion appears in the shipping journal, Fairplay, of June 9, on the policy of the British Government in respect to granting subsidies to British shipping companies. The question is taken up at considerable length and the history of steamship subsidies given.

Two instances of subsidies to passenger vessels are mentioned. The first is the subsidy granted to Sir Alfred Jones for running a line of steamers to Jamaica, principally for carrying bananas. The subsidy granted is said to have been £40,000 a year, and was granted for ten years, from 1901 to 1911. At the end of that time the shipping company is reported to have had a debit balance of £216,000.

The second instance was the subsidy granted to the Cunard Steamship Company, on the advice of the Admiralty, with a view to securing merchant cruisers of greater speed and larger radius of action and capable of carrying the desired caliber of guns. A committee, appointed on the Admirality's recommendation, reported as to the estimated cost of building such vessels.

As a result of this report the "Mauretania" and "Lusitania" were built under an agreement dated July 30, 1903. They were to be capable of maintaining a minimum ocean speed of twenty-four to twenty-five knots in moderate weather. The company was to receive an annual subsidy of £75,000 for each steamer. It was also provided that a sum equal to the cost to the company of the two steamers, but not to exceed £2,600,000, should be loaned to the company at 2¾ per cent per annum, repayable at the rate of 5 per cent per annum. The company was to provide mail rooms and sorting rooms and to carry the mails at a cost of £68,000 per annum, but quantities of mails exceeding one hundred tons per week were to be paid for at the rate of 26s. 3d. per ton, or the current rate of freight. It is declared that these two vessels cost nearly £4,000,000 instead of the estimated £2,600,000, and that the difference was paid by the Cunard Line. The article states that no other payments "are made by the British Government in respect of auxiliary cruisers, these payments having been dropped nearly twenty years ago."

In contrast to the subsidies paid for fast merchant cruisers are the amounts paid for the carriage of mails. Mail contracts are given to the lowest bidder. The P. & O. Steamship Company is stated to receive the largest sums for the carriage of mails. The chairman of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, at the annual meeting of that company recently, mentioned that his company had conducted the mail service to the West Indies at an annual loss of about £50,000 and had decided to discontinue the service.

AMERICAN SHIPS INCREASE

A tonnage increase of more than 131 per cent in documented American merchant shipping since the beginning of the war is shown by an official statement recently released by the Bureau of Navigation of the Department of Commerce.

The total documented American merchant shipping at the close of the fiscal year on June 30, 1921, was 28,500 vessels of 18,350,000 gross tons, as compared with 28,183 vessels of 16,324,024 gross tons in 1920 and 26,943 vessels of 7,928,688 gross tons in 1914, the statement said, adding that final returns from collectors of customs not due for several weeks probably will not alter the 1921 total more than 35,000 tons, involving only small vessels.

Seagoing vessels of 500 gross tons or over numbered 3723 of 13,234,401 gross tons, of which 238 of 1,271,079 gross tons are ocean passenger steamers. The United States Shipping Board owns 1798 ships of 7,993,771 gross tons. The Great Lakes tonnage aggregates 2850 vessels of 2,625,000 gross tons, and the remainder consists of seagoing vessels under 500 tons, river steamers and smaller miscellaneous craft.

Vessels of 500 tons or over registered for foreign trade numbered 2559 of 10,620,717 gross tons, of which 2272 were steamers aggregating 10,244,746 gross tons.

The total increase in the American merchant marine during the year was a trifle over 2,020,000 gross tons, of which 1,090,643 gross tons were Shipping Board ships.

For comparison, the tonnage of ships of 100 gross tons or over of the United Kingdom on June 30, 1920, aggregated 8561 of 18,330,424 gross tons, according to Lloyd's Register; the totals for June, 1921, are not yet available.

VIEWS FROM ABERDEEN

Editor SEAMEN'S JOURNAL:—I venture upon a few remarks on our system of organization, hoping it may reach my comrades through the medium of the SEAMEN'S JOURNAL. With all due respect to our venerable president, whose integrity in our cause can never be doubted, we have been defeated but not disorganized, therefore winning morally. But, surely, we have been taught that our effective powers are not what they should be. Let us try and analyze the forms of organization and find the distinctive merits appertaining to the methods as used by organized labor. First, let us take "craft unionism," which means a body of workers engaged on a particular class of work, i. e., a "craft." That particular body of men is organized for the purpose of safeguarding their interests in times of industrial turmoil. Then let us see the effective power of such a form of organization in case of a strike, or as in our own case. We can call a strike, if necessary, or arbitrate with the employers, but we have no direct influence outside of our own organization. We may be affiliated with other craft organizations who come out in sympathy with us, but that is optional with them, as affiliating with other organizations entails no obligation to strike.

"Craft unionism" is an old, antiquated form of organization. It was the first attempt of labor to secure protection and recognition from their employers, and was practical in the day of the craftsmen. In the day of the craft workers they completed a commodity in the whole; therein lay their strength in a dispute. Machinery was in its infancy, thereby making the craftsmen an absolute necessity in the production of articles. But the craft worker can no longer depend on his individuality; with the advent of machinery we have parts of an article made in many different places and the finished article turned out, sometimes in a different country. With the passing of craftsmen, labor had to look for a new weapon by which to enforce their rights.

So the craft union must be laid on the shelf and a system of co-operative organization brought into being.

But the majority of us who have traveled the world have seen the effectiveness of co-operative organization in various countries, and there is no doubt but that it is performing the functions of effectiveness wherever its power is judiciously used. The present lockout has taught us that lack of co-operation has been to our detriment, and it is surely not wise or practical for us to have a repetition of the same. We have the injunction abuse to contend with, which prohibits us from going near our employment and lessening our offensive power. Whereas, if we had a federated organization based on the co-operative system and used our power in conjunction with our directly connected workers, so that if a dispute involved one party it would compel all the co-operative workers to come to a standstill until a remedy or understanding was reached, we would be more successful.

I hope my views will not be considered too radical as they are given with the best wishes of preserving our faith in the future. "Tomorrow is also a day." I conclude with wishes for greater solidarity and closer co-operation with our fellow transport workers.

LABOR MUST LEAD

There can be no question but that to organized labor falls the mission of leading in the great movement of guarding the human and civil rights of all the workers —the right to organize, to cease work, to dispose of patronage, to bargain collectively with employers, to speak freely, to peacefully assemble, and to petition the Government for redress of grievances.

There are no other means than organized labor by which labor may make known its needs, its aims or its purposes. Without this voice to speak for it, it is beyond the power of man to conceive what the present condition of labor would be, or what the condition of the country would be were the plans of the general run of labor-haters put into practice.

This thought in the minds of stout-hearted and far-seeing men and women of the labor movement moves them to greater activity in their endeavor to impress the truth upon the people.

This thought, on the other hand, inspires the weak to look with hope to this labor movement to stay the hand of the strong, which they feel will oppress them unless a force from their own ranks rises up in their defense.

This fear of oppression is historically sound. The strong have always crushed the weak. The strong instituted serfdom, they established slavery, they imposed long hours of labor, they paid low wages, they founded the "pluck-me" company stores, they exploited the labor of children, they robbed the women workers in the factories, they have done everything that could be done to oppress the weak.

Organized labor has come to their rescue and has remained on guard in the life-saving station. It has sponsored nearly every law on the statute books of nearly every State to protect the weak against being preyed upon by the strong.

Organized labor is true to its historical mission. The men and women of labor know that the safety of the toilers for today, and their hopes of liberty for the future, are centered in the organized labor movement of our country. Its highest expectations can be realized, and its great trust can be discharged through the co-operation of all the workers.

The logic of the industrial situation should impel every trade unionist, every representative of organized effort of the workers, to use all the powers with which nature has gifted him or her to unite the forces of labor in a solid phalanx, not only to repel attacks directed against the labor movement, but to march steadily forward to the attainment of the rights to which the workers are entitled.—Machinists' News Letter.

COAL STRIKE SETTLEMENT

According to a recent report prepared by European Division, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, the following are the main points of agreement in the settlement of the British coal strike:

National and district wage board to be established, with equal representation of both sides and independent chairmen.

District wages to be in the form of a percentage upon the district basis rates, periodically adjusted, and determined by the proceeds of the industry in each district, ascertained after joint audit.

Wages above the standard to amount to a sum equal to 83 per cent of the proceeds, after allowance for standard wages, for other costs of production, and for 17 per cent of the aggregate standard wages to be devoted to standard profits.

A subsistence wage for low-paid day workers, to be decided by the district wages board, or, failing agreement, by the independent chairman.

Standard wage to be the basis rates existing in each district on March 31 last, plus district percentages payable in July, 1914, or equivalents necessitated by subsequent adjustments.

The minimum rate will be the standard wage plus 20 per cent.

Items of cost are to be decided by the national board, or, failing agreement by July 31, by the independent chairman.

Life of Agreement

The Government will give a grant not exceeding £10,000,000 in subvention of wages.

Wages up to August 31 to be based on the results of July, and for September to be based on the results of July.

During the temporary period of three months the costs of production will be based on the average of the first quarter of the year. The reductions during this period are not to exceed 2s. per shift in July, 2s. 6d. in August, and 3s. in September, provided the balance of the Government grant is sufficient.

The agreement is to last until September, 1922, and afterwards only to be terminated by three months' notice on either side.

The coal fields are to be divided into thirteen districts for the purpose of the agreement.

Especial interest attaches to that part of the agreement wherein the principle of "profit sharing" is officially adopted. Many private enterprises in Great Britain have applied this principle, but its adoption in the settlement of the coal strike is perhaps the first instance in which it was officially recognized.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Protest Against Peonage

President Wright and Treasurer Chilton of the Honolulu Central Labor Union appeared before the House Committee on Immigration today, under instructions from their organization which sent them here to protest against the Kalanianiaole resolution, which would authorize President Harding and Secretary of Labor Davis to admit fifty thousand Chinese coolies into Hawaii to break the standards of living of the plantation workers.

The sinister meaning of this move to bring indentured coolies into one of the American territories was disclosed in the testimony of Oxnard, the beet sugar magnate, and Rogers of Louisiana, spokesman for the cane sugar interests. They said that while they did not favor the admittance of Chinese cheap labor into Hawaii for the benefit of the Hawaiian sugar companies, yet if such a favor were granted they would insist upon the admittance of coolie labor into the continental United States as well. Anything less would be a discrimination against the American sugar producers.

Discussing the situation before a conference of legislative agents at A. F. of L. headquarters, Wright said that no union mechanic in Hawaii can remain there if he gives offense to the sugar barons. Five or ten men, through interlocking directorates, control the industry and safeguard themselves against organized labor by the exercise of autocratic power.

"This scheme for bringing in the Chinese will simply drive out the skilled American workers," he said. "It will leave the Japanese in control of skilled and semi-skilled work, and the Chinese in control of common labor. The Territory will be completely Orientalized. We have a great deal of unemployment there now—about as many men are out of work as the number of coolies the sugar companies claim they need to carry on their industry."

Internal Strife

Cornelius Foley, second vice-president of the Journeymen Barbers' International Union, announces that he has been "sacked" as an organizer for the Barbers, his job terminating on July 16. In a supplementary report to his union upon the recent Denver convention he says:

"I feel that I was representing the wishes of at least some of the membership of the organization by voting in favor of John Lewis and against Samuel Gompers for president, by voting for a referendum to be taken by the people prior to a declaration of war, and talking in support of a boycott resolution on English products and commodities until such time as the British Government recognizes the Irish Republic. * * *

"This is not the first time that I have voted against the other delegates from our organization. In Buffalo, in 1917, I was one of the thirteen who opposed the endorsement of the Alliance for Labor and Democracy. My contention then was that capitalism was only using labor to pull its chestnuts out of the fire. I feel that the days of 'open shoppers' are now making is a vindication of my position at Buffalo. I further feel that as one of the seven opposing the endorsement of the League of Nations at Atlantic City in 1919 I have been vindicated by the vote of the people in the last election.

"A discussion by the membership, through the columns of our JOURNAL on the position taken by the various delegates to the Denver convention would be interesting and instructive and should be encouraged."

Profiteers Still Hungry

Our old friend, James A. Emery of Mulhall scandal notoriety, turns up again as an adviser on taxation. His official audience this time is Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce. After the House Ways and Means Committee has decided that no proposal for a sales tax would be considered, and no hearings dealing with the sales tax be permitted, Mr. Hoover holds a little tax-hearing of his own, and "representatives of leading business associations" tell him what's what. They say that "special taxes on particular industries are upsetting business, preventing normal consumption and retarding the return to stable conditions." Emery argued that a "non-discriminatory sales tax, properly administered," would suit the business men. Organized labor is opposed to any sales tax, and insists upon the retention of the excess-profits tax and the higher surtaxes on big private incomes. It also favors a 1 per cent tax on land values.

Should Be Released

Release of Eugene V. Debs and the other political prisoners is once more hinted at, both by President Harding and by his political advisers. The Socialist Party Amnesty Committee, which was accompanied to the White House on Wednesday by William H. Johnston of the Machinists, Basil M. Manly and Norman Hapgood, found the President in a sympathetic mood. Samuel Gompers, who talked with the President afterward, was likewise impressed with the apparent desire of Mr. Harding to show the quality of mercy to the veteran leader of American working-class radicalism. Just what is holding up action at this time, except the natural tendency of a politician to let things drift, is a matter for speculation. The committee came away with strong hopes of seeing Debs and his associates released within a few weeks.

Unemployment and the possible appropriation of public funds for the construction of public works to relieve the pressing need for work in any parts of the country was discussed between Mr. Gompers and Mr. Harding. The President, while always willing to let it be understood that organized labor has no special influence with him, is still not so blind as to refuse to meet the head of the organized labor movement. They have had a number of talks recently and nobody need be surprised if Mr. Harding comes to encourage these calls. His position at the capitol daily becomes more unfavorable; his taxation schemes are under fire quite as destructive of political strength as was the attack on the Payne Aldrich tariff measure in the Taft administration. He may soon find it advisable to get an understanding with labor.

How far Harding has gone in his program of "deflating" the farmers and wage-workers of the country is disclosed in the sudden order issued to kill the Norris Bill providing a fund of $100,000,000 to enable the Government to export American farm products and to arrange $1,000,000,000 of credit to enable the farmers to trade directly with the buyers in Europe. This bill would have moved a vast quantity of crops to a good market, without paying tribute to bankers and speculators at home, and would have enabled the farmers to buy hundreds of millions of dollars worth of manufactured goods at home, thereby relieving unemployment.

Harding, under the advice of Secretary Mellon and the bankers, gave the word to kill this measure and substitute a bill fathered by Kellogg of Minnesota, the railroad lawyer, which would provide for loans to American bankers, who in turn would make loans to farmers. It would prevent the escape of a penny of interest or a penny of profit from the ready hands of the bankers and grain-gamblers. It would prevent the farmers from recovering their market, and the industries from feeling immediate benefit from the farmers' improvement.

Senator Norris made a remarkable speech, explaining the trickery and robbery of the people in the Kellogg bill, and how it was born without legitimate parentage, delivered in secret and protected by Hoover, Mellon, Harding, Kellogg and other men identified with the enemies of the great producing classes of the country. Heaping ridicule on the choice of Kellogg to bring in a bill for the solution of the farm credits situation, Norris said:

"He was a horny-fisted son of the soil. He was a scientific farmer, with a large library of farming books. In his library you would find 'Washburn On Real Property'—all farmers have real property; 'Parsons On Contracts'—all farmers make contracts; 'Bishop's Criminal Law'—all farmers are liable to commit crimes. Then, probably, you would find a morocco-bound volume entitled 'The Relation of Golf to Chicken Raising,' and 'Hoyle On Other Games.' So, the Senator from Minnesota was chosen to be the godfather to this child."

Congress is drifting through the summer without having enacted even the Sheppard-Towner maternity and infancy bill, which all the organized women of the country have demanded. It has failed to make real progress toward reclassifying the army of Federal employes, to bring the salaries into some sane relation to the work performed. It has done nothing with the Nolan minimum wage bill.

Perhaps the best that can be said for this National Legislature is that it has failed to enact into law any more sedition bills or legal kidnapping schemes, or anti-strike measures.

Figures, quoted from Shipping and Engineering, show that during the year 1920 the vessels entering and clearing from Chinese ports numbered 210,609 of 104,266,695 tons. The following are the percentages of tonnage under the various flags: British, 38.67; Japanese, 27.04; Chinese, 26.52; United States, 4.52; all other countries, 3.25.

The trade union is the prime conservator of individual liberty, as distinguished from the political club, the conservator of public liberty.

control of the organizations. The struggle has already begun on the Atlantic Coast, and is threatened on the Pacific Coast. When the leaders, to whose "patriotism and sound leadership" Mr. Bass paid such a high compliment, are unable to secure from the United States Shipping Board either recognition for their union, or reasonable working conditions for the men, a state of feeling is created on the part of the men of which the irresponsible and turbulent element among them is quick to take advantage. If our bitterest enemies had dictated the labor policy of the Shipping Board during the present controversy with the men, the board could not have done more than it has done to drive American seamen from our ships, thus nullifying our efforts to maintain a truly American Merchant Marine.

As far as I have been able to find, it appears that at the close of the year 1913, shortly before the seaman's law was passed, less than 7 per cent of the crews, exclusive of officers, on our merchant ships was made up of native Americans. The reason for this is plain. The American would not live and work under the conditions of service which obtained on board our ships. All this was changed in a few years by the passage of the seaman's law. Though this law has never been properly enforced, and has been constantly under fire by those concerns in this country and abroad who are interested in getting the cheapest possible sea labor, nevertheless it has worked a transformation in the personnel of American seamen. The best estimates I have been able to get indicate that just prior to May 1 of this year, when the ill-advised conduct of the Shipping Board precipitated the trouble with the men, there was in excess of 50 per cent of native Americans in the crews sailing under the American flag. In addition to this there was a very considerable number of naturalized Americans in these crews. The war probably added somewhat to these numbers, but the other opportunities for service to the country were so numerous the young American would never have been attracted to the seaman's life on board our ships, except for the seaman's law that made it a decent and responsible occupation. For several years, also, prior to May 1 we had followed the English plan, and established contractual relations between the seamen's organizations and the shipowners and this had brought about a large measure of cooperation between the owners and the organizations of the men. All this is now changed, and changed primarily as a result of the activities of the Shipping Board.

In Great Britain the National Maritime Board, organized during the war to adjust maritime labor disputes, is still continued in successful operation. The National Sailors' and Firemen's Union of Great Britain and Ireland, which is the great seamen's union of Great Britain, is officially recognized and dealt with, and is working in perfect harmony with the shipowners. A reduction in the seamen's pay has been agreed upon between the British unions and the shipowners, and for approximately the same percentages of decrease the seamen were willing to accept in this country, but otherwise the conditions are unchanged. Great Britain is not making war upon her seamen's organizations, as the Shipping Board and private owners are doing in this country, but is strengthening her unions in every way, thus making British labor feel its importance and responsibility in maintaining Great Britain's Merchant Marine.

The same leadership, which Mr. Bass extolled so highly in the report from which I have read, was available to the United States Shipping Board in peace as well as in war. That leadership was just as patriotic in peace as in war, and its supreme desire was to see American ships manned by American seamen under working conditions which made the seamen's calling an honorable one in which the best class of American labor might be enlisted. Accordingly, the unions asked that preference be given to the American citizen in obtaining sea employment. This was denied. It asked that the men might have, as previously, the help of the regular representative of the union when the men were paid off and signed on.

This was denied. The three watches or eight-hour day was withdrawn by the shipowners. Subsistence allowances were reduced, and, in fact, everything done which could be done to restore the old régime on board our ships. Plainly, it was felt by the shipowners that the present dull period of shipping presented an excellent opportunity to enforce hard conditions on the men. The seamen's organizations in this country are anxious to co-operate with the shipowner and with the Government as heretofore to maintain the American Merchant Marine. They have established schools at their own expense to increase the skill and efficiency of the men. When all attempts to reach an understanding with the private owners and the Shipping Board had failed, they proposed to leave the entire question and all questions involved with President Harding, and to abide by his decision. But the forces, whatever they were, that were determined to bring on a crucial contest between the men and the shipowners of this country, were too strong to be resisted. The lockout was put into effect, and we find our sea labor today disorganized, dissatisfied, and rebellious. The conditions exist which every enemy of the American Merchant Marine desires to have exist.

But I believe it is not too late to change the labor policy of the Shipping Board. Whatever the Shipping Board does, the private owner must do. I think I have shown that the men made every reasonable effort to come to terms with the Board. Their efforts were unavailing, because the Shipping Board followed the reactionary labor policies of a generation ago and refused to follow in this respect the enlightened policy of Great Britain, or to learn from our own experience during the last few years. It is simply robbing the people of this country to continue appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars for the use of the Shipping Board if it is committed to a labor policy that spells disaster to our Merchant Marine.

In my discussion so far I have dealt simply with the labor question as it is involved in building up and maintaining our Merchant Marine. I have not touched upon, directly at least, the charge that British influences are shaping the shipping policies of our Merchant Marine. I hope to take up that question at an early date in connection with my resolution for an investigation. We do not know, we cannot know without an investigation, the extent to which British influences and propaganda are interfering with our efforts to build up and maintain a Merchant Marine. I hope, however, when I get the opportunity to discuss that matter, to lay before the Senate certain facts which will demand the most serious attention of every Senator and every person who is a friend of the American Merchant Marine.

released. While in the Colorado jail he made regular reports to the detective agency.

Progress in South

Despite reactionary sentiment that affects the State of Louisiana as well as all others, trade unionists made gains at the recent constitutional convention. The workers failed to take from the Constitution the section which provides that it shall be the duty of the Legislature to pass arbitration laws. An amendment was secured, however, that such laws shall provide for arbitration with the consent of both parties. One of the strongest advocates of the compulsory feature was Senator Johnson of Bogalusa, where several unionists were recently murdered by lumber baron thugs.

The convention defeated a resolution that would prohibit the State from engaging in compensation or other insurance. The recall adopted provides that 15 per cent of the voters at the last selection may initiate recall proceedings against a State official.

The increase in the pilferage of goods in transit in the United Kingdom has led to the invention of a special packing case which is said to be pilfer-proof. Among other advantages claimed for it are:

1. The additional cost of construction is small.
2. It is 100 per cent stronger than ordinary cases.
3. As no battens are employed, the shipping measurements are not increased, consequently a saving in freight is effected.

At a demonstration before the London Chamber of Commerce a sample case is said to have "resisted all efforts to get into it for twenty minutes, and could not be reclosed without leaving very clear signs of its having been forced."

The union label transforms the women and children of the working class into towers of strength. Without it they are often elements of weakness in the struggle for bread.

Labor News

Striking textile workers in the State of North Carolina are resisting wage cuts that would reduce rates below pre-war standards.

At St. Louis, Mo., electrical workers employed on inside work are back on the job after defeating an attempted wage reduction.

Several large printing plants operating in Winnipeg have broken away from the anti-labor combine and conceded the forty-four-hour week to their employes.

There is considerable unemployment in the moving picture industry at Los Angeles. Deflation has struck several magnates, wages have been reduced, and the workday lengthened.

The current issue of American Pressmen prints reports from a score of localities where affiliates of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union secured betterments.

A wage reduction affecting 12,000 employees of the General Electric Company's plant at Lynn, Mass., has been announced. The cut will vary in amount with the several classes of employees.

Sixteen hundred shipyard workers went on strike last week at the yards of the Merchant Shipbuilding Corporation, Chester, Pa., in protest against a reduction in wages. Riveters, reamers, fitter-ups and drillers were affected.

Over four hundred leaders in the strike of shipyard workers at Kobe, Japan, have been arrested and the end is not yet in sight. The strikers demand dismissal of all strike-breakers in the yards and state they are resolved to fight to the last.

Twenty-one Japanese, many of them prominent, were indicted at Honolulu recently on charges of criminal conspiracy in connection with violence incident to the strike of sugar plantation workers last year.

Unemployment of 150,000 coal miners daily, with many thousand others idle much of the time, is reported by officers of the United Mine Workers of America, who assert the idleness is due to the lack of a market for coal.

Members of building trades unions under jurisdiction of the San Francisco council, thirty of whom are employed on the new Federal building at Honolulu, have not yet received a strike call from San Francisco. After a conference with the men, H. Winsley, superintendent of construction, said there were no labor difficulties at Honolulu.

The charter of the International Union of Fruit and Vegetable Workers of North America has been forwarded by the A. F. of L. and received at Fresno. The union was launched by representatives of thirty-seven local unions, chartered directly by the A. F. of L. The members of the organization are mainly migratory workers, who move with the season up and down the Pacific Coast.

Newspapers of Philadelphia, Pa., state that "it is reported in financial circles" that the Pennsylvania Railroad will ignore the Railroad Labor Board's blast against the railroad's company "union." It is stated that the railroad will continue its present policy of open defiance of the Transportation Act. Under the law, the Railroad Labor Board can not force employes or employers to obey its mandates.

World's Workers

Montreal reports that wages of clerical workers employed by Canadian railways have been ordered reduced $12.24 a month and those of office boys $10.20. About 35,000 workers are affected. The reductions complete the wage re-adjustment program proposed in June. They will remain effective pending final negotiations between the companies and their employees regarding post-war wage and working conditions. Agreement is not expected until late in the fall.

The Mexican government has forbidden immigration of Chinese. This action will make impossible the further smuggling of Chinese into the United States over the Mexican border. It is stated that the practice has been for Chinese to land in Lower California, and then, by smuggling processes, to cross the California border into the United States. Mexico is making great efforts to bring foreign colonists to that country, but is opposed to unrestricted Chinese immigration.

Definite action by the Mexican railway men on a general walkout set for August 1, has been deferred in order to await the reports on the strike vote in outlying districts. It probably will be many days before these results will be known. Government officials reiterated their determination to enforce the wage reduction, which provoked the strike threat, and various railway unions have announced that they will attempt to tie up all Government operated lines if the reduction is made.

The annual meeting of the British Trades Union Congress will be held at Cardiff, Wales, commencing September 5. Resolutions presented refer to the functioning of the triple alliance of miners, railway men and dockers; the repeal of the Emergency Powers Act, a war measure which unionists claim is being used against strikers, and a plan for the congress to take over all trade union colleges. It is also proposed that the congress, through all trade union channels, shall immediately link up with all co-operative societies for the purpose of feeding workers during strike periods. This resolution will have many friends, especially among the miners, because of their favorable experience with the "co-ops." during their recent strike.

Berlin reports improvement in German industry and considerable decrease in unemployment. The textile and clothing industry, the building trades and agriculture called for many laborers during July, leaving the number of jobless at 657,000, as compared with 750,000 a month ago. Labor unions reported unemployment decreased, there being 169 applicants for every one hundred jobs instead of 175, as previously given. In Berlin one-third of those out of work have been jobless for more than six months. The steel and iron market, which experienced an upward trend during June, continues to show improvement. The Upper Silesian iron works, however, have not recovered from the effects of the insurrection. Although the greater part of the material damage has been repaired, the plants have no orders and until peace reaches that district there is not likely to be any great advance in industry.

Domestic and Naval

The Libby, McNeill & Libby salmon cannery at Kenair, Alaska, was recently destroyed by fire with an estimated loss of $300,000. No casualties were reported in the despatches.

The bark "Phyllis" was sold recently in Boston at a United States Marshal sale to the Transit Navigation Corporation of New York. The price bid was $24,300, subject to court action.

All Shipping Board vessels under the management of the American Hawaiian service will be returned to the Shipping Board, according to officials of the Williams, Dimond Company.

With her tanks leaking, the Matson Navigation Company's freighter "Hyades" has been compelled to return to Honolulu. The vessel was 435 miles from Honolulu, bound to San Francisco, when the trouble was discovered. The "Hyades" sailed from Port Allen for San Francisco on July 31 with a valuable cargo of island merchandise.

Shipping Commissioners Quinn, at New York, and Smith D. Reynolds, New Orleans, have been suspended, as announced by Secretary Hoover, as a result of an investigation at all ports of the alleged acceptance by commissioners of fees for entering and clearing vessels. The practice of shipowners of paying usually about five dollars for a service which the Government paid the commissioner to perform was very general, Hoover said, and would be broken up.

The American steamer "Pocahontas," which arrived at Naples on July 4 in a damaged condition, alleged to have been due to the acts of members of her crew, was scheduled to sail for New York last week, but it seemed improbable that she would depart on time. The ship was repaired following her arrival, and debts amounting to a considerable sum were contracted. The creditors asked that the steamer be held in port until their claims were settled.

From the time the first steel steamship was launched in March, 1917, until the last one left the ways in May, 1921, shipbuilding plants in the Portland district built 115 steel steamships of a total deadweight tonnage of 955,200. The first steel vessel to be launched in Portland during the war period was the "War Baron," which left the ways of the Northwest Steel Company March 30, 1917. The last steel vessel to be launched was the "Swiftland," 12,000-ton steel oil tanker, built by the Northwest Bridge and Iron Works, and launched last May.

Charges are to be filed against Captain Sorenson, master of the American barkentine "Rolph," according to advices received by Assistant United States Attorney George B. Finnegan. The Governor of the Panama Canal District asked the United State District Attorney [illegible] Kohlas, a former sailor on the ship [illegible] to San Francisco on the "Westhaven" to appear before the Grand Jury. Kohlas charges Captain Sorenson with cruel and inhuman treatment. Fred Hansen, first mate on the "Rolph," is now a fugitive from justice, the Federal Grand Jury having returned an indictment against him for assaulting sailors on the high seas. He has fled to Europe.

News from Abroad

The allies have warned Greece that an advance on Constantinople by her troops will not be tolerated.

A naval aviators' training station at Kasumigaura, near Tokio, will soon be opened under the direction of the British aviation instructors who recently arrived in Japan.

Recent messages from Riga and Poland state every American prisoner in Russia has been released and are now on their way to the United States.

Twenty Spanish soldiers, the last remnant of the Spanish troops to resist capture of the town of Nador, fifteen miles south of Melilla, were massacred by the Moors after having surrendered.

Fire in the law courts building at Milan recently destroyed records of two thousand cases, including those of the disastrous explosions in the Diana theater, which cost more than a score of lives.

The postoffice building at Bari, in Southeastern Italy on the Adriatic, collapsed recently as a result of an earth tremor, and many bodies have been recovered from the ruins. Others are reported to have been killed in the disaster, and many injured.

Another political crisis in which soldiers are playing an important part has arisen in Lisbon, Portugal. A dispatch from Vigo, Spain, said all the Lisbon garrison was called out and picketed the streets and placed guns in the principal thoroughfares and squares.

Telegraph connections between Sweden and Soviet Russia will be reopened shortly, according to the chief of the Swedish telegraph department. The Great Northern Telegraph Company, which owns cables and stations in Russia, is making extensive repairs, which are expected to be completed before October 1.

The reply of Haiti to the list of questions regarding the white slave traffic sent to all members of the league was to the effect that such a thing as "white slavery" was unknown on that island, had never existed there, and consequently Haitian officials had nothing to offer in reply to the questions.

The Australian Government has withdrawn from the scheme of empire communications adopted by the wireless committee of the imperial conference, but has promised to cooperate with the other dominions in carrying out the plan which has been adopted by the committee to facilitate communication and transmission of news reports between London and the dominion capitals.

Copenhagen despatches state that Spain's anti-prohibition attitude is causing emonomic anxiety in more than one dry or partly dry country. Threats of tariff pressure, trade boycotts and other steps in behalf of the manufacture and sale of Spanish wines are having their effect, notably in Iceland and Finland. Spain's decision spells ruin to the Icelandic fish export, says the Politiken's Iceland correspondent. The Norwegian Government, however, is expediting their prohibition bill and the Government monopoly bill, independent of commercial treaty negotiations now going on with France, Spain and Portugal. Spain has already closed her frontiers against Norwegian goods and Portugal will take a similar step beginning this month.

With the Wits

The reason that dentists call their offices dental parlors is that "drawing rooms" would be too suggestive. —Life.

Polly Peachblow—I don't think it's fair. I've been chosen queen of this festival and you're putting off all the menial jobs on me.

Mr. Mugg—What else did you expect? Haven't you noticed what's happened to royalty all over Europe ever since the war?—Detroit News.

Presence of Mind—Presence of mind is a great thing. A boy came running to his father with the news that a man had fallen through the open coal hole. "Clap the cover on quick and call the policeman," said the father. "We must arrest him for trying to steal our coal or he will be suing us for damages.'"

The bedraggled individual indignantly denied that he was intoxicated when the police officer testified that he found the prisoner lying in the street.

"Very well, then," retorted the versatile judge. "You're fined $5 for parking more than six inches from the curb."—Buffalo Express.

The husband was seeing his beloved wife off for a holiday. "Maggie, dear," he said, "hadn't you better take some fiction with you to while away the time?"

"Oh, no, George," she said, "you'll be sending me some letters."—Western Christian Advocate (Cincinnati).

First Artist—I painted up a lump of pig iron once to look like a cork and, by George, when I threw it into the water it floated.

Second Artist—That's nothing. I painted a lump of pig iron to look like a roast of beef and my dog ate three-quarters of it before he discovered his mistake.—Boston Transcript.

Down in New Jersey there is a doctor who is superintendent of a Sunday school. Not long ago, he asked one of the boys this question:

"Willie, will you tell me what we must do in order to get to heaven?"

Said Willie: "We must die."

"That's true," replied the doctor, "but tell me what we must do before we die."

"We must get sick," said Willie, "and send for you."—Practical Druggist.

Bobby came home from his first day at kindergarten with the announcement that he could write. Upon being given pencil and paper he made his usual meaningless scribbles.

"But what," said his mother, "does it say?"

"How do I know?" answered Bobby, "I haven't learned to read it yet."

The Parson Cat table, to fellow boarder)—My dear sir, theology does not teach the existence of a literal hell but merely that a potential hell lies within each one of us at this moment.

The Landlady (overhearing)—You have me to remind you, Mr. Smith, that you may leave at once if you are dissatisfied! — Passing Show (London).

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

LABOR AND INJUNCTIONS

Statement Shows Rights of Labor Abridged by Judicial Decree

At the recent hearing before the joint session of the judiciary committees of the Illinois Legislature, Secretary-Treasurer Victor A. Olander of the Illinois State Federation of Labor made the closing argument in support of Labor's Injunction Limitation Bill, as follows.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Committee:—Those who have professed to believe that the injunction is the proper method of interpreting and enforcing law and maintaining order very recently gave very clear evidence that they are not entirely sincere in their position. We have just passed through one of the greatest struggles in history when the future of the entire world was at stake, more important to our own nation, perhaps, than anything we have faced since the days of the revolution; order had to be kept throughout the nation; measures had to be taken which under other circumstances we would have considered too repressive; treason, sedition and acts of that kind were a constant danger to the entire country. I will not challenge the patriotism of any man, but I want to ask a question now—If those who profess to believe now and who professed to believe before the war that the injunction is the proper method by which to interpret and enforce law and to maintain order, why did they not insist that method be used against treason, sedition and similar acts harmful to the nation's interests during our recent war?

There is not a single instance you may cite whereby the injunction method was used against those acts during the very trying times we have passed through, and had there ever been justification for the use of such methods as those involved in the injunction procedure, as effecting the exercise of personal rights, there was justification during that period. All the situations that the proponents of injunction methods maintain exist in such labor disputes, as to numbers involved and the danger of a great multiplicity of law-suits, irreparable damage, and all those things, were involved in the acts of sedition, treason and profiteering during the war; and those who have repeatedly told the members of this Legislature that the injunction method is a proper and right method of interpreting and enforcing the law and maintaining order, never once came to the front in an effort to make use of that writ in defense of the country. Their failure to do this is proof that they believed the injunction method too drastic to be used even against alien enemies during the war. But they now insist that it be used against American labor even in times of peace. The fact of the matter is they have proven by their actions, since I am sure they did not intend to be disloyal to the nation, that they don't believe what they say when they tell you the injunction should be used for such purposes as it is used in labor disputes. The record is clear. It is of such a recent date that it is at hand to everyone who wants to look it over, and I challenge the opponents of the injunction limitation bill to give an answer to what I have said.

We have had many discussions on this question in the past before committees of both the House and Senate, and perhaps some of the things I am about to say will be to some of you merely a repetition of former statements. There may, however, be some of the members of the Joint Committee whom I have not had the privilege of addressing before on this subject and at the risk of perhaps tiring you, I am going over some of the things that have been said to members of previous Legislatures.

Labor Not Property

House Bill No. 590—the injunction limitation bill—opens with the declaration that the labor of a human being is an attribute of life and is not property. That simple statement is God's truth. It is Divine law, although often challenged by man, especially by reactionary employers and injunction judges. Let me recite very briefly the history of some developments in connection with the truth stated in the first section of the Bill.

We want to write into the statutes of Illinois a clear statement that there is a fundamental difference between labor and property. About seven hundred years ago Edward III issued orders to a certain sheriff to proceed to gather in material and labor to build a chapel he wanted to have erected and to seize the necessary material and men for that purpose. Men and property then, as before, were placed on an exact par. At about the same time the infamous Act of Parliament known as the Statute of Laborers became a law. There is probably no lawyer, who has given any real, real thought to his profession who is not familiar with that statute and its effect upon law and the actions of the Courts in determining the status of working people. It is not so generally remembered, however, that the inauguration of the Chancery Courts—where the injunction judge now applies his arbitrary rule—as a definite part of the Court system took place at about the same time.

For about two hundred years following that Statute of Laborers, with all its restrictive measures against the working people of Great Britain, ran through the laws and Courts in various ways, having various effects, and then it was repealed.

During this period the Equity Court, or Chancery Court, had undergone something of a change. There had been very bitter disputes between the law courts and the equity courts and between the equity courts and Parliament, as a result of which, about the time the Statute of Laborers was repealed, a condition was developed in England under which the Chancery Court surrendered all jurisdiction over the field of crime and practically all jurisdiction over the field of personal rights and confined itself strictly to the domain of property rights. That took place at about the time America was receiving her early population. That theory, governing the equity court, confining it to the domain of property and property rights in cases where there was no remedy at law, and where irreparable damage might ensue through delay of action, that jurisdiction remains intact in England to this day. It was intact at the time our Constitution was adopted and our Courts began acting under the new Government. They obtained their jurisdiction, their right, their power in the equity field from the practices of Great Britain as they existed at the time of the adoption of our Constitution. The equity courts followed this practice for many years and it was not until about 1890 that they departed from the jurisdiction agreed upon in the sixteenth or seventeenth century and then departed from it to do what? To set up in America something very nearly like that which we have in Russia today, the only difference being that in America one class was given jurisdiction by the law, or at least by the law officers, acting under the equity process, while in Russia, acting of course under an entirely different process, another class was given jurisdiction. One condition is as far from right as the other.

Right of Association

As the social problems developed in America we found, in earlier times, that there could be no freedom and therefore no progress except that the people generally, all classes of people, be given the right of voluntary association and of collective effort in maintaining and advancing their interests, and so the old restrictive laws have been changed, some by statute in Great Britain, others by action of the Courts, and in general the condition improved to such extent that we found a much greater degree of all forms of liberty existing and consequently a much greater degree of progress. As this building of voluntary association among the people wen on, one class found that the working people whom King Edward had declared on a level with property were developing a power very similar or very near in proportion to that exercised by other classes of people. That is to say, we were striking a balance. We were reaching that point where everyone would have a fair chance.

A Precedent Established

Then, with the assistance of astute lawyers, using the equity field as the place to maneuver in, certain employers, a very small number, began to set up the same argument made by Edward III several hundred years before—that labor and property were on a par and should be treated that way, and building their arguments upon that basis, persuaded a Judge to enter an important labor dispute and issue an injunction prohibiting the working people engaged in that dispute from exercising rights that under any other circumstances that Judge would have held to be perfectly constitutional and morally right, but holding that since there was some danger to property, in the sense of loss of profit, and that the employer needed certain labor in order to make his property profitable, it was the province of the Judge to step in and prevent the exercise of legal and constitutional rights on the part of one class of citizens for the benefit of other citizens. That never took place in America until about the year 1890, although we had many labor disputes before that time, and it has not taken place in Great Britain or any other country in the world even to this day.

I submit if that statement be true, if investigation will show to the members of this Joint Committee that what I have said in this respect is the truth, it is sufficient to warrant the enactment of a law that will restore the proper condition of affairs by restricting the equity branch of our Courts to its proper field, that of property and property rights.

We soon, and very soon, will be faced with an extremely dangerous and difficult situation. A balance will be struck sooner or later. If it be not by the Legislature, in the interest of the restoration of a proper condition of affairs, then it will come through the gradual development of what some men choose to call law, the expressions of opinion of men sitting on the bench. The balance will come through that, not by restoring the working people to our rights, but by taking from the employers their rights and leaving us both close to a point of slavery. That this should happen in free America, within a few months or a few years after the ending of a great war, which was entered into for the purpose of safeguarding the world against autocracy, is almost unthinkable today. In the turmoil, pain and agony of readjusting our affairs after the unusual condition we passed through a few years ago, it, of course, is to be expected that a great many folks, who live in a state of almost perpetual excitement, will find it difficult to view things calmly and coolly. It is to be expected in the outer world men, instead of seeking to work together for a common good and considering above all things the national interest, will sometimes fly at each other's throats and perpetuate wrong and injury upon us. But this is a Legislative Hall and while you cannot entirely safeguard yourselves from the excitement and turmoil of the outer world, you know it is your duty—and I don't say this in the sense of trying to tell you anything—you know it is your duty to calmly look upon these things, not from the viewpoint of the effect they will have within a day, a month or year, but how they will effect the general progress and the general condition of our nation over a period of years. That the one country in the world which declared the true relationship between God and man, by announcing the new doctrine of inherent and inalienable rights, should also be the first to let this new form of autocracy fasten itself upon the people is unbelievable. I don't think it can happen and it is my firm faith that the constitution I was born and have lived under, your constitution and mine, my country and yours, has given us an understanding of human relations and has by its own history taught to you and me that there can no greater harm come to us, that there is no danger conceivable, than that we repudiate those glorious words that open the Declaration of Independence that gave us birth —"Men are created equal and are endowed by their Creator with certain inherent inalienable rights, among which are those of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." That sets man above the dollar. That sets labor above property. And if we be true to that declaration—and I think every man living, who is not in the possession of some tremendous power over his fellowmen—really believes in that theory because the belief and faith in that theory is inherent in man; if we want to demonstrate that we have not lost understanding of it; if we want to show that we have not reached the point where we have so far departed from political tyranny of the past that we have forgotten what the declaration of our forefathers mean, we will have to enact all over American legislation such as is proposed in House Bill No. 590 and its companion bills, the jury trial bills. I believe that time is coming. My faith is boundless in that respect. Defeat as it comes from time to time seems to me to be only a temporary setback. Surely, our people must understand and finally put into effect, in all respects, the great truth that we are telling to our children day after day in our public schools, in our private schools, in our institutions of all kinds. It cannot have become meaningless and I know as we talk and remind each other what is at [illegible] the question, gradually the truth will work into the minds of all and finally we will begin to put into effect for all of our people the great truth of the Declaration of Independence.

One of the speakers said to you that the injunction in labor disputes was never used except for the protection of the employer. To repeat —I say to you that you can search the records of this State, and it is one of the worst—if I may use that term in the use of the injunction system against the working people, and you will find not a single instance where the equity court acting in a labor dispute between employer and employe, has taken the side of the working people. Labor is always the defendant.

Dangerous Abuses

[illegible] you will understand what I [illegible] I said a few moments ago that a condition is being created in America similar to that which exists in Russia, the only difference being a difference in the class in power. There is a class dictatorship certainly growing which can soon harden through the reading and with the assistance of the equity branch of our Courts in which the employer is given rights [illegible] the courts may not claim.

I know those who would defend the injunction system constantly talk of protecting the interests of labor—know how they tell you stories of how it is necessary to protect non-union men. Let them produce injunctions or show you cases where they have gone into court and asked for injunctions on behalf of any working man. It is always on behalf of the employer and always on the theory that the employer has a property right in the labor of his employes—and that in free America.

Have we forgotten another important declaration that marks the vital difference between our nation and the position of all other countries on the globe? The Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution has a very definite meaning; a meaning which, perhaps, has been developing very slowly and is today becoming very clear as enunciated by our Courts. That declaration, that Amendment, prohibiting involuntary servitude and slavery, was not directed solely against the slave owners of the South; was not enacted only for the purpose of freeing the negroes; it has a broader intention. Congress was faced a few years ago, in the year 1900—and let me say, stopping for a moment, that you are all familiar with the condition which existed in many of the States following the enactment of the Thirteenth Amendment and attempts to evade its provisions—with a very grave problem, that of abolishing peonage in Hawaii, and the provision of the Constitution which made it necessary for Congress to act was the Thirteenth Amendment.

I cannot give you the exact language of the statute Congress enacted, but can quote you the substance. It contains the opinion of Congress as to the meaning of the Thirteenth Amendment. Please remember at that time peonage, a form of slavery, existed in Hawaii, which Congress sought to abolish. The statute reads something like this:

"There shall be no suit or proceeding of any kind permitted for the enforcement of any contract to labor and no remedy shall exist for a breach of such contract except a civil suit for damages."

That was to protect the poverty stricken peon of the Hawaiian Islands. This was done by the National Legislature on behalf of an alien people, and we, your own fellow-citizens, find ourselves coming before you now compelled to ask that you take similar action, not for an alien people, but for your own neighbors, for the working people of your State; that you place us on an equality with other citizens; that when we do things other people believe to be wrong that we be proceeded against exactly as other people are and in no other way.

It has been told you this afternoon that the purpose of the injunction writ, as used in labor disputes, was not to throw men in jail but to break strikes. An investigation into the industrial injunction field will prove this statement to be absolutely true. Very few of the injunctions ever come to trial. The particular occasion for their use, that is to say the strike, except in rare cases, cannot last very long, is over quickly—a matter of days, weeks and at most a month or so—and it is over. There is, therefore, little opportunity to get these cases before the Supreme Court—the only remedy we can find must come only through Legislative action.

In the complaints made against labor organizations you are sometimes told that crime has been committed and violence has been perpetrated. We are not defending that kind of thing and simply say, proceed when you think we do that kind of thing, proceed under the same provision of law, giving us the same right and safeguards under the law you claim for yourself, and if found guilty punish us accordingly and set up no different system from the one you use against yourself, or you will ultimately convince that class against whom you discriminate that the great thing in life is not justice; that the great thing in life is not fair play, but is power. That's the unfortunate lesson that the Russian people had ground into them by the Czar.

I hope that the condition that is now being forced onto our people in America will soon be removed and that there will be no chance for any man to talk the Bolshevism philosophy of Russia with any degree of success in our land and whether he have the opportunity or not depends entirely on how we conduct the affairs of our own country.

Labor Espionage System

I said we are sometimes charged with wrongdoing. I shall refer to something that is not very well known to those not immediately connected with industrial life, but which is very well known both by employers and by workers within the industries which accounts for many of the unfortunate conditions that we sometimes find in the labor field. There has been developed in America a system of private spies modeled upon the Government spies of Czarish Russia. We have told you in previous sessions of the Legislature something about that system. It is secret, necessarily must be secret to carry out its evil purposes, and it was difficult to get folks to believe us. No employer can be found who will confess any connection with it. As a matter of fact, the employer is sometimes just as guiltless of what is going on as is the worker, and both are suffering under the system. It is a terrific drain upon the industry, an added cost of production. We are now in a position to bring to your notice evidence gathered by men not connected with labor organizations, and whose standing is such as to compel attention. I hold in my hand the report on labor espionage as compiled under the auspices of the Cabot Foundation, that Foundation being presided over by Dr. Richard Cabot of Harvard University. The report shows that all over the United States there are tremendous industrial spy organizations whose purpose is to keep the employer and worker in constant turmoil in order that these agencies may secure business for themselves and the spy work they carry on. Even the casual reader of the Cabot report must come to the conclusion that this system has become such a running sore upon industry that it cannot be tolerated long and already some States have begun to legislate against it. Since the report is of some volume, I cannot stop to read it to you. In order that you will not get the idea I am telling you a fairy tale, I am going to see to it that a copy of the report reaches each member of this Committee. I want to give you the names of some of the spy agencies mentioned in that report. The most notorious to those who know of it is the so-called Sherman Agency. An investigation of the income tax returns shows that the head of that agency paid an income tax of over $50,000. That indicates the extent of the agency's business. During the strike at Gary, Indiana, representatives from the War Department discovered the agency was directing its representatives to stir up racial hatred among the people on strike. In a court case in Philadelphia much other information was brought to the surface.

One of the affidavits referred to in the report comes from a mna who only a few years ago, I recall him well, came to a convention of the Illinois State Federation of Labor as president of his own local union, taking an active part, posing as a radical, and at the time, according to his own confession, as stated in the affidavit referred to in the Cabot report, was in the pay of the Corporation's Auxiliary Co. The Corporation's Auxiliary Co., existing under a number of names throughout the country, is engaged exclusively in industrial spy work. To give you an idea of the character of this gentleman—it might be worth your time to listen to me refer to him briefly—I first saw him at the Joliet convention of the Illinois State Federation of Labor. He was posing as a radical. He was a Swiss by birth, was a rather pleasant looking sort of a fellow and very anxious to take part in the work of the convention. Along about this time, when there was considerable agitation on the question of preparedness, some of the representatives of the Woman's Peace Party, I think, got acquainted with this gentleman, named Schaefer; they had heard of the speech he made in the Chicago Federation of Labor on the question of preparedness; and went to him and he agreed to go with them to Washington before the Senate Committee and make a statement on the Swiss Military System. They took him to Washington. His speech was published in a pamphlet and sent broadcast. He came back to Chicago and paraded around, quite a figure among the radicals, and all the time was in the pay of the company, and all the time, according to his affidavit which I have, his expenses on all these trips were paid by the Corporation's Auxiliary Co.

Strikes Fomented

I also refer to one instance where the employer had taken out strike insurance, finding a dull season coming on and had employed one of these spy organizations to mix with his employes and agitate a strike. The insurance company suspected this and hired another agency to go in and stop it. You can imagine the condition in that plant while this was going on.

Case after case of that kind is reported in this report as going on throughout the country. Practically every well-known detective agency, and a great many organizations and business concerns that do not class themselves as detective agencies, are engaged and specializing in this kind of work, and for the first time we have a report coming from a source other than our own, telling what is going on in America. In this respect again I say when the head of one of these agencies finds himself in a position where it is necessary for him to pay over $200,000 in income tax the imagination is appalled when we try to figure out what must be the total cost upon industry of these organizations, which serve absolutely no good purpose for anyone. The Schaefer affidavit shows he was instructed, in one instance, to go into the Western Electric plant in Chicago and "start something," and other firms are specifically mentioned in that affidavit. That shows one of the difficulties we are confronted with.

I don't think it is reasonable to assume, gentlemen, that those who have in the past, and I presume will again appear before you in opposition to the kind of legislation we are asking, have any knowledge of this. They are intimately associated with employers and know what is going on, and my impression has

RUSSIAN LABOR MOVEMENT

Propaganda spread throughout Britain, North and South America, and the Antipodes, by the capitalist press, to the effect that the Soviet government of Russia is crushing the trades-union movement in that country, receives refutation in the following interesting statement written from Moscow for the Federated Press service by William Z. Foster, a staff correspondent:

"Moscow—Of all the lies told about Russia none has been circulated more persistently than the assertion that under the Soviet system the trade unions have been robbed of their importance and now are negligible in power and consequence. Some American labor men have repeated this ad nauseam. Now, exactly the reverse is true. The fact is that the trade unions are the very foundation of the whole Soviet structure; without their support and co-operation it would go to smash in a hurry. This is frankly recognized here on all sides.

Unions' Vigorous Growth

"The Russian trade union movement is throbbing with life. This was strikingly manifest at the recent convention of the all-Russian unions, which I had the good fortune to attend. The convention occupied itself with the most weighty social, political and economic problems now confronting Russia. And so important were its sessions considered that many of the country's greatest men, including Lenine and Gorki (Gorki sat through several sessions), attended them and participated. Public interest was intense. It was almost impossible to get a ticket of admission to the great theater where the convention was held. The place was constantly jammed with spectators an dthe mass of delegates (3,105 delegates, representing 8,485,800 members).

"In front of the building was stretched a cordon of Red Army soldiers to hold back the big crowds seeking entrance. During the convention word came to the presiding officers that some delegates, eager to secure admission for their friends, were bunching their delegate cards and sending them out so that those on the outside could come in with the cards. To stop this practice the chair announced that all delegates leaving the hall would have to display their cards and those unable to do so would be arrested.

Unfavorable Comparison

"Take this surging Russian trade union convention, dealing with most vital problems, and with people braving jail to attend it; compare it with our American Federation of Labor lack lustre affairs, occupying themselves for the most part with trivialties, and mustering at best a bakers' dozen or two of spectators, and one gets a fair idea of the comparative importance and vitality of the two trade union movements in their respective countries. It ill becomes American union leaders to sneer at the Russian labor movement.

"Although the Russian trade unions have accomplished things without parallel in labor history, they are for the most part of very recent origin. In fact, the movement, as it now stands, may be properly said to be only four years old. The first tracts of unionism in Russia began to develop toward the end of the nineteenth century, when a few workers' benefit societies led a precarious existence. Occasionally these primitive bodies waged strikes, but in such events the Czar's agents inflicted frightful hardships upon them, often shooting the strikers and exiling their leaders. Under such conditions the movement made little headway.

Early Persecutions

"The first great wave of real trade union organization came with the revolutionary attempt of 1905. Unions sprang up all over Russia. But with the failure of the revolution and with the attendant bitter persecution by the Government they soon began to go down again until within a couple of years the movement practically disappeared. A lively revival occurred in 1912-13 and great headway was being made when the war came on and almost completely wiped out the movement again.

"And so the situation remained all through the war, with the workers destitute of industrial organization. It is stated that at the outbreak of the February revolution in 1917 there were in all Russia only three unions, which had a combined membership of but 1,385. With the downfall of the Czar's government a tremendous trade union renaissance took place. Millions of workers streamed into the organizations.

"The following table will show progress of the movement to its present status, where it encompasses practically the entire Russian working class:

January, 1917	1,385
June, 1917	1,475,429
January, 1918	2,532,000
January, 1919	3,638,812
April, 1920	4,262,000
May, 1921	8,485,800."

ENGLISH CONFAB FAILS

According to information received by the American Federation of Labor, the big industrial conference called by the British Government, more than two years ago, seems to have failed, and representatives of the employers and workers on the Joint Committee of the National Industrial Council are resigning.

The committee was formed in February, 1919, and two months after issued a report that was unanimously approved by the National Industrial Council and accepted in principle by the Government. Nothing has happened since that time, and one paper states that "it is not easy for a body of men to keep their self-respect under such circumstances."

When this movement was launched it was agreed that the National Industrial Council would consider and advise the Government on industrial questions. The Government declared its willingness to proceed at once with the legislative and other steps necessary to give effect to the reports, but a coldness on the part of Government officials has appeared and nothing has been done with the recommendations.

With the members of the board resigning, it is only a question of a short time until the whole structure is in ruins.

Immediate action on development of the harbor at San Pedro is urged by I. A. Pederson, traffic inspector of the port, who in a letter requested the Harbor Commission to purchase a block of land to permit the erection of several warehouses and 100 feet trackage on the water side of the wharf.

In a somewhat battered condition due to the loss of a section of binding chain valued at $5000, a Benson log raft, containing 5,000,000 feet of lumber, has arrived at San Diego from Astoria in tow of the San Francisco tug "Hercules." The chain broke adrift off Drake's Bay and sank in thirty-five fathoms of water. The accident made it neessary for the Hercules to reverse its towing position.

The tug "Hercules" has in tow the second of the Benson Lumber Company's big oceangoing log rafts to be sent south this year. This raft contains about 5,000,000 feet of logs and has a deckload of 70,000 lineal feet of cedar poles. Another raft is now in course of construction at the Benson Company's plant in Wallace slough and will be ready to leave for San Diego about the first of the coming month.

With a heavy cargo of structural steel consigned to the Matson Navigation Company for its proposed office building in Market street and sixty cabin passengers, the liner "Buckeye State" left Baltimore July 30 on her maiden voyage to San Francisco. At Havana and Porto Rico the "Buckeye State" is scheduled to pick up 300 laborers en route to the Hawaiian Islands as steerage passengers.

To accommodate the increasing number of ships which are plying the Pacific Ocean, the Weather Bureau is endeavoring to secure and distribute information concerning storm and other meteorological data to the shipping interests. As information increases the bureau may be able to make daily weather maps of the Pacific as is done now on the Atlantic coast. Besides distributing the maps on land to mariners, the ocean weather news will be broadcasted by wireless so that ship captains can make their own weather maps from the data received via radio.

I have said that I would never be attorney for shipowners, until the seamen were shipowners. One of the purposes of my visit to Europe this summer is to acquire knowledge as to shipping conditions abroad and particularly to ascertain with what degree of success the seamen of Italy are operating ships.

Any seamen, who, with a view to becoming shipowners some time, are willing to form "a Seamen's Society for Savings" and will pledge to save one-fourth of their wages over their board and lodging per annum, said savings to be put in a depository that they themselves may select, please communicate with the undersigned.

Government by Thugs Brings Usual Result

"There can be no peace in West Virginia until the enforcement of the law is removed from the hands of private detective agencies and from those of deputy sheriffs who are paid, not by the State, but by great corporations, most of them owned by non-residents who have no interest in West Virginia's tomorrow," said S. B. Montgomery, former State Labor Commissioner, in an address over the bodies of Sid Hatfield and Ed Chambers, who where killed at Welch by a coal owner's gun man.

Trade unionists of West Virginia are censuring State and county authorities for failing to protect Sid Hatfield, who was murdered at Welch, by C. E. Lively, self-confessed coal owners' spy and thug.

Lively and two other thugs were arrested and the next day were admitted to bail without opposition from the prosecuting attorney.

The absence of State police in Welch at the time is causing trade unionists to ask Governor Morgan ugly questions. They ask the Governor why some of his "upholders of law and order" were not at Welch, as they would be to stop any meeting of union members. They are asking if his spy system failed to function when the life or a friend of the miners is threatened, and if he did not hear of the boasts that Hatfield "would never leave McDowell county alive."

The murderers are at large, and no one seriously believes that the men who are now supposed to enforce law in West Virginia will insist that they be punished.

Stores in Company Barns

Organized street car men in Newark, N. J., are operating stores in twelve car barns in the vicinity and doing business valued at $100,000 a year. It is stated that savings to these workers range from 12 to 18 per cent over prices in privately owned stores. The street car men also operate a sick benefit fund which pays $10 weekly for twelve weeks and $5 a week for twelve additional weeks. A voluntary savings fund has been established in each barn and it is now proposed to start a building and loan association.

These unionists say that "whatever is saved in wages is added to wages," that "whatever men do for themselves gives them self-reliance," and that "the advantages which the men obtain through their several instrumentalities of self-help tend to place increasing value upon their jobs."

Non-Unionism Destroys

How non-unionism, with its cut-throat competition, destroys wage workers' conditions and uproots stability in business is shown in the mining industry of the State of Washington.

Since last March these coal mines have been closed. The mine owners say they can not compete with the unorganized coal from Vancouver Island and Utah and with fuel oil from California. The miners refuse to be dragged down to the level of the unorganized and the coal owners have posted eviction notices on their company-owned houses. The miners reply that if their families are to be thrown into the street, they will withdraw the pump men and other maintenance men necessary for the protection of the mines. The coal owners declare they will henceforth operate on the anti-union basis, although they say they will employ union men—just enough to serve as an alibi that they "do not discriminate," and not enough to challenge the coal owners' absolute control of working conditions in and around the mines.

Unemployment Grows

Unemployment increased another 1.1 per cent in July in the larger industrial plants throughout the country, according to the United States Employment Service. This makes a total decrease in employment for the past six months of 7.3 per cent. The figures are based on returns from 1,428 firms in sixty-five cities, employing normally five hundred or more persons each.

"The darker side of the pctiure," says the report, "has to do with metals and metal products, from mining to manufacturing. The entire process, in all its ramifications, has felt the full force of the present industrial depression. There is an almost unprecedented lack of orders."

Dissolve Agreement

The agreement between the Bethlehem Ship Building Corporation and affiliates of the A. F. of L. metal trades department has been dissolved. The agreement provided that differences should be adjusted by a committee consisting of reprerentatives of both sides. The corporation insisted on a 10 per cent wage decrease. The unionists refused to concur and withdrew from the joint committee. It was agreed, however, that the mutual relations that have been built up during the life of the joint committee be continued as far as possible and that the system of recognizing and meeting with committees of employes by the management be continued.

Trade Unions Enjoined

Anti-unionists in Wheeling, W. Va., have carried their fight against organized labor to the Courts and have secured an injunction against eleven local unions engaged in construction building, and nearly one hundred individuals. The fifty-nine plaintiffs include the principal building contractors in the city.

The scope of the injunction is indicated by this first provision of the Court's order:

"From in any manner interfering with plaintiff's employes now in the employ of said plaintiffs, or with any one who may hereafter work with them."

DRAG TRUTH TO LIGHT

Investigations into the wreck of the steamer "Alaska" are still in their incipient stage, and the general public are as yet unacquainted with the external circumstances of the accident. Slowly but surely, however, information is beginning to leak through the veil of secrecy which has been maintained by the Federal inspectors, which points to criminal mismanagement upon the part of the steamship company, and gross inefficiency of the vessel's crew. Nearly two score persons were sent to their death by the sinking, and scenes were enacted which will remain indelibly impressed upon the survivors for the rest of their lives.

Numerous reasons for the unwarranted loss of life have been advanced by persons directly at interest, but none have dared to suggest the real cause, which is made all too plain by the testimony of many of the passengers and crew; and which is to the effect that the vessel was manned by an incompetent crew, the majority of whom were inexperienced strike-breakers.

Fred Helmer, the boatswain, states that only five out of the fourteen men comprising the deck crew were competent seamen, and from his further testimony it is shown that it was the efforts of these experienced men which succeeded in keeping the loss of life from being one of greater proportion.

One passenger described the case as one of pure criminal negligence, and several others condemn the crew of the ship and the company for sending the vessel to sea manned in such inefficient manner.

The original statements of a great number of the survivors must be accepted as containing the greatest element of truth, due to the fact that they were unapproached by interested parties at the time of furnishing the information, and were not subject to influence by other means.

As an intimation that the most glaring evidence of gross criminal negligence by the vessel operators will not reach the public the general attitude of the press is worthy of consideration.

Immediately following first details of the accident, one of the San Francisco dailies started a campaign of protest against the practice of hugging the shore, which, of course, only acted as a smoke screen to the main reason for the great loss of life attending the wreck.

No reference was made by these molders of public opinion to the fact that owing to the lockout of experienced seamen, due to the shipowners' determination to destroy the marine unions, the operators of the vessel had filled the places of experienced sailors with college students and other incompetents willing to act as strike-breakers.

When the test came the inefficient crew failed dismally, and evidence at hand suggests that many of the lives lost in the "Alaska" wreck were sacrificed to the greed for dividends; but of this the press, with the exception of the Daily News, remains discreetly silent.

SERIOUS REVELATIONS

The salient features brought to light by the most reliable evidence relative to the sinking of the steamship "Alaska," reveal conditions existing at the time of the accident substantially as follows: The weather was fine, with no wind; smooth sea; a slight fog, with visibility of about one mile.

After striking the reef, a period of approximately thirty minutes elapsed before the vessel was under water.

While a large percentage of the passengers remained calm, confusion and disorder prevailed among inexperienced members of the crew, which resulted in upsetting and destroying some of the lifeboats.

According to the boatswain's statement, after succeeding in getting the starboard lifeboats away from the vessel's side, he found himself on a raft with all three of the mates, while one of the lifeboats, loaded with women and children, was left in charge of an inexperienced member of the culinary department.

Much of the life-saving apparatus was not kept in proper order, and when necessity arose disaster resulted; lives were lost that could have been saved, and unnecessary suffering and hardship forced upon innocent passengers.

There is strong evidence which intimates that there are some vessel operators who do not seem to consider even this too great a price to pay for subjugation of American seamen.

LOCKING THE STABLE

As an aftermath to the "Alaska" disaster, the following news item is of more than ordinary significance:

J. O. Davis, collector of the port, yesterday sent a letter of warning to thirty-one steamship companies with offices in San Francisco, informing them that, in view of the great loss of life in the wreck of the steamer "Alaska," said to have resulted from inefficient handling of the lifeboats, he will hold each of the companies to a strict observance of the law regarding lifeboat crews.

Davis stated yesterday that he will insist that all members of lifeboat crews on ships clearing from San Francisco be regularly certified, capable lifeboat men.

"There is no reason for inexperienced men handling the lifeboats," said Davis yesterday, "and I don't intend to let any inexperienced men go out of this port who will fail in such an emergency as the wreck of the 'Alaska.'"

Davis' letter of warning reads:

"I deem it advisable at this time to call to your attention to the published reports of the wreck of the steamship 'Alaska,' and particularly to the statements of surviving passengers relative to the inefficiency of the lifeboat men employed on the vessel.

"You are aware of the provisions of the Seamen's Act regarding certified lifeboat men.

"You are advised, in view of recent disasters, that inspection of passenger vessels will be made immediately and strict compliance with the law in all respects will be demanded.

"An officer of the United States Coast Guard is on duty at the United States Barge Office, foot of Mason street, prepared to examine applicants and issue lifeboat men's certificates to those qualified.

"I would suggest, therefore, in signing on members of the crews of your passenger vessels that you require the proper number be provided with certificates as qualified lifeboat men, and thus avoid inconvenience and delay in the prompt sailing of your vessels."

To the initiated, this sudden burst of energy somewhat resembles the act of locking the stable after the nag has been stolen. If, however, we incline toward the charitable point of view, we can enjoy the satisfaction of knowing it is always "better late than never."

This powerful association of commercial interests is European, with headquarters in London; an American concern of similar kind is called the American Steamship Owners' Mutual Protection and Indemnity Association, Inc.

The effect upon legislation, dealing with maritime affairs, and government policies, where the influence of these bodies can be exerted is better imagined than described.

Recent happenings in marine affairs, however, suggest that the controlling force is centered in England and that all others are subject to this, the most powerful influence. Action taken in common must inevitably result in benefit to the greater power at the expense of weaker units, therefore the aggrandizement of British Sea Power can be obtained at the expense of that of all other nations, including the United States. What will be the measure of detrimental effect of British influence upon American shipping policies only the future will reveal. The International Seamen's Union of America, through their representatives, have sounded the warning of a serious menace to our maritime success and sea power (see pamphlet entitled Statement of Facts, and Seamen's Journal, issue of June 1, 1921).

If the warning shall remain unheeded, the responsibility will be upon the shoulders of American shipping interests, and those who through ignorance, carelessness, or willful betrayal of the American interests fail to meet the requirements of the situation.

MEMBERSHIP RIGHTS DEFINED

Under the caption "Legal Cases Affecting Labor" the July number of the British Labor Gazette contained the following Court opinion:

(1) Trade Union Acts

Trade Unions: Expulsion of Members Participating in Profit Sharing Schemes; Rules of Union; Jurisdiction of Court; Action for Injunction.

In 1909, Messrs. Lever Bros., Ltd., instituted a co-partnership or profit-sharing scheme for the benefit of such employes as satisfied certain conditions as to age and length of service. The scheme provided that a share of the profits of the Company should be given in return for an undertaking to give good service and not to waste the time or materials of the Company. The amounts paid to those employes who participated in the scheme did not depend upon the output, but upon the time during which they had been in the Company's employment.

All employes received from the firm the full Trade Union rate of wages, and this rate was not affected by the question whether the men joined the scheme or not. There was nothing in the scheme to compel participants to invest extra benefits received in the Company's shares, though it was the practice of many to do so.

There were members of thirty different Unions employed by the firm, but only two of these Unions raised objections to the scheme.

Two of Messrs. Lever Bros.' employes were threatened with expulsion by their respective Trade Unions for participating in the scheme, and they brought actions against their Unions, and certain officials of them, claiming an injunction to restrain the respective defendants from expelling them, contending that the rules did not give power to expel them by reason of their participating in the profit sharing scheme, and that, if they did, the rules were to that extent void. The plaintiff in the first action was threatened with expulsion from his Union under Rule 32 (1), which provided that it should be competent for the Committee to fine or expel any member upon proof that such member had violated the Trade Union rules of the district in which he was working, or was "working in a co-partnership system when such system makes provision for the operatives holding only a minority of the shares in the concern."

The second plaintiff was threatened with expulsion by his Union under Rule 31, which prohibited their members from working on a "premium bonus" system.

For the defendants it was contended that Trade Unions being, according to the common law of England, illegal associations, the Court could not entertain the action by reason of s. 4 of the Trade Union Act, 1871, which provides as follows:

> "4 (a). Nothing in this Act shall enable any Court to entertain any legal proceedings instituted with the object of directly enforcing or recovering damages for the breach of any of the following agreements, namely:
> (1) Any agreement between members of a Trade Union, as such, concerning the conditions of which any members for the time being of such Trade Union shall or shall not sell their goods, transact business, employ or be employed."

Mr. Justice Eve held that the action was one brought to enforce an agreement concerning the conditions of employment, and was within s. 4 of the Act, and that the action could not be maintained.

The plaintiffs in each case appealed.

The Master of the Rolls, in delivering judgment, held that the Court had jurisdiction, for the only unenforceable agreements between a Trade Union and their members were those which came within s. 4 of the Act of 1871, and that in these two cases there were no such agreements.

Rule 32 had not been broken by the first plaintiff, for the scheme did not involve the taking of shares in the Company, nor any provision that the men should hold a minority of shares, although it was true that the workmen did take shares and that they held only a minority. An injunction was accordingly granted to restrain the defendants from acting upon their threat of expulsion.

With regard to the second action, it was held that the scheme could not be held to be a "premium bonus" system. The decision of Mr. Justice Eve was accordingly reversed and an injunction granted.—Braithwaite v. The Amalgamated Society of Carpenters, Cabinet Makers and Joiners.—Ashley v. The General Union of Operative Carpenters and Joiners.—Court of Appeal.—13th June, 1921.

The decision defines certain rights of the individual members of trade unions under the Trade Union Acts.

The use of injunction in a labor dispute is exemplified, although somewhat at variance with the practice prevailing in the United States. The decision defines and protects the rights of the rank and file, and at the same time does not appear to injure the stability of the organization.

DIED

Cornelius A. Bredze, No. 2536, a native of Holland, age 26. Died at the wreck of the S. S. "Alaska," Cape Mendocino, Calif., August 6, 1921.

LOOKING FORWARD

Editor THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL:

As a member of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, I have keenly watched this last battle of seamen on the industrial field from a distance, and send my heartfelt greetings to all my comrades who have fought so nobly for the right to live as freemen. Several have died on the front and every day adds to the long list of workers maimed and killed through exploiters' agencies.

Although placed by circumstances where I could not mingle with my comrades during the struggle, I shall remain true to my union pledge until the end of my days. It makes me sick at heart, however, when I note reactionaries in the labor movement continually crying I. W. W. to every progressive move that might be suggested by some member with more advanced ideas. What is the use of talking or writing about legal freedom when every section of the Seamen's Act has been violated at the whim of the shipowners?

The battle is fought and lost. The hired brains of the shipping trust have been successful in establisihng the "American Plan." They are marshalling all their forces to put the union out of business. They are fighting us with scabs, police, injunctions, courts and press, with other institutions held in reserve.

The shipowners have organized for the open and avowed purpose of keeping the seamen in subjection. They fight every effort of the seamen to maintain a living wage and decent working conditions. To secure their great power, the shipowners have organized into an association. Each industrial group of employers have an association for their own particular industry; that is, in fact, an industrial union of employers. These various associations are brought together into that powerful organization of capitalists, the United States Chamber of Commerce, which is but the "One Big Union" of capitalists. Against these forces we must use our economic power. The strength of this weapon depends on how well it is organized. Completely organized, it is the strongest power in the world. Therefore let us bend our energies to organization. In pushing the union ahead we must adopt the newer forms of organization through the remodeling of the old ones. The new form of unionism is "Industrial unionism." It is far more efficient and scientific. It has grown out of the bitter struggles and defeats of the workers under the old forms of unionism. Craft unionism as at present constituted is unfitted to modern industrial conditions. With the advent of the nineteenth century a new idea in marine architecture arose—that of the ship moved by steampower instead of windpower, and fitted to combat the seas in storm and calm alike, with little heed as to whether the wind was fair or ahead.

The steamship grew in size and power till such giants of the waves as the "Leviathan" were set afloat. And as the sailing ship of the olden days is fast becoming a thing of the past, so have the seamen lost a good portion of their skill. During the latest strike our place was taken by men who never reefed a sail, or coiled a cable, who do not know how to launch a lifeboat or pull an oar. The shipowners kept the ships running in spite of all, and we lost the strike. Steering can be learned in a very short time, and other necessary work can be learned quickly, too.

Working with green men cannot be continued very long, but always long enough to break a strike, it seems. For this there is but one remedy—organizing along industrial lines. This formation of all workers into one union brings about solidarity in the entire industry. And solidarity is the one thing needed in settling wage disputes or grievances of any nature.

Other industries must be organized on similar lines. All workers of one industry into one industrial union, or all industrial unions into One Big Labor Alliance the world over.

Unionism is the only road to emancipation.

CHARLES LESSE. No. 1837.

REASON FOR COMPLAINT

Editor THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL:

Thinking you may be interested as to how things are going with the Seamen upon the Lakes, I take this liberty of writing a few lines for the JOURNAL.

The daily press in this neck of the woods is so submissive to wishes of the big interests that they pay no attention to our complaints; on the contrary, they take pleasure in giving glaring publicity to the most untrue statements made by the poor down-trodden shipowners.

We are being hounded again by that bunch of ruthless exploiters known as the Lake Carriers' Association.

They were pretty tame during the war period, but got very busy last spring. On the opening of navigation they set a scale of wages 23 per cent lower than that of last year. We were satisfied to go on at that, as it was practically the same paid by ships doing business with the organizations.

As soon as the season was well under way, they notified the different shipowners to instruct masters of the ships operating, that every member of the crew must take out a certificate of membership in their degrading organization or be separated from his job; some open shop, is it not? Much as many of us hated to do this, we submitted only for the sake of keeping the work.

Now they come along the first of August and say: Jack, you need another dose; from this date your wages are 15 per cent less—almost cutting it in two in a space of three months.

Some of us were beginning to believe that we had arrived at a stage during the last few years where we were almost like other humans, and could establish a little home for ourselves with a few comforts. I myself mustered up courage enough to take a little woman out of a sweat factory, where she had toiled away the best years of her life to sustain herself and raise a daughter. I took her for a life partner—and a good one she is too, God bless her—with the hope that I could keep her in decency, as I figured she had done her share as a toiler.

But what is the outlook now, if this outfit is allowed to force men to take just what they see fit to give them? The wage they have set, $85 per month for 12 hours a day, 84 hours a week, will hardly allow a man to live, let alone keep up a home in any kind of decency. There will be deficiencies which somebody must pay and somebody will pay, and I'll say, comrade, it will not be that little woman; she has paid her toll to the exploiters in full. Samuel Gompers was right when he warned the big interests not to go too far with the temper of American mankind and womankind.

Yours for love, life and liberty,

WILLIAM T. STARK.

Detroit, Mich.

SOMETHING LIGHT

Comrade W. A. Dahlgren has favored THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL with the following few verses, which he declares he obtained from one of his shipmates while a conscript in the Swedish navy several years ago. The member desires to obtain the name of the author and information as to whether it is a song or an old sea chantey:

SHANGHAIED SAILORS

Shanghaied in San Francisco,
We fetched up at Bombay;
They set us afloat in an old Lieth boat
That steered like a stack of hay.

We have sweltered in the tropics
When the pitch boiled up on deck,
And we saved our hides, with little besides,
From an ice-cold North Sea wreck.

We know the track to Auckland,
And the lights on Sydney Head;
We have kept close-hauled while the leadsman called
The depths of the channel's bed.

We know the quays of Glasgow,
And the loom of the lone Azores;
We have found our grub in a salt-horse tub
Condemned from navy stores.

We know the streets of Santos
And the river at Saigon;
We have drunk our glass with a Chinee lass
In a houseboat at Canton.

They pay us off in London,
And it's off for a spell ashore,
And again we ship on a southern trip
In a week or hardly more.

It's good bye, Sally and Sue,
For it's time to get afloat,
With an aching head and straw-stuffed bed,
A knife and an oilskin coat.

Sing "Time to Leave Her Johnny,"
Sing "Bound for the Rio Grande,"
When the tug turns back, we follow her track
For a last long look at land.

Then at last that disappears,
And only the blue is seen,
That will send our bones to "Davy Jones"
And our souls to "Fiddlers' Green."

Offhand, we are unable to give the desired information; but we realize how true to the life of old-time deep-water sailors the verses are, with the exception that the boarding-house master or mistress—as the case might have been—frequently forget to furnish even the knife and oilskins. A hook-pot and tin plate too frequently was all that accompanied the "donkeys' breakfast" aboard ship. However, times have changed somewhat, but there is still a doubt in the minds of old-time salts that they have changed for the best.

The need of the moment is not so much for the formation of new unions as for new members in those unions already formed.

MEXICO AIDS UNION LABOR

By Charles M. Kelley

"Were it possible for our people to fully comprehend what is going on in Mexico, they would be astounded. The Government there is attempting what I honestly believe to be the most progressive, the most enlightened and withal the sanest policy that has ever been attempted by any people. I am convinced that it is going to succeed."

That is the opinion of C. E. Davison, secretary-treasurer of the International Association of Machinists, after a stay of several weeks in the southern republic. While there, he interviewed the highest officials of the Government, studied the work of reconstruction, inspected the manufacturing plants and talked with workers, business men and politicians.

"I didn't realize fully what the Government was attempting to do until I had several conferences with General Plutarcho Calles, Secretary of the Interior," continued Mr. Davison. "Then everything was made plain to me. This official, the most important member of President Obregon's Cabinet, assured me that the Government's primary interest was in the workers. It is seeking to redeem them from centuries of merciless exploitation. Much along this line has been done, but much more remains to be accomplished.

Would Help American Workers

"General Calles, it should be stated, is not provincial or insular in his views. He knows that the Mexican people can not be lifted by their own bootstraps. They go up or remain down as the workers of other nations go up or down. If the workers of the United States are happy and contented, a healthy influence will be reflected upon the workers of our southern neighbor.

"Mexico secures the bulk of its supplies from the United States. It expects to spend hundreds of millions of dollars here in the next few years. It intends to spend this money in such a manner that it shall help and not injure American workers. Therefore, it has adopted as a settled government policy that it will have no dealings with any American firm that does not maintain decent working conditions. It wants for our producers the same conditions that it is conceding to its own producers."

Contracts for "Fair" Firms

Orders for agricultural implements, road building machinery, fire apparatus and various other manufactured products have already been placed with American concerns recommended by officials of the Machinists' Union, Mr. Davison said. Negotiations are pending for additional large contracts, all of which are to be placed with firms in the United States or Canada that are fair to organized labor.

"Naturally, this policy has aroused the 'open shop' crowd in this country and they are making a mighty howl about discrimination. A few months ago they sent their petted hireling, Ole Hanson, into Mexico, to see what could be done about it. He made a number of attempts to persuade the Government out of its program, but he didn't get far with his work.

"Then they sent Mrs. H. L. Gould, chairman of the woman's section of the United States Chamber of Commerce. She, too, failed in her mission of converting influential Mexicans to the 'open shop.' Mrs. Gould left Mexico with a very poor opinion of Mexican officials, but that seemed to worry them not at all.

"They are ready to pay gold for materials and supplies, and they assume the right to conduct their internal affairs in their own way. They claim the right to buy from whom they please, of such terms as are mutually satisfactory to buyer and seller. If American 'open shoppers' and labor baiters don't like their methods, they are, of course, free to sell their goods elsewhere. They won't distribute them in Mexico, that is certain."

Exposed "American Plan"

Mr. Davison explained to Mexican officials what the "open shop" really means. He made short work of the so-called "American plan," pointing out that it wasn't American at all, "but the reverse of it. It had for its object the subjugation of workers, the denial of rights that are granted as a matter of course by practically all other nations, and the setting up of an industrial autocracy with all the elements of feudalism."

"I think it is pretty generally understood in Mexico that those who represent the 'open shop' in America are the real enemies of Mexico," said Mr. Davison. "They are believed to be the same interests that have financed revolutions to the great injury of the people, the same crowd that is today clamoring for intervention, not in the interest of the Mexican people, but in the interests of those who have been exploiting them."

Mr. Davison points to action taken by the American Plan or Open Shop Conference of Connecticut as an indication of how the situation is to be met by American manufacturers of the "open shop" variety.

"Intervention is all these people think about," he said. "They would use the bayonets of American soldiers to prevent Mexico from giving effect to policies that all fair men must recognize as just and humane."

The Connecticut Open Shop Conference took cognizance of a letter written by Antonio I. Villareal, Secretary of Agriculture, addressed to William H. Johnston, president of the International Association of Machinists, stating the purpose of the Mexican government to purchase several million dollars' worth of farm machinery and implements and requesting that Mr. Johnston supply the names of firms that are fair to organized labor.

In a series of resolutions that are being sent to Senators and Representatives and the various commercial lobbies at Washington "this request and proposed action" are denounced as "a discrimination by a foreign government in favor of a principle inimical to the best interests of the industrial life of the United States," and, the resolutions state, "should be looked upon with disfavor and as an act unfriendly to the people of a nation whose good graces it is seeking." The resolutions then continue:

"The American Plan or Open Shop Conference of the State of Connecticut, in meeting assembled, in the name of and for American industry, protests against any interference by a foreign government with the industrial problems of the United States, particularly when such interference tends to discriminate in favor of a principle un-American in character and contrary to the best interests of American industry."

"It is not enough that Mexicans are willing to purchase from Americans, paying the price demanded," said Mr. Davison. "They must be forced to buy from manufacturers who treat workers as commodities and foreign nations as objects for exploitation."

Count on Public Opinion

The Mexican government, Mr. Davison declares, feels that American public opinion will support a movement that directly helps the American people and only indirectly benefits Mexicans. Organized labor has agreed to protect Mexico's interest by exercising supervision over goods being manufactured for it, thus eliminating all species of graft and commission. That will be a definite gain.

"But the real, the underlying thought back of the whole proposition," he adds, "is a conviction on the part of Mexican authorities that they can raise the standard of their own workers by assisting in maintaining the standards of workers of a nation that will, by reason of its close proximity, continue to exercise a great influence upon the lives and methods of those who reside across the border.

"It is an admixture of broad humanitarianism and sound business. It is the antithesis of the hateful policy of some American manufacturers of getting as much as possible, giving as little as they are forced to give, and using force to accomplish their purpose when other plans fail."

THE LOADING OF SHIPS

In commenting on lax navigation regulations, the Australian Worker says:

There is no gainsaying the fact that the slipshod methods of loading and arranging cargo on the coastal—and even on some of the deep sea—vessels constitute a serious element of danger.

The doctrine of the owners and bosses seems to be that as the boats haven't far to travel, the cargo can be tumbled and jumbled in the holds in any old way without regard to balance or stability.

And not only this, but the practice has developed of placing livestock on the main decks, without making any adequate provision for keeping sections of the loading in equalized separate compartments.

Thus, no matter how well-built and sea-capable such vessels may be, they are not given a fair chance. They are the victims of hasty and inefficient loading, and this in turn is the product of the shipowners' greed, and their disregard for human life—so long as it is not their own.

In New Zealand the shipping laws take due cognizance of such callous indifference to the seamen's and passengers' safety.

Until something of the kind is done, Davy Jones will continue to keep his cupboard full, and the grasping, soulless shipowners will merely look upon the cupboard's contents as the price humanity must pay to Capital—hunger for fat dividends.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Check Coolie Influx

Just before leaving Washington for his trip to Canada, where he is to address the conventions of the International Photo Engravers' Union, the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen and the International Typographical Union, President Gompers of the A. F. of L. held the witness chair for more than five hours in opposition to the Kalaniaole resolution, which proposes to authorize the entry of 50,000 indentured Chinese coolies into Hawaii to work on the sugar plantations. The hearing was before the House Committee on Immigration.

Mr. Gompers had appeared previously in the same hearings, to deny any knowledge of the small fund said to have been contributed by Japanese business men in Honolulu to the sending of the President and Treasurer of the Honolulu Central Labor Union to Washington to resist the coming of the indentured cheap labor. These Japanese merchants contributed to the anti-coolie fight because Japanese workers on the plantations have a strong union which has established standards of living which enable Japanese workers to spend a great deal of money in the stores. Unlike most merchants in the United States, these Japanese business men in Honolulu realized that low wages for labor meant small profits for the business man who plays on the square.

Would Establish Peonage

The labor leader's argument before the committee was to the effect that this is the entering wedge for a great movement of the anti-union fanatics to crush the labor movement by opening the flood gates to the surplus cheap labor of the Orient. Plantation hands in Hawaii get a basic wage of only 77 cents per day. They have no voice in fixing their own wages, conditions or period of employment. The pending resolution, framed by the sugar planters and backed by powerful financial interests, would permit the holding of these helpless coolies in a condition of slavery, so that they would be arrested and punished at the first sign of intention to leave their jobs.

The A. F. of L. legislative agents declare that Congressman Albert Johnson of Washington, chairman of the committee, together with Representatives Shaw of Illinois and Free of California, are pushing the resolution with every resources at their command, as indicated by the questions they ask during the hearings. Every labor man who has testified has been mercilessly grilled. The drive to re-introduce slavery into America is on in earnest, as the first fruit of "normalcy."

Labor organizations throughout the United States should bear in mind that the Japanese government, controlled by militarists and imperialists who have done their utmost to destroy the Chinese Republic and to prevent the liberalization of China and to destroy the freedom of Siberia and Korea, has shown no desire to interfere with this coolie scheme. On the contrary, it probably is pleased at anything which may seem to weaken the sympathy of Americans for China, its victim. For Japanese imperialist plotters are at the bottom of all the troubles of the Chinese people, fomenting their civil wars, interfering with governmental reforms and preventing the rebuilding of China by Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the George Washington of the Far East. Japanese official propaganda is strong in Hawaii among the big business men, and it is very strong indeed in Washington among the politicians. A sensation would probably result from the disclosure of the real source of the attempt to bring cheap Oriental labor into Hawaii. That is a point, however, with which Mr. Gompers, adherent of the League of Nations, did not deal.

A Constructive Innovation

A meeting of the A. F. of L. Committee on Information and Publicity held last night at headquarters, with Mr. Gompers presiding, agreed upon a plan for co-ordination of its work through the creation of a Bureau of Information and Publicity.

No chief of this bureau has yet been agreed upon, as the whole plan must first be approved by the Executive Council. But the various divisions have been outlined, as follows:

News Letter—Weekly News Letter, with Editor Egan in charge of division.

Library—Library and the Daily Digest, with Librarian Duffley in charge of the division. The Digest to be broadened in scope.

Information—Gathering, systematically, all vital information for the organization, with Miss Florence Thorne, former Secretary to Mr. Gompers, in charge.

Publicity—Chester M. Wright, former newspaper editor and magazine contributor, to be in charge of publicity division.

The bureau is to be reinforced by the addition of McAnarney, who served in the Non-Partisan Political Committee here last year, and Oliver Hoyem, who for several years past has represented the Prison Labor Committee in the capital. Their services are declared in the report to be essential in order that the director of the bureau shall not be overwhelmed with details of the work. It is planned that the organization shall be assembled on the top floor, where Mr. Gompers is located, so that unity may be attained through physical proximity. Daily conferences of the persons making up the bureau are proposed, in order that the information and publicity operations of the Federation headquarters may be moved by a central purpose and will.

To Him That Hath

Here is a bit of light on "normalcy" in Congress. Date, August 3, 1921:

The Packers' Control Bill, back from its final adulteration and compromise in the conference of the House and Senate committees, is up for final passage as a conference report. Senator Kenyon is explaining that it is a poor thing, but the best that can be had in the present Congress.

Fernald of Maine, a reactionary in most matters, says:

"I merely wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa in regard to the provisions of this so-called packers' bill. It seems to me that it is rightly named the Packers' Bill, for I recall that in the discussion of the bill in the Senate some weeks ago the Senator from Wisconsin (La Follette, my distinguished seatmate) made a very illuminating and intelligent speech on the bill, during the course of which he held in hand a copy of the bill and said that seven provisions of the bill were written in it in the handwriting of the packers' attorney. I merely want to inquire of the Senator if those seven provisions remain in the bill?"

Kenyon replied: "I think most of the provisions referred to by the Senator have been left in the bill."

He added, however, that except for the fact that it deprives the Federal Trade Commission of the right to investigate the meat packing and livestock industry, except by request of the Secretary of Agriculture, the bill is a step in the right direction.

Reed of Missouri announced that he wanted to "be recorded against all this kind of socialistic legislation." Norris of Nebraska, chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, refused to sign the conference report because the packers had dictated the seven points mentioned by Fernald.

Boodle Gets Results

Organized labor in the stockyards will have to congratulate the packer lobby in Washington on getting results. But if organized labor spent one-fifth the money and time in dealing with the politicians in Congress and in the Administration that is lavished upon them by the packers, the Federal Trade Commission's plan for deflating the Armours and Swifts and Morrises would have been enacted and carried out long ago. It is no exaggeration to say that the progress of the Packers' Bill through the House and Senate can be mapped in the social columns of two daily newspapers in this city during the past five months.

Finks Murder Labor Witness

Sid Hatfield and Ed Chambers, ambushed by a Balwin-Felts gunman and murdered while unarmed, have passed off the scene of the Mingo county coal strike in West Virginia. The Senate Committee on Labor, investigating that strike, has not been disturbed by the assassinations. Hatfield was the last witness to testify here. Senator Kenyon and his associates have made no plan to proceed to West Virginia while the killing is still fresh in their minds to get evidence as to the reason for the continued anarchy in the coal fields there. Indeed, it appears less and less likely that they will go to West Virginia at all until forced by some outcry from a more persuasive source to finish up the formality of a study of the facts. The Senators are not interested; industrial problems are too human, too real, too dangerous things to juggle with. They wish they were well rid of the whole thing.

As though to mock their indifference, the Bureau of Industrial Research in New York city has just mailed to each member of this Senate committee a copy of Arthur Gleason's pamphlet on "Workers' Education," dealing with education of adult workers by the trade unions and pro-labor organizations in America and abroad.

The only labor colleges which have justified their own existence have been those which have prepared trade unionists to enter politics and administrative work in the interest of their class.

LABOR AND INJUNCTIONS

been that they are as active as anyone in promoting that sort of work. Some of those gentlemen are engaged in similar activities themselves. I am sure that the join committee is going to give very serious consideration to all of these measures.

In the jury trial bills we stand before you asking for what our forefathers asked of the British King prior to the American Revolution. We might say to you, complain to you in the exact language of the Declaration of Independence, and say we are denied trial by jury when charged with offenses under which other citizensin similar condition are always accorded the right of trial by a jury.

Insidious Effects

The injunction, as used in labor disputes, has for its purpose the poisoning of public mind against the working people. The average man or woman, having respect for the law and not knowing those details, not understanding what the injunction is, assumes it is a declaration of law and that those against whom it is directed have violated the law, have been tried and found guilty and are placed on probation, as it were, by the Judge. That is what the general public believes when it hears of the injunction writ. It has the effect desired by the employer. The public becomes suspicious, the worker discouraged, the strike is broken and he goes back with a feeling in his heart there is something wrong with the law.

Let me give you one instance of an injunction. A strike of garment workers took place in Chicago some time ago. About midnight an attorney called up a judge, whose name I can not now recall, and got him to consent to an injunction which, the following morning, was plastered in printed form all around the plants and everywhere the workers congregated. There had been no notice to the workers, no hearing, they knew nothing about what the judge was doing. That is a typical case except that employers do not usually feel obliged to wait until midnight before interviewing the judge. I will cite another instance, before I conclude, that will bring very forcibly to your attention the discrimination between classes of citizens. In the iron molders' strike in Chicago a few years ago an injunction was secured in the court of Judge Baldwin, directed against the members of the Iron Molders' Union and, as usual, against all their friends, associates, sympathizers and anybody who knew anything about it. The injunction prohibited them from doing anything that might have the effect of assisting the strike. A polish newspaper, edited on the west side in the vicinity of the molders' homes, had been publishing news articles favorable to the strikers. When the injunction was issued a reporter from the Chicago Tribune was one of the first to secure a copy and brought it to me. I read it carefully and found among those enjoined was the Polish newspaper and its editor for circulating any printed matter, circulars, and so on, that might interfere with the business of the complainant. I said to the Tribune man, "Well, here's the development that was certain to come. Now, then, if they can enjoin that Polish newspaper editor they can enjoin the Chicago Tribune, that is where the injunction will finally reach." The reporter said, "Can I go to Judge Baldwin and tell him what you said." I said, "Yes." He came back and said he told Judge Baldwin, who said, in effect, "I did not know there was any such thing in the injunction. I did not know a newspaper man had been enjoined and on motion of either side I will strike that out." The newspaper man asked, "What will I tell Judge Baldwin?" I said, "You can say this for me—In my view of America, my understanding of my country, if there is anything in it that stands above anything else, it is that any molder has every bit as much right before the courts as any newspaper editor; if it is wrong to enjoin the newspaper man it is wrong to enjoin the molder." One of the strikers went to this same Polish newspaper and gave it a copy of a strike notice and a notice of the meeting to be printed as a paid advertisement. The editor printed it and Tony was charged with contempt of court and convicted. Six or eight months later, with the strike over and broken and the heart gone out of the workers, the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois finally said that that was wrong, and I think their language was, "A man's liberty may not be thus lightly dealt with."

Tony had the support of some of the other trade unionists in the court fight. If he had not, his case would not have reached the Supreme Court and thousands of workers in the foreign section of Chicago would have believed that the declaration of Judge Baldwin, the contempt proceedings under which this man was convicted, was an expression of American law. We know now it was not, but those things have appeared in every injunction writ which has been issued in the past several years, with one or two exceptions, as they have come to my notice. I submit that a condition of that kind is dangerous, not good for the country, not an expression of the real spirit of America.

Many Abuses

I could quote you one case after another, but will content myself, if you will have that much more patience with me, by referring to just one more case. We talk a good deal about respect for the law, especially to the fellow who newly arrives on our shores and does not understand what is going on in this country. I want to tell you of one instance showing how injunction judges regard the law. Some years ago the Supreme Court, in the case of Kemp vs. Division 241, acted upon the question of the right to strike for the purpose of bringing about a union shop and upheld that right. The case was decided fully and clearly and has never been reversed, nor has any contrary decision ever been made. At least five years after that decision of the Supreme Court of Illinois had been made, injunction judges continued to prohibit strikes for the purpose which the Supreme Court held was legal. Do you call that respect for the law? I do not. Again, I will give you the name of at least one judge who did that. Baldwin of Chicago. I have no personal feeling against him. I simply give his name in speaking of these things so you will have some definite information as it is necessary for me to be specific. He is not alone in that respect and is no better nor worse than other judges who do similar things. Why they do it in the face of what occurred in this country in the past few years is beyond me.

When we entered the war against Germany we stopped issuing injunctions and you can count those issued in Illinois during the war on the fingers of your hand. During the war when we talked of autocracy in Germany, of the need for sacrificing life and property, doing everything necessary to prevent autocracy in the world, those men who had been for years restricting the rights of the working people by these writs ceased to do so. The arguments necessary to justify the war were exactly opposite to those which were used to justify injunctions in labor cases. The opponents of this measure will be able to challenge my statement by bringing forward a few instances of injunctions being issued during the war; but I say they are very few, and challenge anyone to deny my statement when I say that for all practical purposes the use of the injunction writ in labor disputes came to an end during the war period and was not revived until the cessation of hostilities.

We are not asking you to abolish the writ of injunction. Those familiar with the injunction writ must have understood our language as we said to you, "It is the misuse of the injunction writ used in industrial disputes which should be abolished." We are not seeking to abolish the writ. We recognize the beneficial feature of that process when properly used. We believe it has been misused in other than labor cases. If necessary to issue an injunction to protect property from damage, and there is no other remedy at law, the fact that a labor dispute is on does not make any difference, if it is issued for its proper purpose, protection of property rights and property, and not for the purpose of restricting or limiting personal rights. Criminal acts during strikes should be punished precisely as criminal acts under any other circumstances. The remedy is at law. The accusation, trial and punishment should be administered in accord with law—by the law courts—in strike cases just as is done in all other cases. The equity court is not the place of accusations and trial of criminal charges. We ask for equality before the law. It cannot be given us in any other way except by limiting the use of the injunction through which we are now denied such equality.

One of the main functions of the Legislature is to direct the courts how to proceed. Much of the statute law of this and every other State of the Union was enacted for the purpose of limiting, changing or abolishing various practices of the courts because the Legislature had found these practices to be harmful and unfair to the people.

There is much more that could be said on this question, but I recognize that I have tested your patience as fully as I have right to and want to thank the members of the committee and you, Mr. Chairman, for your courtesy in listening to me.

If the spirit of the Constitution is to be preserved as a factor in American life, encroachments upon our freedom by despotic Court dictum must be checked. Too long have we passively submitted while our rights have been abridged by judicial decree, and our liberties suppressed without authority or law. Our duty to posterity demands that we place our heel upon the viper of tyranny.

The most powerful influence for an active intelligence is an empty stomach.

Labor News

At St. Joseph, Mo., ice wagon drivers have secured a new agreement, which raises wages $2.50 a week.

The Contra Costa Building Trades Council recently ratified an agreement similar to the one adopted in Alameda County. The agreement will become effective when ratified by the Builders' Exchange.

The three months' strike of organized sheet metal workers of Peoria, Ill., has ended. The union shop is agreed to by employers and rates will be 87½ cents an hour, with a forty-four-hour week.

The Ministry of Labor has granted the application of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employes for a board of conciliation in its wage dispute with the Canadian national system.

Public officials at Greybull, Wyo., recognize the moral worth of trade unionism and have passed a city ordinance which provides that only union labor shall be employed on city contracts.

Wage requests presented a week ago to eastern railroads by the four railroad brotherhoods and the Switchmen's Union were rejected by presidents of the lines at a recent conference in New York.

Clarence J. Yarrow, representing the oil workers, states that prospects for an amiable settlement of the controversy between employes and operators are bright, and that several large oil companies have agreed to sit in conference to adjust the difficulties.

By repudiating the One Big Union and its international organization, Winnipeg street railway workers have decided to go it alone and have organized a new union to be known as the Canadian Independent Federation of Street Carmen.

The coal strike situation in Washington shows no tendency towards settlement. It is reported through District 10, United Mine Workers of America, that two hundred guards bearing deputy sheriff's badges have been sent into the mine fields at request of the operators.

The Miners' Union of the Tonopah and Divide districts voted last week to return to work, thus ending a strike in effect since April 16. Other mine workers previously had voted to return and accept wage reductions amounting to about 12½ per cent. The new scale for miners ranges from $4.75 to $5.25 a day.

Shopmen on the Pennsylvania Railroad will not strike to force the company to comply with the order of the United States Railroad Labor Board to meet with their union employes and draw up a new schedule of working agreements. The unions are to rely on American patriotism to force the roads to obey the Transportation Act.

The International Convention of the United Mine Workers of America, the largest industrial union in America with 45,000 members, will convene in Indianapolis September 20. One of its most important problems will be to devise means of meeting the resistance of the coal operators to the union's demand for a shorter work day and a higher wage rate and the method of realizing the union's program for the nationalization of mines.

World's Workers

Striking Japanese shipyard workers have decided to resume work on the strength of a preliminary compromise settlement which gives the workers a voice in the mechanical direction of the plants.

Trade Commissioner W. J. Page, reporting from London under recent date, states that "For the first time since the beginning of the British coal strike on April 1, there is a considerable and gratifying decrease to record in the figures of the unemployed throughout the country."

According to figures from the Polish Ministry of Labor, the number of unemployed in cities and towns of former Russian Poland and Western Galicia on May 1 was 130,000, mainly in the Warsaw and Lodz districts and chiefly among the unskilled laborers, the textile workers, and those employed in the metal industries. No figures for other districts are available and none at all for agricultural workers.

The Australian Workers' Union, the largest union in the commonwealth, acting on behalf of its agricultural branch, has served its demands on fruit growers, canners and packers, which calls for a wage for general adult labor of £6 weekly. Skilled workers, pruners, grafters, butlers and cooks, it assesses at £8 ($40) per week, with "keep" in each case. Hours are to be forty weekly, with no work on Saturday afternoon. Traveling expenses to and from the job to be paid by the employer.

The new South Wales Labor Government has opened its first State-owned butcher shop. An immediate reduction in the price of meat, ranging from 25 to 50 per cent, followed. To compete with the State shop, private meat sellers were forced to make similar reductions. Even with these reductions, the State shop showed a profit of $250 for the first week. The State plans to open shops in every large center around Sydney and force private sellers to give cheap meant to the public.

Adherents of the Third Internationale were recently defeated in France by a very narrow majority in a vote taken by the National Labor Convention at Lille. The final vote stood 1325 for Moscow affiliation, while the opposition registered 1572 votes. President Jouhaux of the Confederation Generale du Travail, who is a bitter opponent of the Moscow adherents, spoke for five hours in reply to over fifty Communist orators who favored making the French labor movement an agent for a revolution in France.

The Union of German Metal Workers is the largest trade union in Germany and includes more than 1,600,000 members. This union has a statistical bureau which has recently collected statistics of wages and of cost of living in the metal industry, including in its investigation about 2,300,000 workers. It has published the results of its investigation in the Metallarbeiter, which is the official union organ. According to statistics, about 63 per cent of these workers are receiving wages which are more than 800 per cent greater than those of 1914, about 36 per cent are receiving wages from 500 to 800 per cent greater than in 1914, and the remainder are receiving wages which have not increased as much as 500 per cent since 1914.

Domestic and Naval

The steam schooner "Mukilteo" occupied twenty days to make her last trip to Puget Sound from San Francisco with the barkentine "Thomas P. Emigh" in tow.

The Sheppard-Towner Maternity and Infancy Bill, for Federal and State aid for maternity and infancy hygiene, was passed by the United States Senate and is now pending before the House of Representatives. Seven Senators voted against it.

The International Mercantile Marine Company and its subsidiaries earned $12,782,178 in 1920—a decrease of $4,962,753, as compared with figures for 1919, said the annual report recently made public. The company's total surplus was given as $30,556,973.

Madrid despatches state that the United States Shipping Board steamer "Black Arrow" sank last week off Cape Villene, on the west coast of Spain. The crew and passengers were saved, but it was thought the ship and cargo were a total loss. The steamer was bound for Santander from Havana.

Governor J. J. Blaine of Wisconsin has declared for Government control and operation of coal mines, in a letter to Fred A. Baxter, mayor of Superior, Wis., who petitioned Governor Blaine to call a conference of Governors of a number of Western States to discuss the coal situation.

The superdreadnaught "California" will be taken from Mare Island and placed in the Hunter's Point drydock on August 22. Five tugs of the San Francisco Tugboat Company will be used in moving the giant fighter. Included in the work that will be done on the California will be the installation of her propellers. How long the vessel will be on the ways is indefinite, but upon her release she will be ready for sea duty. Sighting of the "California's" turrets will also be made, while the craft is in drydock.

The House Immigration Committee believes it will solve the Hawaiian labor problem by changing the bill that would permit the importation of Chinese and making it authorize the importation of Filipinos and Porto Ricans into the Hawaiian Isles instead. The plan tentatively agreed upon would provide for a commission to have charge of the importations. This change in the plans would provide the Hawaiian plantations with the labor they need and might silence the objection of those who feared the importation of Chinese to Hawaii would lead to their importation later to the mainland of the United States.

The Union Iron Works has been awarded the contract for repairing and alterations on the Pacific Mail liner "Golden State." They were the low bidders, with a cost estimate of $71,000. Bids for the work were received by the United States Shipping Board and the award was granted recently. Contract for the repairs to the "Golden State" makes a total expenditure by the Shipping Board of nearly a quarter of a million dollars within a week on the Pacific Coast on two vessels. Recently the Todd shipyards of Seattle was ordered by the board to proceed with the reconditioning of the liner "Wenatchee" at a cost of $155,000.

The Lloyd Brasileiro Steamship Co., an official line connected with the Brazilian Government, has recently opened a co-operative store for the sale of foodstuffs and other articles of prime necessity to the employes of the company. No payment will be made in respect to children over the age of fourteen, and there will be a limitation in regard to incomes—the payment being arranged on a sliding scale and closing when the parents' income is brought up to more than $30 per week.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

Officer's Complaint Reveals Conditions in Merchant Marine

A Mate's Tale of Woe

Some short time ago Silas B. Axtell, attorney of New York, favored the Journal with the following interesting correspondence:

Editor of the Seamen's Journal.

Dear Sir:—Enclosed herewith is a very interesting letter which I received from William Fieldman, mate of the S. S. "Haddon." It is dated, as you see, from Constantinople.

Would it not be a good idea to publish this letter just as it is? Here is, apparently, an officer of the old school who is trying to readjust himself to new conditions. Evidently he is a benevolent autocrat, if he is an autocrat. I think it would do many of our comrades good to read this letter.

Sailors should realize that they may be mates themselves some day and they should put themselves in the place of the captain and first officer once in a while, especially when they get a master who is decent. Give a good captain and mate a chance to make good. If they do not, those men will be superseded by bullies. In the long run, of course, if we cannot make a success of operating the ships under our comparatively liberal Seamen's Act, then the operation of ships will sink back into the hands of those who use more brutal methods.

I enclose copy of my letter to Mr. Fieldman. You can publish that letter and this one, too, if you want to.

Yours very truly,

S. B. AXTELL.

(Copy)

Constantinople.

Mr. Silas B. Axtell.

Dear Sir:—Your admirable little book, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen," should be in the possession of every person following the sea.

Having followed the sea for nearly thirty years and served as a sailor when sailors had practically no rights, when wages were small and treatment of them was brutal and often unbelievable, no person felt more grateful to those men who caused the passage of the Seamen's Act than I.

But upon my return to the Merchant Marine after ten years in the Government service, I was surprised to find a number—yes, sir, a large number of men—who were, and still are, exceeding the bounds of rational conduct when in foreign ports.

It appears as if these men see only the word "rights," and the word "duties" is invisible to them.

In most instances officers are to blame for the actions of their men, and these officers—themselves violators of rules and regulations—are the ones who make it practically impossible for any one officer to maintain discipline and order on board ship while in foreign ports.

There is, also, at the present time, a number of men in possession of A. B. seamen's certificates who are NOT entitled to have them, and not able to perform the duties of a sailor, creating discontent among the good men, for as a rule these men, having procured the certificates by fraud, are undesirable in numerous other ways.

They are the ones who shirk their duties, impose upon their shipmates and disregard law and order.

Their ignorance of the work on board ship would, in most cases, be overlooked if they were willing to work and learn. But, while they know little or nothing about ship's work, they seem to know all about their rights and can generally quote the law in a manner which tends to impress the better men, and in spite of their shortcomings they are considered "regular guys." They are the men causing trouble to the unions as well.

Of course, there are cases where good men get into difficulties, but as a rule it is through those law-quoting "misfits." They are the ones who pay to get outbound ships, thereby taking good men's places. This statement is based on reports received by me from men who know and who are very bitter against this existing evil. Please investigate at your convenience.

It is usually a reflection on the mate if his ship arrives home in a condition which causes people to think that she has been picked up at sea and towed in.

But when the crew goes ashore in a foreign port, remains away from the ship for days—yes, sir, in many cases they do not return until the ship is ready for sea again—when one cannot obtain men to do the work required in port (there is work which cannot be performed at sea), when they inform you that the good time they had while ashore was worth the fine imposed by law—usually two days' pay for each day's absence—then you will understand why the ship is not presentable on reaching home ports.

Often members of the crew return on board under the influence of liquor, using insulting, obscene and threatening language to officers—and as for relieving them of their liquor, which they brazenly carry on board with them, that, my dear sir, has the same effect on them as the waving of a red flag has on a bull.

Whatever reports you might have received about misconduct by crews from American ships in foreign ports, I'm sorry to say, have not been exaggerated. As for anyone attempting to repeal the Seamen's Act, that would be an injustice to the good men, but something must be done, and, in my opinion, it can only be accomplished by the men themselves.

It is an established fact that Americans are now heartily disliked throughout the world, thanks to the actions of those misrepresentatives when ashore in foreign ports, and too often a nation is judged by the actions of a few.

Having the welfare of the Merchant Marine at heart, as I know you have, you can readily see how a man, having survived the hard days at sea and later spent years among discipline and order, feel under existing conditions.

Upon my return home, I would be pleased to have an interview with you.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM FIELDMAN,
S. S. "Haddon."

P. S.

Extract From "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen."

"It is not the intention of Congress to encourage you in thriftlessness and careless use of your money in foreign ports."

"You are expected, as men, to live up to the terms of the contracts you make, so far as the law requires it."

"A seaman who goes ashore, gets drunk or otherwise delays the ship or the ship's work in a foreign port is abusing the liberty given to him and merits the severest condemnation of his fellow workmen. Your whole future liberty in the handling of yourselves and the freedom of all seamen of the world as well is at stake; much depends upon your conduct. It is up to you to prove that the trust and confidence which the people of America have placed in you, has not been misplaced."

WILLIAM FIELDMAN,
Mate S. S. "Haddon."

A copy of above posted did not have the expected or desired effect; in fact, the former offenders repeated their act, and it was only upon advice from the U. S. Consul in Constantinople that one member of the crew was taken back after deserting ship and remaining away for six days.

Two members of the crew were detained two days ashore by the local authorities and fined $100 and $50, respectively, while nine other offenders grace the leaves of the official log. Fatherly admonition by the captain and yours truly. Logging and the appeal above seems to be "love's labor lost," and a person is often tempted to use strenuous methods which, while I'm sure it would work wonders in this case, is prohibited by law—and being a law-abiding citizen even under provocation, I still hesitate enjoining the crowd, saying: "Oh, what's the use?"

Mr. William Fieldman.

Dear Sir:—I received your very interesting letter of recent date, and I am going to take the liberty of sending it to the editor of the Seamen's Journal for publication. I do not believe that you would have any objections.

What you say about the conduct of crews in foreign ports is, no doubt, true. I have no reasons for doubting your word. From my point of view, more or less disorderly conduct is to be expected from crews under existing conditions, part of which is due to the fact that they have emancipated, and just like the slaves of the South, they sometimes mistake liberty for license. One who never had a thing does not know how to use it. A pressure has been released. It had to come, however, if life at sea was to be made attractive to the new generation. It had to come if Americans were to be induced to go to sea.

As a matter of fact, the loss that will ensue in time and money to the public, through the delay of vessels and inconvenience and annoyance that officers will suffer through the reckless conduct of some sailors, will nowhere near equal the wrong, injustice, pain and suffering which would have followed had the old order of things been kept going.

The second element that enters into the present disorder is the fact that we have comparative prohibition in the United States and all the liquor you want on board ship, in foreign ports and on shore.

A sailor cannot lift himself by his bootstraps any more than another man can, but by changing the environments, the decent human being who starts going to sea has got a better chance to keep decent. I hope you will live to see the day when it will be possible to get plenty of able, intelligent, orderly and efficient American sailors.

The officers, agents and delegates of the Seamen's Union are, for the most part, trying to instill into the men comprehension of their duties as well as their rights, but I am not going to feel badly if they do for a time have a better conception of their rights than they used to have.

Yours very truly,
SILAS B. AXTELL.

The foregoing can be reviewed from many angles. There is no doubt that the mate's letter expresses sentiments in accord with "old school" ideas, and these opinions have not been improved by ten years' hibernation in Government service; which would be a tutorship in accordance with that which fulfilled the education of Admiral Benson. Therefore, consideration for the rights of "common seamen" can only be expected to be somewhat limited.

Although a benevolent or sympathetic strain is intended to run through the dismal wail, real character is revealed by the weight of fines and punishments imposed upon the reputed disobedient and unfortunate crew; also, the postscript gives the final insight into the kindly (?) regard of this "benevolent autocrat" for his crew. The statement that he "was often tempted to use strenuous methods" shows that it was only fear of consequences which prevented the worthy gentleman from exercising methods of the old-time "bucko."

Viewed from another angle, though carefully camouflaged, it could be regarded as a cunning slap at the Seamen's Act, and suggests an intent to give aid and comfort to those opposed to its provisions; in fact, it has an appearance of preparation for future attack.

In his indignation, however, Mr. Fieldman relieves himself of some bold statements and broad assertions. After stating that most of the fault lies with ship's officers, he asserts that "There is also at the present time a number of men in possession of A. B. seamen's cerificates who are not entitled to have them"; also that "as a rule these men, having secured the certificates by fraud, are undesirable in numerous other ways."

These revelations are worthy of note and consideration, as they not only condemn the vessel operators as violators of law, but they reflect seriously upon the honesty and capabilities of certain Government officials; leaving an impression that self-interest or prejudice tends to wholesale disregard of official duty where shipowners' interests seem to be better served by law evasion.

If the mate suffered inconvenience from an undisciplined and inefficient crew, there is nothing at present—under the conditions as brought about by the American shipowners—that would intimate any improvement in the near future.

The statement by Attorney Axtell that "the officers, agents and delegates of the Seamen's Union are for the most part trying to instil into the men comprehension of their duties" is true and to the point.

But these educational efforts have been brought to sudden termination by the American shipowners and the Shipping Board; which, under the administration of Admiral Benson, "used all the resources at its command" to destroy the Seamen's Unions, thereby degrading instead of raising the standard of American seamanship.

For the present, we can give but little consolation to the mate who felt like adopting strenuous methods, and prospects for efficient and disciplined men in the personnel of our merchant service have not been enhanced by retarding the efforts of the Seamen's Unions.

The world's largest hangar, 803 feet long, 264 feet wide and 195 feet high, which will house the two great United States Navy dirigibles, the ZR-1 and ZR-2, near completion at Lakehurst, N. J. The ZR-1 is under construction at the League Island Navy Yard, Philadelphia, and the ZR-2 is in England.

LABOR UNIONS OF FRANCE

The following comprehensive review of the French labor situation by Ira W. Bird appeared in a recent issue of Justice, the official organ of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union. It reveals the fact that after years of struggle and sacrifice, the French workers were affected in detrimental manner by the war, and the General Confederation of Labor faces a critical period.

Although the dissolution of the French Confédération Générale du Travail (General Confederation of Labor) was ordered by a magistrate's court on January 30 of this year, the great labor organization is doing business as though there had been no attempt to crush it in the reactionary law courts. An appeal has been made to a higher court, and all labor officials are confident that the appeal will be won. But, even if the appeal is not won, there is no force strong enough to dislodge the organized workers of France.

The Confederation is an organization of recent origin, but it has the ideals and aims of the workers of many generations. When individualism and the right of property were proclaimed at the time of the Revolution in 1789 the formation of capitalism was permitted, and with the development of capitalism, came the development and growth of the proletariat. At an early period in its development the proletariat tried to rebel in the uprisings of 1830, 1832 and 1848. The Second Empire, a period of intense industrialism, found the workers becoming so class-conscious that the right of organization—forbidden by the law of 1791—was recognized by law. The Commune was also a fight of the proletariat against capitalism from certain aspects, but the actual formation of trade unions (sydicates) did not come until some time later.

First Failures

The first attempt at grouping the unions of different industrial centers into national federations failed because of rivalry and internal dissension. Nevertheless, even if the national and regional federations did not last long, an organization was formed which was to play a great role in the trade union movement. The unions of each industrial center, often aided by the municipalities, grouped themselves together and constituted a Bourse du Travail (Central Labor Union). After the formation of the Bourse du Travail of Paris in 1887, other cities followed the example, and in ten years there were many such central labor bodies.

In 1892 ten of the municipal central labor bodies federated to form the Federation of Chambers of Labor. In 1895, with the aid of the Federation of Chambers of Labor, the General Confederation of Labor was formed at a congress at Limoges. Though the name of the General Confederation has remained the same to the present, its form has been greatly modified since the formation of the first organization. The solidarity of the workers of France was gained in 1902 at a congress at Montpelier, when the Federation of Chambers of Labor joined the General Confederation. The growth of the labor movement in France after that congress is shown by the following membership reports to the congresses: In 1904, 200,000; 1906, 250,000; 1908, 300,000; 1910, 450,000; 1912, 600,000; 1918, 800,000; 1919, 2,000,000; 1920, 2,500,000.

Effects of Depression

Since 1920 there has been a great loss in union membership, due partly to the crisis in all industries and due partly to the internal strife caused by the Communists. In a time of great unemployment, with millions out of work, the members of the trade unions are not interested in the quarrels between the Communists and the Socialists. Hundreds of thousands have been disgusted by the tactics of the Communists and have left the organizations. There are only 1,500,000 members of the General Federation of Labor today, 1,000,000 having been temporarily lost because of the industrial depression and the internal fights.

War Halts Organization

During the first months of the World War the trade union movement was completely halted, except at Paris and other large industrial centers. In 1915 there was a resumption of activity, accentuated in 1916 by the return of the oldest military classes to the front and by the return of the metal workers to the shops. The activity became more intense in 1917, because the high cost of living brought into the trade unions many elements which had remained outside. At the 1918 congress there were present twice as many delegates as had ever been gathered for a Confederation congress. The organization was greatly strengthened through a modification of the statutes which completed the decentralized character of the General Confederation and assured the direct representation of the member unions, giving them guarantees of strength and safety.

At the Amiens congress in 1906 the General Confederation adopted a resolution affirming its separation from all political groups. The old Federation of Chambers of Labor disappeared as the General Confederation continued, but a new form of organization of local unions by regions sprang up in the form of Departmental Unions. The French Department is similar to a State in the United States and a Departmental Union is similar to a State Federation of Labor.

Industrial Independence

The Chambers of Labor often found themselves dependent on the municipalities, from which they received subsidies intended for the maintenance of the headquarters. To get rid of this supervision the unions grouped themselves into Departmental Unions. This form of organization becoming general, the Departmental Unions were permitted to participate in the Havre congress of the General Confederation in 1912. These Departmental Unions were created to form a bond between the workers of each Department of France, but they also undertook special propaganda or action for the General Confederation. The Departmental Unions are guided by an executive committee and a general committee. Each year a congress is held, at which appear delegates from all member unions.

Since the congress at Havre in 1912 the General Confederation of Labor has demanded that all unions belong both to the national trade or industrial federation and to the Departmental Unions. The congress at Montpelier in 1902 ordered the local unions to belong to the Chambers of Labor or to a regional union. It is this double method of grouping which makes the French labor movement different from others. On one hand there is the national centralization of trade or industrial organizations and on the other hand there is the decentralization and freedom of regional action obtained by autonomous grouping of all the local unions of each Department in a single organization. It is this double form which assures the trade and industrial federations the safety of organization interests and the recruiting of members on the basis of trade and permits the Departmental Unions to enter what might be termed political activity, such as propaganda for socialization of industries.

The General Confederation of Labor holds a congress every two years, uniting all local unions, national federations and Departmental federations. After the financial report, there is discussion and action on the work of the past two years. Each local union has but one vote, regardless of the number of members. After passing on the activities since the last congress, the delegates have the most complete liberty to bring up propositions which they desire adopted by the congress.

Between congresses the administration of the General Confederation is carried on through meetings of the delegates of the national federations and Departmental Unions. These meetings are usually held every three months. These meetings constitute the Confederal National Committee.

Hostile Elements

Constituted in the midst of many difficulties, due to the hostility of the Government, the importance of the workers, and the ill-will of the politicial organizations who did not wish to see the Confederation lead the workers beyond their influence, the General Confederation of Labor was not very effective in the beginning. But the vigor of its action and the solidarity of its membership caused it to become the center of the labor movement of France. In 1920, at the Congress at Orleans, the General Confederation had representatives present from 2238 local unions and forty-four national trade and industrial federations. Departmental unions exist in all Departments except those of Lozère and Hautes-Alps.

Just as each one of the trade or industrial federations is grouped into an international body, the General Confederation of Labor is affiliated with the national central labor organizations of other countries in the International Trades Union, which has headquarters at Amsterdam.

One of the most important actions of the General Confederation, which may lead to remarkable changes in the economic life of France, was the creation of the Economic Council of Labor at the 1919 congress. This Council was created with the approval of the National Federation of Co-operatives, the Federation of State Employes, and the Union of Technicians of Industry, Commerce and Agriculture. This organization has been studying methods of economic change of all railroads and mines, to be supervised in the beginning by boards of directors on which are representatives of the workers, capitalists and the State.

France is in such a critical plight, with the complete collapse of capitalism, the depreciation of her money because of the bankruptcy of the State, and actual starvation of hundreds of thousands of men and women in the economic depression, that there appears to be only one group with the courage to lead the nation from complete destruction. But the workers' organization will not rescue the profiteers and other capitalists for another orgy of exploitation of the masses. If the General Confederation of Labor is permitted to put through its program for socialization of the nation's industries, the capitalists will be thrown from the workers' backs for all time.

NOVA SCOTIA FISHING SLACK

The fishing industry of Nova Scotia for the present season has not measured up to the standard of the past few years. Owing to the low prices obtained last year a smaller number of vessels engaged in the Bank fishing, and as a consequence smaller quantities of fish have been landed. During the spring fishing season some 65,000 quintals were landed, as against 90,000 quintals last year. However, vessels now away on their summer trip are reported to be getting good catches. The shore fishing has been fair; in fact, almost an average, and more of these fish are being dry salted than in previous years.

The price of fresh fish has been comparatively low since the beginning of the year, and dealers state they are looking forward to an improvement later in the season. Good prices have been obtained, however, for fresh mackerel, of which the catch has been fair. Salmon have been plentiful on the coast, and a larger catch than usual was taken in salt water. The catch of alewives has been considerably under the average, and there will be a scarcity of these. Fresh shad are reported to be running more freely than for several years past, the indications being that there will be a fairly good supply, although this fishery is not to be compared with what it was in previous years.

All old stocks of dried fish have been disposed of and the shippers are now prepared to handle the new fish, which are about ready for delivery. There is still a considerable stock of old fish in Newfoundland.

EARTH'S TOTAL POPULATION

According to the estimate of the statisticians of the Botha Hofkalendar, the total population of the earth is 1,699,000,000. In 1919 the almanac's estimate was 1,646,000,000.

The compilation assigns to the eastern hemisphere, including Europe, Africa, Asia and Australia, a total of 1,494,000,000 souls and to the western hemisphere—the Americas—205,000,000.

The experts figure that the average density of population of the earth is 28.5 per square mile.

Most densely populated is Europe with 114.5 persons per square mile, while Australia is most sparsely settled—2.45 persons per square mile.

In North America the average population per square mile is placed at 15.

Pacific Coast Marine

The Shipping Board has allocated for one round trip the steamers "Celestial" and "West Greylock" to Williams, Dimond & Co., and they will sail from San Francisco to Europe September 20 and 25, respectively.

The K. Hovdon fish cannery at Monterey was destroyed by fire last week, with a loss estimated at $200,000. The management announced that the cannery will be rebuilt. Origin of the fire is unknown.

The Columbia river salmon pack this season will be about 75 per cent of that of last year, according to Carl D. Shoemaker, State master fish warden, who estimated the pack at about 340,000 cases.

The Japanese steamer "Durham" from Yokohama was libeled upon arrival at San Francisco last week, causing a delay in departure. The libel was placed on the steamer by an Eastern firm when the vessel called in port for bunkering.

The steamer "Canadian Exporter," which stranded off Willapa Harbor, several months ago, has been looted of everything movable. Captain Winbeck of the North Cove Coast Guards has salved an approximate of $7000 worth of equipment, including the wireless apparatus, and he blames fishermen for the looting.

Evidence was adduced at the inquiry into the sinking of the Canadian Government merchant marine steamer "Canadian Exporter" on Willapa bar that the compasses were in good condition despite Captain Bradley's complaints, and also that the man who was steering was a greenhorn, knew nothing about it.

The motorship "Margaret" and the bark "St. Katherine," owned by the Red Salmon Canning Company, departed from Ugashik, Alaska, last week for San Francisco. The ships are loaded to the Plimsoll marks with salmon. Two other salmon ships of the company have also left Alaska for this port.

Little activity appears in the charter market on the Pacific Coast, either for grain or lumber, although a revival is expected shortly in the former trade. The Japanese steamer "Taiby Maru," 4485 tons, has been taken by Kerr, Gifford & Co. to load wheat at Portland for the United Kingdom, but this is believed to have been closed several weeks ago when Japanese tonnage was being offered freely.

Several schooners are being outfitted at Vancouver, B. C., for trips to Mexico, and recently old sailing schooners which have been lying in the boneyard at Victoria for years have been requisitioned and are being supplied for voyages to Mexico. Whether it is the liquor carrying trade between here and Mexico or the way points that is paying can be learned only by the United States revenue cutters, as it is legal to ship liquor from this port.

Belief that the 1921 albacore packing season in Southen California will not last beyond September 1 was expressed by officers of the San Diego Packers' Association. The fish were running heavily when the fishermen started out for the season after a long delay, due to disagreement with the packers over prices, but now are said to be running poorly. Canneries are cooking and packing only two days a week. Some canners men predicted that this season's pack would be 150,000 cases short of normal.

One of the purposes of my visit to Europe this summer is to acquire knowledge as to shipping conditions abroad and particularly to ascertain with what degree of success the seamen of Italy are operating ships.

Any seamen, who, with a view to becoming shipowners some time, are willing to form "a Seamen's Society for Savings" and will pledge to save one-fourth of their wages over their board and lodging per annum, said savings to be put in a depository that they themselves may select, please communicate with the undersigned.

Autocracy Kills Incentive

Those contributing to production should have a part in its control.

It is fundamental for efficiency in production that the essentials of teamwork be understood and followed by all. There must be opportunity for intercourse and exchange of viewpoints between workers and managers. It is this machinery for solving industrial problems that is fundamental.

There must be given to each individual a voice in the shaping of his life, and this right must extend to the workers in their organized capacity to be exercised through their chosen representatives.

Industry today requires greater democracy in order to give to the workers full voice in assisting in this direction.

It requires more intelligent management and acceptance of the principle that production is for service and not for profit alone.

It requires full and free acceptance and use of the best that invention has to offer.

It requires bold and audacious reconstruction of method and process in the conduct of basic industries.

Labor does not oppose introduction of improved methods in industry. It courts and encourages improvements in processes and in machinery. What it will always resist is the introduction of these processes and this machinery at the expense of the workers.

Proper absorption of non-producers into careful channels.

The welfare of the workers must be a paramount consideration. There can be no progress and no gain in production volume if there is not such consideration. But a greater mutuality in industry would insure proper safeguarding of the rights of workers.

Only by such methods and under such principles can there be an advance in production which does not penalize the worker for his own industriousness and for his own alertness and inventiveness.

Autocratic industry kills incentive. It punishes brilliancy of attainment. It warps the mind and drains the energy from the body. We have repeatedly condemned the principle of autocratic control of industry and we now declare that short of its complete removal from our industrial life there is no salvation and no hope of abundance in our time.

We urge the setting up of conference boards of organized workers and employers, thoroughly voluntary in character and in thorough accord with our trade union organizations, as means of promoting the democracy of industry through development of co-operative effort. We point out to employers the fact that industry, which is the life blood of our civilization, can not be made the plaything and the pawn of a few who by chance today hold control. Industry is the thing by which all must live and it must be given the opportunity to function at its best.

Labor turn-over is but one of the evils which will disappear in proportion as the workers are given voice in management. This is proven by statistics which show the lowest turn-over in those industries where the workers exercise the most effective voice by reason of the highest degree of organization.—Declaration of A. F. of L. Convention, 1921.

Huge Armament Breeds War

In his invitation to Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan to join with this country in a disarmament conference, next November, Secretary of State Hughes said that avoidable or extravagant armament is "not only without justification, but is a constant menace to the peace of the world rather than an assurance of its justification."

This is probably the hardest jolt that the jingoes have received in their campaign to militarize the country under the cloak of "preparedness."

The statement is accepted, of course, as the views of President Harding. It is in line with the views of Woodrow Wilson, when President, although at that time the theory was received with sneers by the saber rattlers who shrieked "pacifist" if a citizen ventured the opinion that huge armament breeds war.

Secretary Hughes' revival of this common sense theory brings dismay to commercial patriots, flag-waving politicians and military swashbucklers and vindicates citizens who have had their patriotism questioned because they oppose huge armament and drill sergeant rule.

Secretary Hughes' invitation makes it clear that armament expenses are too great for the world to bear. "Productive labor," he said, "is staggering under an economic burden too heavy to be borne unless the present vast public expenditures are greatly reduced. It is idle to talk of stability, or the assurance of social justice, while wasteful and unproductive outlays deprive effort of its just reward and defeat the reasonable expectation of progress."

Suggestion is made by Secretary Hughes that the conference discuss controlling "in the interest of humanity, the new agencies of warfare."

There is no question but recent developments of "the new agencies of warfare" have sobered the wildest militarist. Gases have been developed to such a point since the armistice that chemists can obliterate all form of life in large areas. The recent exhibition of airplane superiority over battleships has also awakened men to the helplessness of a $40,000,000 war vessel when attacked from above.

It is hinted that the conference may be the beginning of a league of nations in diluted form and under a different name.

Group Liberty Is Imperative

Today in industry there are few rights of fundamental value to men and women unless those rights are as available to men

JAILED FOR DESERTION

The Vancouver, B. C., press reports a case of special interest to seamen, which was decided when Judge Ruggles recently sentenced John Queen and Fred Corbett, seamen on board the steamer "Canadian Rover," to eight weeks' imprisonment for deserting the vessel at Ocean Falls. The case, in detail, is substantially as follows:

Accused signed on at Halifax, and when they arrived at Ocean Falls they quit the vessel on the grounds, as they explained in evidence, that certain of the machinery was broken, thereby entailing extra work; that the food was not up to the standard demanded in the articles, and, in the case of John Queen, that his health was not good. Queen offered to supply a substitute, but the captain refused to release him on such conditions. It was also claimed that in terms of their agreement the voyage ended at Ocean Falls.

Judge Ruggles, in reviewing the evidence, said that the articles provided for a voyage to Vancouver or any port between the limits of 75 degrees north and 65 degrees south, to and fro, as required, not exceeding a period of twelve months. It would be impossible in a case of this sort to fix the exact time at which the voyage would end or what ports the vessel would have to call at. Desertion was the act of leaving the ship without the proper consent of the commander, and there was no question about the men having done that in this case. It was true that one of them offered to provide a substitute. The Court had no idea what the captain's reasons were for not accepting the substitute, but it had nothing to do with the matter. The sailor was obliged under the terms of his contract, to remain on the ship, and he should have done so. He found that there was, beyond a doubt, desertion.

The next question was to whether desertion was justified. There was a little extra work to be done by the men on the voyage that would not relieve them in the least, nor did it entitle them to leave the ship. The chief trouble seemed to be in the disposition of the ashes in consequence of the break in the machinery. There was an attempt to show that the food was not in accordance with the scale of provisions, and the trouble seemed to have arisen through a lack of fresh meat. It was difficult to have fresh meat all the time in a passage which took them through the Panama Canal, and he could not see that there was any justification for desertion on that score. In regard to the disposition of the ashes, it had been shown that the break in the machinery occurred before leaving Halifax. The repairs were effected, but there was a renewal of the break before leaving port. The machinery could only be obtained from Collingwood, Ontario, and could not be obtained before the vessel sailed. In such a case, the break was of the same character as a breakdown at sea. If there had been anything to endanger the lives of the accused at sea, it would have been the duty of the captain to have the damage repaired, and there was a provision in the articles by which seamen are obliged to assist firemen and vice versa. This was done, according to the evidence of the captain, and so there was no justification for desertion.

The Court, in finding accused guilty, said that the maximum penalty was twelve weeks and the minimum eight weeks, the sailor to forfeit all clothes and effects on board the ship and any part of wages that might still be due. The forfeiture went along with imprisonment.

He imposed a penalty of eight weeks' imprisonment with forfeiture of their effects and wages due, amounting to about $90.

The foregoing is a striking example of the manner in which seamen can be treated under the maritime law of every other nation outside of the United States. It is an echo of conditions as they existed here before the Seamen's Act became law in 1915.

Maritime law, as it applies to other nations and to foreign seamen while outside the jurisdiction of the United States, conserves by legal procedure the last vestige of involuntary servitude.

Protected by the provisions of the La Follette Act, American seamen are no longer subject to imprisonment for desertion, and to seamen of the world the soil of the United States and all within its jurisdiction is free ground.

These humane conditions were not attained without prolonged and strenuous effort. Greater effort, with the utmost vigilance, is imperative, if we are to continue in the enjoyment of our rights as free men. We can only protect ourselves by thorough organization, therefore we must continue to strengthen our ranks in order to meet the attempts of our oppressors to keep seamen in a condition of servitude and degradation.

Although the Seamen's Act is of great benefit to those fortunate enough to come within its protection, the fight for our freedom has only begun. It will never end until seamen of all nations shall be free in every port of the seven seas. Only by unity of purpose and action can these things be accomplished.

The most powerful influence for an active intelligence is an empty stomach.

CAPITAL SCORES TWO NOTCHES

The miners' friend, Sid Hatfield, has gone.

Another brave soul has passed over the Great Divide, a martyr to the cause of labor.

With Truth we can call him brave.
He who dared defend the Right,
When Right was miscalled Wrong.
He who shrank not from the fight,
Where weak contend with strong.

They did not get him in manly fight. He was given no chance. With craven hearts his bloody murderers lured him to his death and slaughtered him as a wild beast under the very portals of an American Temple of Justice (?).

Confident in the security the place should have afforded, he walked unarmed and unafraid to an untimely end; his chum, Ed. Chambers, at his side, with a wife of barely a year holding his arm.

As the shots rang out from ambush, the two men slipped from their wives' arms and fell lifeless on the ground at their feet. American capitalism had paid off two of its grudges and removed forever two of the workers' friends.

The contemplation of these cold-blooded murders and the evidences of heinous conspiracy back of them are disturbing to the very thoughts of men.

It conjures up to view a phantasmagoria of horror. We mark the tracks of other conspiracies against American workers. We vision long lines of other assassins. We are reminded of Homestead, Cripple Creek, Cour de' Alenes, Ludlow, etc. The spectacle of colored troops torturing miners in the bull pens of Idaho while they insult the workers' wives and children glides revoltingly before us.

We can imagine the sound, like to the splitting of a board, as the butcher, Linderfelt, brought the butt of his rifle down upon the skull of Lekas, the Greek, at Ludlow, and from the holocaust of the tent colony the charred stumps of children's arms seem to appeal to the high heavens for redress.

Long armies of deformed and undernourished children of the slums seem to grin from out untimely graves like spectres of the past. Dreadful skeletons of men swinging in the wind from gibbets and trestles remind us that our boasted civilization's thin veneer has not yet conquered the wolf within. It requires the stern hand of Justice to hold the beast in check, and when Justice sleeps the brute will prowl.

And, now Sid Hatfield, the young mountaineer, has been added to the list of those sacrificed upon an altar of unsatiable greed.

Other workers, with the miners of Mingo county, realize the extent of our great loss.

Keen of eye; sure of hand; strong of heart, and true. True to manly principle and the welfare of his people, the spirited young mountaineer has been brutally done to death by a private detective and spy in the service of the coal mine owners of Mingo county.

Governor Morgan of West Virginia is receiving angry protests from all sections, many of them reminding him of the fact that he was asked to fulfil his duty, and had promised to give Hatfield the necessary protection.

However, the Governor should feel safe and unconcerned when all circumstances are considered. As for the vicious hireling who committed the cowardly act, he is merely the tool. The responsible parties are the mine operators, and such affairs leave not even a ripple on the tranquility of their lives, due to the security they feel behind the ramparts with which conscienceless wealth surrounds itself.

If we are to survive free men we must act to stop ruthless murder of our people. To do that we must organize, agitate and by all means EDUCATE.

PROFITEERING A CRIME

The Senate of Cuba recently adopted legislation which places profiteering in the category of crime. This is the first instance where the right appraisal has been given to this contemptible practice, and it should be cheering news to the common people everywhere, who have been made victims of "dollar a year patriots," and have been mulcted and skinned by predatory interests.

However, there is a fly observable in the ointment. Can it be possible that the unsophisticated Cubans do not realize that WE have considerable interests at stake in the island? Have they no conception of what generally happens to small peoples who dare to run counter to Wall Street views and interests? Are they not acquainted with recent history of Nicaragua, Santo Domingo, Haiti, Mexico, etc. Don't they know what is happening to the Moros, our little brown dwarfs in the Philippines; or are they so childishly innocent that they do not realize it is worse than lese majeste, treason and heresy combined, to attempt restriction of profits, or to do things that do not bear the stamp of approval from Wall Street?

In the light of past performances, we can hardly believe that the Cubans are hungering for a visit from our boys who are "the first to fight," but in passing such iniquitous (?) legislation the Cuban Senate is surely creating the foundation for a sudden invasion.

STUFFING THE ROLLS

Efforts of organized labor in Australia for better conditions and a more equal distribution of the good things of life is meeting with the most powerful opposition, not only from the Australian capitalist but from the class-conscious representative of big business everywhere.

There is at present a suspicion that a quiet system of infiltration is in operation in the ranks of the organized workers of Australasia, and every despicable trick and device is used as a weapon for breaking down the solidarity of labor.

The following, which appeared in a recent issue of an Australian paper, elucidates one of the cute little tricks of the plute:

"In their frantic endeavors to defeat Labor at the next elections for the Sydney City Council elections, the anti-Labor forces are making it very plain that they will stop at nothing to achieve their ends.

"When the Council met last week, Alderman Doyle asked Lord Mayor Lambert whether his attention had been drawn to certain names in the municipal rolls recently compiled, and whether certain instructions had been given to those who had compiled the names. Other Labor aldermen also complained of the unsatisfactory manner in which the rolls had been compiled. The Lord Mayor said:

"'There has been a corrupt and deliberate attempt right throughout the city to 'stuff' the municipal rolls. It is quite obvious that there has been a conspiracy somewhere. I will take a motion that a committee of eight be appointed to inquire into the matter.'

"In the debate which followed the anti-Labor opposition in the Council made frantic endeavors to block the appointment of the committee, contending that the Lord Mayor had not power under the by-laws to appoint it. The Lord Mayor, however; would not be put off his purpose by hoary tradition or red-tape procedure. He said that his attention had been drawn to the 'extraordinarily loose way in which the lists had been compiled.' He had noticed a number of duplications, and had seen in one instance fifteen or sixteen names on the lists for one property as owners. He could quote several instances. He had taken the City Solicitor's advice, and found that no more than one person could appear as the owner of one property. There were rumors about that the rolls had been deliberately 'stuffed' and it appeared to him that there was a great deal in this allegation.

"Alderman Gilfin—From the lodgers' point of view?

"The Lord Mayor—No, from the owners' point of view. There has been a corrupt and deliberate attempt, without any doubt, to 'stuff' the rolls. There are bogus owners, bogus leaseholders, and bogus subleaseholders. Buildings have been pulled down, and there are half a dozen names down as owners of the property. I will accept a motion that a special committee be appointed to investigate the whole matter.

"Alderman Milner Stephen—You haven't the power.

"The Lord Mayor—There is nothing in the Sydney Corporation Act to prevent the Council from appointing that committee. I think that the Government's attention should be drawn to what has taken place.

"Alderman Mallett—You can't put the motion. It's not on the business paper.

"The Lord Mayor—I am going to put it, anyway.

"Alderman Milner Stephen moved to dissent from the Lord Mayor's ruling, but, on a division, he was defeated by 11 to 10.

"The original motion was carried, and a committee of eight was appointed to investigate the rolls."

In the matter of enlightenment it might be well to become acquainted with the fact that the Lord Mayor of Sydney is a strong supporter of labor, therefore taboo in so far as "big business" in that commonwealth is concerned.

Of course the capitalists are very desirous of putting the quietus upon the strength of labor politically, as well as industrially, therefore they resort to American methods.

There seems to be suggestive evidence that our Australian workers may be victims of a few Pinks, Felts, or Burns operatives, transported ostensibly for the purpose of teaching the Australians how to operate the Australian ballot system a la U. S. A.

If such is the case, we have grounds for loud and prolonged protest. They are infringing on our exclusive rights. We always nursed the belief that scientific ballot box stuffing has reached the acme of perfection in this land of the free only. In the palmy days of boss rule itinerant gin-legs could register in flocks or herds from an empty coal oil can or vacant lot.

If the Lord Mayor of Sydney is willing to accept advice from this humble source—and is desirous of preserving the purity of elections— we would suggest that he substitute for the French policy of "serchez le femme" an Australian policy of "find the Yank."

Inasmuch as he has compelled our admiration by bucking the interests, these few timely suggestions are slipped free of charge.

LABOR'S WEAK POINTS

(By Ethel Lynn, M. D.)

When factories were small and isolated, industries unorganized, and great commercial bodies unknown, strikes and boycotts by craft unions were often successful.

With the coming of great corporations and trusts with their interlocking directorates and "gentlemen's agreements," national industrial bodies and powerful banking control, the situation changed.

For a time, the masters of finance allowed union labor to exist comparatively unmolested. They were content to bribe and corrupt union officials and intrench themselves in every possible way while exploiting the farmers and unorganized workers.

Defeated in 100 Cities

Now they feel that the time is ripe to crush the unions as well. In more than a hundred organized union cities the battle has been waged and the unions have lost.

They have lost because they have been using the weapon of thirty years ago against the great, modern, industrial-war machine. They have failed to form an amalgamation of workers to meet organized capital.

Their enemies advance in solid battle array, while they have sent in one little craft-regiment at a time to be wiped out until all are defeated.

They have lost because the rank and file in the labor movement have become accustomed to sheep-like obedience to the Commands of their leaders.

Raps Leaders

In most cases, these leaders have been more interested in keeping soft jobs for themselves and in manipulating rotten political deals than in the welfare of their organizations.

In some instances, notably in New York, union leaders have co-operated with the enemies of labor to exploit the organization and the community in general.

Enormous sums are collected throughout the United States by per capita dues and assessments, but now that the struggle is on, the rank and file find themselves crippled through lack of funds.

The money collected from them through many years has been spent on big salaries and junketing trips, or has been placed beyond their reach by their national officials in banks, the heads of which are actively engaged in smashing the unions.

Hit by Own Money

Personal funds of individual workers also, forming a great aggregation of capital, are left in the banks to be utilized against the unions.

Big business, fully understanding the value of a dollar, spends millions on publicity and propaganda.

Not so the unions. No adequate use is made of even the labor press which they support.

Official journals and papers are usually given over to tiresome reports of long-winded meetings, trival gossip and inane twaddle. Heaps of such papers and magazines, their wrappers still unbroken, may often be seen piled in some out of the way corner of workingmen's homes. They are of no interest because all life and intelligence are lacking.

Much worse are the cases where labor editors are vicious and reactionary instead of being merely short-sighted and stupid.

Neglects Publicity

Then the very strength of the workers is turned against themselves, their own money is used for purposes of disruption and disorganization and their dynamic power is made into ammunition for the use of their enemies.

Neglect to use this publicity for constructive ends is on a par with the worker's neglect of one of his greatest weapons —political action.

He has been content to vote for "good fellows," "friends of labor" and political gangsters regardless of politics or principles. It has been his custom to beg, hat in hand, in legislative halls for a few crumbs. He has failed to demand his full rights and to back his demands by both political and industrial action.

The man who is so bound by custom, tradition and prejudice as to be unable to think for himself is potentially a slave. The man who thinks, yet lacks the courage to fight and suffer for his fundamental rights must lose those rights.

Labor is now overcoming such weakness. It is lining up for action and is demonstrating that solidarity so necessary for success.—S. F. Daily News.

PROPOSALS FROM GENEVA

The International Emigration Commission, composed of representatives of fifteen nations, which has been in session in Geneva, Switzerland, has adjourned after adopting a number of important resolutions, according to a cable received by Ernest Greenwood, American representative of the International Labor Office.

The most important of these resolutions, from an American viewpoint, is one which recommends the institution of a thorough examination of emigrants at the port of embarkation. This might well be accepted as a first step toward the only apparent solution of certain problems connected with the administration of American immigration laws.

It has long been recognized by immigration authorities that the only way to eliminate the hardship involved in tens of thousands of cases caused by rigid enforcement of the exclusion clauses of the law, is inspection at the source. In a majority of the cases, the immigrant applies for admission to the United States after 97 per cent of his journey has been completed. The first experience of himself and his family with the United States Immigration Service is at the end of the journey, instead of at the beginning. The family may have sold all its possessions and cut loose from all its ties in the old country. Its return to Europe is frequently only a return to a life of repressive and intolerable poverty. It has literally nothing to which to return.

In 1920 the Secretary of Labor made the following recommendation to the President and future Congress of the United States:

"Adjustments in co-operation with other Governments whereby intending emigrants from countries across the seas may apply for admission to this country before breaking up their foreign homes, and upon such application may secure the same benefits of adjudication by immigration officials, certificates by public health officials and appeals to the final authority, that are now available to them only upon arrival at our ports. A model method is in operation between this country and Canada, under which no intending immigrant from Canada need break up his Canadian home until his case has been decided in his favor by the final American authority."

In the same way, the Commissioner General of Immigration, in his report for 1919-1920, states:

"Provision should be made for the exercise of authority to be vested in the Department of State and the Department of Labor so that the enforcement of the immigration laws might be secured at the source of much of the then expected increase in immigration, this not only to meet the necessity to safeguard our country from the entrance of dangerous elements, but to save from the hardships of an ocean voyage inadmissable applicants who would find on arrival at our seaports that they must return to their former homes."

Examination of emigrants at the port of embarkation by no means solves this administrative problem completely, but it is a step forward. Most of the immigrants come from interior cities and have already broken up their homes and disposed of their possessions before reaching the port of embarkation. It does, however, adopt the so-called principle of "inspection abroad." The final solution lies in the establishment of some system of inspection in the principal centers of countries of emigration.

Among other resolutions adopted were (1) supervision over all kinds of agents interested in promoting emigration and the abolition of all emigration propaganda based on false information; (2) supervision and control, by competent authorities, of the recruiting of workmen in foreign countries, confining such recruiting to agencies authorized by the State; (3) safeguarding the state of the labor market of countries of emigration and immigration; (4) contracts containing clauses for the deduction of traveling expenses from the wages of the immigrant shall be declared null and void by competent authorities of countries of emigration, where such clauses are not in accord with existing legislation.

The Commission also decided to propose the insertion of the question of protection of immigrant women and children in the agenda of the International Labor Conference of 1922. It also declared itself in favor of studying the question of supervision of hygiene on board ship.

The complete text of the cable, which was signed by M. Albert Thomas, director of the International Labor Office, follows:

"Commission on Emigration adopted resolution recommending supervision of emigration agencies and urging abolition of emigration propaganda based on false information. Also, resolutions calling for supervision and control by competent authorities of collective engagement of workmen in foreign countries, confining all such engagements to agencies authorized by the State. Consultation with employers' and workers' organizations concerned. Safeguarding state of labor market in countries of emigration and immigration. Observance in countries of immigration of contract signed before emigration, except where contract clauses would be contrary to public order. Resolutions adopted that contracts containing clauses for deduction of traveling expenses from salary of the emigrant should be declared null and void by competent authorities of countries of emigration where such clauses are not in accordance with legislation of countries. Decided to propose insertion of question of protection of emigrant women and children in agenda of conference for 1922. Resolution recommending institution of thorough examination of emigrants in port of embarkation as well as principal place called at. Commission declared itself in favor of studying hygiene of emigrant on board ship. Representatives of several important American philanthropic associations followed regularly discussion of committee. Commission closed August 10."

The composition of the International Emigration Commission is as follows: Viscount Ullswater (Great Britain), chairman; Mr. Guiseppe de Michelis (Italy), vice-chairman; Mr. Raoul Regis de Oliveira (Brazil); Colonel Obed Smith (Canada); Mr. Li Tchuin (China); Mr. W. Onalid (France); Sir Ernest Low (India); Mr. N. Nagai (Japan); Mr. W. Gemmill (South Africa); Count de Montornes (Spain); Mr. Clisthines Philaretos (Greece); Dr. Vaclay Varunac (Czecho-Slovakia); Mr. De J. Gaganut (Switzerland); Mr. A. Knoll (Germany); Mr. Lino Budlini (Italy); Mr. Karl Viktor Holmstrom (Sweden).

ATTACKS CHILD LABOR

"The nation that puts its boys and girls to work in field and factory when they ought to be in school and enjoying a normal amount of play is a waster and is like a man who riotously spends both capital and interest of his fortune," says David Franklin Houston, chairman of the National Child Labor Committee. "Such a drain on the physical strength of childhood, such a deprivation of its right to intellectual equipment, will inevitably exact its price in a lowered average of health, prosperity and literacy a generation hence."

Houston recently succeeded Dr. Felix Adler in the chairmanship of the committee. Dr. Adler resigned because of press of personal business after seventeen years as head of the committee, guiding it through the period in which it was a prime factor in causing the enactment of Federal and State laws regulating child labor in industry. Houston was Secretary of Agriculture and Secretary of the Treasury, successively, in the Wilson cabinet, and is an educator and economist of note, having held among other posts that of President of the University of Texas.

Led by Houston, the National Child Labor Committee has launched a campaign to eliminate the evils of child labor in agriculture. It will be directed largely against conditions in the beet fields of Colorado and Michigan; the tobacco plantations of Kentucky and Connecticut; the cotton raising districts of Oklahoma, Texas and Imperial Valley, California; the berry fields of Michigan and California; the onion fields of Ohio; the cranberry bogs of southern New Jersey and the truck farms of Delaware.

AFRICAN MINERS COMPROMISE

Even the colonies of South Africa are not immune from the wage slashing fever which has infected the exploiters of the world.

An agreement was recently reached as a result of which a strike by South African miners has been definitely averted.

The miners accepted a reduction of 1 shilling and 6 pence per shift.

This arrangement will obtain until October 1, when wages will be adjusted by quarters, the basis for the wages for any period being the cost of living for the quarter second preceding. South African business interests are well pleased with the settlement, believing that it will not merely stabilize the mining industry, but will have great weight in stabilizing wages in other industries as well.

The demand for reduction in the wages paid to those working in and about mines followed the decrease in the selling price of gold, the gold mines being the ones principally affected. At the suggestion of the Chamber of Mines, a reduction of 3s. per shift was considered, amounting to a weekly reduction of 18s. The trade union representatives claimed that the proposed reduction could not be justified. A compromise has now been effected as outlined above.

WOULD OUST OFFICERS

In a petition to the Adjutant General, Maurice T. Jones, President of the village of Corinth, near Troy, N. Y., demands that Colonel Ransom H. Gillet, commander of the 105th Regiment, be removed from that position. Gillet is attorney for the International Paper Company, at whose mill strikes are in progress because of attempts to cut wages.

The petition charges Colonel Gillet with "using the National Guard of New York as an employment agency for a private corporation and using his subordinatet officers of the regiment in uniform at Troy and Cohoes armories to employ men for private work."

Several men who were engaged to go to Corinth make affidavit that they were hired with the expressed intent to assist carpenters to build State barracks outside the village and not to work as strike-breakers. These workers swear that they were engaged by men in the military service of the State and that the officials used the Troy armory and the army trucks.

PACKERS' HUGE PROFITS

Organized butcher workmen are giving publicity to the huge profits of meat packers, that were developed at the recent wage hearings, when Federal Judge Alschuler refused to cut wages 5 cents an hour. It was shown that surplus profits of Armour piled up to such a height that in 1916 the company issued a stock dividend of 400 per cent—that is, for every $100 of stock held additional stock to the value of $400 was issued. This favorite trick of big business "spreads out" the profits over a larger amount of stock and allays suspicion that inordinate profits are being made.

in groups and associations as to individuals. The right of an individual to quit his work is firmly established. Employers of reactionary character, aided by legislators who either do not or will not understand, seek today to make it unlawful for groups of workers to quit their work in unison. The purpose of quitting work is to satisfy some desire on the part of the worker, or to attempt to secure such satisfaction. Modern industry grants no satisfaction to the worker who quits alone.

Individual liberty must find itis modern counterpart in group liberty. The individual contract, which aimed to exchange equal values between parties of equal standing, must find its modern counterpart in a group contract. There is no mutuality, no equality, in a contract between an individual worker and a billion dollar corporation employing hundreds or thousands of workers. The principle that gave vitality to individual freedom and to the individual contract is dead in modern life unless it also means a like freedom of action to groups of men associated to protect and promote a common interest.

The "individual contract" which employes separately are forced to sign as a condition precedent to securing work and by which they must agree not to acquire or retain membership in labor unions, means jobless starvation or acquiescence by the workers under coercion.

Such giving up of one's ownership of one's self, his sovereignty and manhood under such conditions is like agreeing with a thug at the point of his gun to give up one's purse and regard that transaction as a contract entered into by the highwayman and his victim.

As manipulated by employers for the denial and abrogation of individual rights, under the protection of anti-combination and conspiracy laws, such "individual contract" in industry is one of the most pernicious, subtle and dangerous devices ever used for the oppression of humanity.

In our modern industrial civilization, where the individual right and the individual liberty is so largely dependent upon a similar freedom for the group of which the individual is a part, the freedom of the individual is frequently either abridged or denied by a denial of group rights.

Anti-conspiracy laws as applied to industrial life, a miserable heritage from a miserable page of the early efforts to crush the aspirations and liberties of working people, must go entirely. They must be removed from the body of law under which we live.

The whole issue of freedom today turns upon the question of group rights. Today the rights of the individual, the relations between workers and employers, can be safeguarded and guaranteed only as the rights of the group are equally safeguarded and guaranteed. Those who seek to crush and oppress the workers see this clearly. Through old and new laws and through contractual devices under the protection of these laws they seek to destroy the movement of the workers and to destroy freedom for the workers.—Declaration of A. F. of L. convention, 1921.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

President Harding tells Senators Borah and Johnson that they are going "too far" in proposing that the discussions of the diplomats and military experts at his forthcoming disarmament conference be held in the open, where the world can know what is being proposed.

Organized labor has not yet declared itself on this particular issue, but the meeting of the Executive Council of the A. F. of L. may take action looking toward the encouragement of open diplomacy. The workers are paying the billions of dollars annually wasted by the United States upon militarism, past and present, and they are paying the further price of being constantly overawed and browbeaten by the rattlers of swords and guns. As Borah and Johnson told Harding, the way to disarm the world is to force the diplomats to talk in the open, and to talk about immediate disarmament, and to keep that issue separate from all entangling political issues, such as the Far Eastern problem.

Save Starving Russians

Russian famine relief furnishes another topic for the Executive Council. Some of the big unions in the East have already started to raise funds to help feed the starving people of the Volga valley. The International Ladies' Garment Workers, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the United Cloth Hat and Cap Makers and other organizations whose membership is partly of Russian origin, have been the first to issue a call for contributions. Others are falling into line, as they realize that twenty million people may starve to death if aid is not furnished from outside Russia. The labor unions of Germany and of Czecho-Slovakia have voted to give one day's pay to the relief fund.

Labor Only Remedy

European labor is taking up with determination the plan for stopping the production of munitions of war, suggested by the Rochester convention of the International Association of Machinists, last September, to the International Federation of Metal Workers, with which they are affiliated. The Federation, now in session in Lucerne, with delegates in attendance from eighteen countries, representing 3,500,000 members, has taken as its chief subject of debate the ways and means by which organized metal workers can hasten the diversion of their labor into useful channels through stopping the making of any more guns, shells or armor. They believe that in no other way can the diplomats and the generals and admirals and politicians be prevented from starting new wars in the Near East, the Far East and against Russia.

Mexico Befriends Labor

Raymon DeNegri, director of railways of Mexico, is on his way here from Mexico City to take up personally with the officers of the International Association of Machinists the letting of contracts in the United States for fifteen hundred freight cars and for the equipment and materials for the repair of four hundred locomotives in the shops at Aguas Calientes. This work will go to firms fair to organized labor.

Meanwhile President Vauclain of the Baldwin Locomotive Works of Philadelphia, who is one of the arch-enemies of unionism, is cooling his heels in Mexico City, trying in vain to get an interview with one of the heads of the Government. He wants to renew the contract, cancelled by DeNegri, for delivery of seventeen scab-made locomotives, on which the Baldwin firm was to have made a handsome profit. Strangely enough, the arrogant Vauclain cannot find any official "in" when he calls, and as a consequence he is having a quiet vacation from business. He is reported to be convinced that the Mexican Cabinet is a Bolshevik crowd, and that it sets a perilous example to the democracy which obtains in Philadelphia.

Speaking of the righteous indignation of Mr. Vauclain calls up the story, now going the rounds, of the last interview between Martens, the recent Soviet envoy, with the big New York bankers, before Martens was "permitted" to leave for Russia. He was proposing that the bankers use their influence to re-establish trade with Russia, and one big financial magnate stopped him with the solemn warning that American bankers would never favor any trade so long as women were nationalized in Russia. Everyone laughed at this exploded falsehood concerning Russian conditions. The man who objected was James Stillman.

Evidence Suggests Subsidy

Because the number of cases in which local officers of the American Legion have been identified with acts of violence against trade unionists has increased during the year, certain facts disclosed by an inquiry addressed to the general secretary of the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce became important. Secretary J. B. Reynolds of the Chamber, writing under date of August 9, says that the Indianapolis Chamber is paying $9000 per annum rental for the headquarters occupied by the national officers of the Legion in that city.

What is quite as significant is the fact, admitted in the same letter, that five of the twenty-four directors of the Associated Employers of Indianapolis are directors also of the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce. In view of the fact that the Associated Employers of Indianapolis are running the "open shop," or "American plan," campaign throughout the United States to break down every affiliated body in the A. F. of L., this connection and its weight in influencing the anti-union tendency in the Legion is worth nothing.

It seems that a committee of citizens, chiefly Legion men, promised the Legion convention at Minneapolis that if the headquarters were located in Indianapolis they would furnish a headquarters building. They failed to make good through public subscription, and so they turned to the Chamber of Commerce, which promptly decided to pay the $9000 a year.

The Executive Council of the A. F. of L. is going to send fraternal delegates to the next convention of the Legion, where the labor policy of the officers of the Legion will probably be discussed. The Legion has 600,000 members.

Danger Was Nominal

Danger of an immediate strike on the Pennsylvania Railroad system, by the shop crafts, has been averted by the decision of the company to abide—belatedly—by the order of the Railroad Labor Board that it arrange for the fair election of representatives of the shop employes to take up the drafting of new working rules. Vice-President Atterbury of the company has been silenced by his associates, and the election of negotiators will proceed.

A more serious turn of events has come, however, with the announcement that the managers of all the railroads, meeting Thursday at the Bankers' Club in New York, voted to reject the demand of the train service brotherhoods that there be no further wage reductions. This forces the brotherhoods to take a strike vote of their membership, under the terms of their compact made in Chicago in July. The solidarity of the sixteen railroad labor organizations in their coming contest with the railroad companies is assured. They will be patient and cautious, but when the time comes for defensive action they will act.

Weeks Must Pay

Attorneys Latimer and LeSueur, accompanied by a delegation of legislative representatives of A. F. of L. unions stationed here, took up the $800,000 deferred payment of a wage increase granted the employes of the Minneapolis Steel & Machinery Company and other concerns in the Twin Cities, with Assistant Secretary of War Wainwright, yesterday. This award, confirmed last November by Secretary Baker, has been held up and disallowed by Secretary Weeks, on recommendation by the Judge Advocate General's office. The attorneys for the men in the shops proved to Wainwright and the Judge Advocate General yesterday that Weeks had no legal right to reverse a decision made by his predecessor in office involving payment from the funds.

Over $2,000,000 is due workers at the Bethlehem Steel Company's plant, under a similar award, and other claims are pending which involve half that sum. Weeks is expected to order the payment made within a short time, since he finds that his legal advisers have gotten him into an untenable position.

Hyatt of the Post Office Clerks, Steward of the Federal Employes, Willis of the Machinists, Noonan of the Electrical Workers and Hall of the Minnesota State Federation of Labor accompanied the two attorneys at the interview with Wainwright, under authorization from the Denver convention of the A. F. of L. for the fullest co-operation in collecting these wages for the war workers.

Remove the Reactionaries

Postmaster General Hays, who has just made a notably fair statement of policy with regard to censorship of the press, in which he refuses to interfere with any political discussion that is not definitely prohibited by law, is now facing the equally difficult problem of inducing his postmasters to follow a liberal policy.

Postmaster Selph of St. Louis, a Jim Reed Democrat, whose persecution of members of the postal workers' unions drove great numbers of men from the service in that ctiy, is still under the protection of Senator Reed, although a commission of postoffice inspectors has investigated Selph's official conduct and has filed a report. The nature of this report, and the evidence on which it is based, are known in general terms to the delegation of Congressmen who insisted that the Department make the investigation. When Hays makes the report public it is probable that Selph will be invited to resign. But Reed has a strong connection with the Harding regime, and Hays will be under pressure to suppress the report until January, when Selph's term will expire.

The suggestion is made, in high official quarters, that the spirit of the inspecting staff will be demoralized if this report is not made public and accepted as a basis for removing Selph.

Then there is the postmaster in Chicago, whose dismissal of eleven officers and ex-officers of the Post Office Clerks' Union in that city, for the crime of disclosing the unsanitary conditions in the post office building, is only now being reversed. The Civil Service Commission today notified the Department of its approval of the reinstatement of ten of the eleven men. Pierce Butler, president of the local, was not reinstated. He is now a newspaper reporter.

"The action of Postmaster General Hays in ordering the restoration of ten of the eleven officers," says the Union Postal Clerk, "is another rebuke to the Burleson-Koons anti-unionists who sought last year to intimidate the postal workers when engaged in a national fight for wage adjustments. Behind the flimsy case worked up against the Chicago unionists was the bitter personal animus of former First Assistant Postmaster General John C. Koons. He rightly believed the Chicago local of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks was the moving spirit in the wage agitation. He sought in his own small way to get revenge. . . . . The charges alleged two offenses: First, the soliciting of funds from Chicago merchants to influence Congress to increase postal salaries; second, the publication in certain newspapers of 'conspicuous advertisements of a false and misleading character,' regarding working conditions in the Chicago post office."

It was afterward shown that the men dismissed on this pretext were men of from thirteen to twenty-six years' service records, of excellent character, and that their real offense had been their activity as unionists. Yet in doing belated justice to these men the Department seems to have had no help from the postmaster at Chicago.

It has been much the same way with censorship in the past three months. Postmasters in New York and Chicago have taken the initiative in declaring their belief that certain issues of radical papers are non-mailable. They have held up these issues several days, awaiting a decision from Washington. In one instance, a decision wired to Chicago on Saturday, releasing a paper which had been held up, was not acted upon until Tuesday night or Wednesday following.

These facts indicate how deeply rooted is reactionary sabotage in the Government, when a department chief tries to enforce a liberal policy.

A. F. of L. Not Recognized

Word from the headquarters of the American Federation of Labor is that no attempt to get a hearing for the anti-war principles of the labor movement, at the Disarmament Conference, is likely to be made by Mr. Gompers. President Harding will not name a labor man as one of the American delegates, nor will he sanction the giving of a special hearing to the views of organized labor. Of course President Harding will not govern the conference—the delegates from the various governments will do that—but his influence will be thrown against the recognition of the wageworkers and farmers—who pay the bills for militarism—as being the party chiefly concerned in disarmament.

Corrupting the Antipodes

Up from New Zealand comes word of the attempt of Secretary of Commerce Hoover, through the American Consul-General at Wellington, to do a clever stroke of business for Armour & Co., and the sharp repulse given him and the Chicago meat packers by Acting Premier Bell. It seems that Armour & Co., after being warned off by the New Zealand Government, following the report made on its lawlessness by the Federal Trade Commission, established itself in New Zealand. As the people of that dominion had no desire to fatten the beef trust, they passed a law requiring licenses to export. It was made clear in debate, as the Premier now officially has declared to the State Department, that New Zealand would not grant export licenses to Armour & Co. for exports of meat to England. Nothing would be thrown in the way of exports to the United States, but the beef trust would not be allowed to kill the independent trade between New Zealand and England.

In spite of this due notice, Armour bought 300,000 carcasses and put them in freezing storage, and then induced the State Department to have the Consul-General protest at the "arbitrary" action of the New Zealand Government.

Since Premier Bell's complete and final answer, showing that New Zealand will not permit even a Chicago beef baron to ride roughshod over her industrial security and her laws, the case has been appealed to the British Foreign Office in London. Mr. Hoover's packer friends have great hopes of his London friends, for London can boycott the loans sought by New Zealand's Government, and so bring that dominion to time.

The New Zealand Premier, with ironical humor, informs the State Department that his Government's action was "largely influenced by the American inquiry into, and report upon, the dealings of that company (Armour & Co.) in relation to the American meat trust."

If Armour & Co. can ship meat from New Zealand to Britain, they will be able to dispense with some of their American export business, since the cost of production and handling will be less in that country.

The Minnesota State Federation of Labor convention instructed its officers to arrange a conference with representatives of farmers' organizations friendly to organized labor to devise ways and means for the establishment of commissaries this winter to feed the unemployed.

Labor News

At Rochester, New York, a number of striking printers have been arrested at the instance of strike-breakers who complained that the pickets were "making faces" at them.

Employes of the Hunt Bros.' Cannery at Hayward, California, recently went on strike against reductions in wages. The sheriff of Alameda County immediately dispatched fourteen deputies to the scene although no disorders have been reported.

The hotel and restaurant employes of Denver are at present confronting an open-shop movement in that city. Although several restaurants have signed up under the old scale, a number of places are preparing to operate on a non-union basis.

Wage reductions of 10 per cent for skilled workers and 25 per cent for common laborers was decided upon at New York last week by the Board of Arbitration which has been considering the wage controversy between paper mill employes and manufacturers in the United States and Canada. The new wage scale, which will affect 12,000 workers, becomes effective August 27.

The recent convention held at Quebec authorized the executive committee of the International Typographical Union to reopen negotiations with the American Publishers' Association relative to the contract governing wages and hours of work and to draft a tentative agreement to be submitted to the rank and file of the union. Atlantic City was chosen for next year's convention.

The San Francisco Labor Council, as represented by the circle of standpatters, has instituted open warfare against the new movement, as embodied in the Rank and File Federation of Workers; but notwithstanding loud and prolonged threats from official sources, that expulsion and suspension from the Central Council is likely if the rank and file persists in demanding a measure of consideration, the new movement is progressing favorably.

In response to a resolution calling for figures, relative to unemployment in the United States, Secretary of Labor Davis reported to the Senate that the best estimates available at this time show that 5,735,000 persons are out of employment. Manufacturing and mechanical industries, including building trades, showed the highest percentages of unemployment, the estimate being 3,900,000. Other industries listed were mining, transportation, trade and clerical workers and domestic and personal service.

The present building trades controversy has resulted in an economic loss to San Francisco, in wages alone, of $6,633,000, according to a statement made by P. H. McCarthy, president of the Building Trades Council. McCarthy estimated that 12,000 building mechanics have been out of employment for the last three months. He said that the average minimum wage of the building mechanic was $8 a day, and the loss in wages was $96,000 a day or a total of $6,633,000 for the three months, based on twenty-two working days in the month. All of this money would have been spent in San Francisco and that amount has been lost to the merchants, grocers, butchers and other business men of San Francisco.

World's Workers

The recent Australian Labor Congress decided to ask unions to assess their members 10s. towards the establishment of Labor dailies.

As a means of averting future wars the Australian Labor Congress recommends that Councils of Action be established in all countries.

A resolution favoring the adoption of the former forty-four-hour week with forty-eight hours' pay for all employes at the Pearl Harbor Navy Yard was adopted at a recent meeting of the yard employes at Longshoreman's Hall, Honolulu, T. H.

The Moscow Trade Union Council has abolished all night work for another category of workers. Henceforth, the newspaper workers will operate in two shifts—the first from 8 a. m. to 3 p. m., the second from 3 p. m. to 10 p. m.

Latest information from Rome reveals industrial conditions unimproved. Practically all the boot and shoe factories are closed. Fifty per cent of the metal workers are unemployed, 40 per cent of the builders, and, in the textile trade there are only 14,000 workers employed, of which 11,000 do a twenty-hour week.

Trade unionists charge that derelict immigrants are being imported from England for the purpose of eventually attacking the powerful Australian Workers' Union. The unionists refer to a recent statement by the Sydney Sun, which gleefully stated that among these immigrants "strikes are taboo and there is no union."

According to official figures published by the Commonwealth Statistician, there were, at the end of last year, 684,450 unionists in Australia. This represented an increase of 56,765 over the total of the previous year. The number of unions in Australia at the end of 1920 were 388.

Out of a total of 298,847 workpeople covered by the returns supplied to the Danish Statistical Department by trade unions and by the Central Employment Exchange, 18.6 per cent were unemployed at the end of May, as compared with 21.7 per cent on the twenty-ninth of April, cent on the 29th of April, and 2.8 per cent at the end of May, 1920.

The Republic of Argentine continues to experience the rapid growth of trades unionism. The first months of the present year showed approximately a million workers affiliated in labor organizations. The comparative figures by years from 1915 up to the present year are as follows: 1915, 21,332; 1916, 41,124; 1917, 158.796; 1918, 429,713; 1919, 476,203; 1920, 749,518.

A statement issued by the Amsterdam Municipal Statistical Bureau shows that 23.4 per cent of the members of trade unions affiliated to the State Unemployment Insurance Fund in that city were out of work in May, as compared with 25.2 per cent in March, 1921. These figures include diamond workers, of whom 90.8 per cent were unemployed in May.

An international labor journal is to be launched in Vienna by the Postal Workers International organization, which has affiliated organizations in most European countries and in several South American republics. All articles will be printed in three languages—English, French and German. Dr. Ludwig Maier, international secretary, will be editor in chief. R. Kaplan of New Haven will be American correspondent.

Domestic and Naval

The steamer "West Keene," en route to San Francisco from New York, was forced to return to Boston after going ashore on Shoveful. The craft sailed from New York August 9 via Boston.

The Rolph Navigation Company four-masted steel ship "Golden Gate," which was stranded on a reef thirty-five miles off Cristobal two weeks ago, has arrived in Cristobal in tow of a wrecking tug.

Thirty-seven members of the wrecked Pacific Mail liner "San Jose" arrived in San Francisco last week aboard the steamer "Apus," operated by E. C. Evans & Sons, which comes from Limerick, Ireland. The ill-fated steamer is crashing to destruction on the rocks of San Pablo reef.

Only one-tenth of the insurance on the steamer "Alaska" of the Alaska Steamship Company, sunk off Blunt's reef August 6, was carried on this coast. Marsh & McLellan, San Francisco underwriters, placed a total of $30,118 on the hull, the remainder of the insurance being carried in London and New York. The total valuation of the "Alaska" was $334,550.

A white smoke screen, denser and more impenetrable to vision than any smoke screen yet invented, was demonstrated recently at Camp Meade. It is a new invention, the secret of which is being guarded closely by chemists and army officers. When the smoke candles were lighted, observers were surprised by the beautiful white clouds which rose from the ground. They were so dense that they seemed almost solid.

After lying a week on the sands, thirty-five miles from Cristobal, Canal Zone, the four-masted ship "Golden Gate," of the Rolph Navigation & Coal Company, was floated and proceeded for Cristobal in tow. The ship was pulled off the shoals by the tug "Favorite," of the Canal Zone, which had been standing by. The "Golden Gate" was damaged very slightly. She was en route from Manchester to San Francisco, in ballast, when she grounded August 7. The mate and ten men pulled a lifeboat to Cristobal to ask assistance.

Thirty-two members of the Peruvian government steamer "Iquitos" are in jail at Vancouver following a mutiny aboard the vessel. The steamer, which recently took a cargo of sugar from Peru to Vancouver, was chartered recently by J. J. Moore & Co. of San Francisco to take a cargo of lumber from Gray's Harbor to Australia. According to meager advices, inability of the Peruvian government to send money with which to pay the crew caused the mutiny. There is a revolution in Peru and funds are scarce.

A mutiny on board the Panama Canal Railway Company steamer "Alliancia" was reported to the Navy Department last week in an official message from the commander of battleship squadron No. 2. A guard of Marines was placed on board at the request of the master. The report to the department said: "Steamer 'Alliancia' of the Panama Canal Railway Company reported mutiny on board. Master requested guard. En route to New York. Two officers and twenty Marines placed on board. Proceed to New York and then rejoin 'Connecticut' at Annapolis."

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

FRENCH 8-HOUR DAY ON SHIPS

Views Gathered from French Seamen's Trade Union Organizations

The following, from a recent issue of "The Seaman," contains opinions of union officials and the French seamen regarding operation of the Maritime Eight-hour Law of France. The most beneficial feature appears to be the manner in which working overtime has been brought to a nominal degree and in many instances almost eliminated:

FRENCH 8-HOUR DAY ON SHIPS

Views Gathered from French Seamen's Trade Union Organizations

I. ENGINE-ROOM STAFF

The Act is applied under the same general conditions to all the engine-room staffs of vessels making ocean-going voyages as for those engaged in coastal trade. Moreover, it has been applied without difficulty, in consequence of the fact that the daily working hours of this category were already fixed at eight in the day by the Act of April 17, 1907. The principal changes which have been made in the system instituted by the Act of 1907 by the Act of 1919 and the Decree of 1920 concern:

1. The "cleaning hour";
2. The weekly rest period.

With regard to the first, the engine-room staff is no longer called upon to carry out maintenance work outside the ordinary working hours, and without overtime pay. The work of maintenance must in future be done either by men specially embarked for that purpose, or by the men of the morning watch; and, in this latter case, one hour, outside of the hours of the watch, and which must be paid as overtime, must be allotted for the purpose.

Article 19 of the Decree of 1920 lays down, in effect, the principle that compensation for the weekly rest period, which is not granted during the voyage, shall take the form of an equivalent period of rest either in the port at which the vessel is registered, the port at which the owning company has its seat, or the port to which the vessel ordinarily returns.

Complement

The application of the Act has brought about practically no change in the complement of engineers, firemen, trimmers, greasers, etc.

The number of firemen is fixed at one man per
- 7.30 sq. metres of heating surface, for ordinary boilers with natural draft;
- 7 sq. metres of heating surface for boilers with water pipes and natural draft;
- 6 sq. metres of heating surface for boilers with forced draft;
- 5 sq. metres of heating surface for boilers with accelerated forced draft.

The number of trimmers is fixed according to the needs of the vessels, taking account of the consumption and the distance between the bunkers and the stokehold. The number of greasers is fixed according to need. A supplementary shift, called "équipe extérieure," is fairly frequenly embarked, paricularly on ocean-going vessels, for the special purpose of working on the maintenance, cleaning and repair of the engines.

Number of hours overtime worked

1. At Sea.

Except the 8 hours' work on Sundays, the engine-room staffs do not, in general, work many hours overtime at sea.

Engineers on liner's work, on voyages of moderate length (Havre-New York) about 4 hours' overtime per voyage; and on longer voyages (Marseilles-Yokohoma) an average of ½ hour overtime per day. On vessels of smaller tonnage the overtime sometimes amounts to one hour per day, but never exceeds that amount.

Firemen do from 2 to 3 hours' overtime per voyage of average length, and an average of ½ hour per day on the longest voyages. Firemen and engineers on board boats performing such services as the Calais-Dover service do not usually reach the limit of 48 hours' work per week.

2. In Port.

Engineers take alternately 24 hours' duty (of which 8 hours are actually worked) and 24 hours' rest. Firemen never work more than 8 hours per day. Their duties are generally divided as follows:

First watch: from 6. a. m. to 10 a. m., dismounting and cleaning of the starboard engines.

Second watch: from 10 a. m. to 2 p. m., dismounting and cleaning of the port engines.

Third watch: (called watch "à la suie") from 2 p. m. to 6 p. m., cleaning of the stokehold.

The duties at sea are arranged according to the tonnage of the vessel and the length of its stay in port, and not later than the day before sailing.

3. Compensation for overtime

So far as the engineers are concerned, the big companies grant them one month's holiday per year, with pay and allowances, and other companies pay each hour of overtime, which has not been compensated in rest, at one-eighth of the daily salary. Firemen and greasers, etc., are also paid for their overtime at the rate of one-eighth of the daily salary.

II. DECK STAFF

(a) General Rules Regarding Ocean-going and Coastal Voyages

Complement. Organization and rotation of watches

While the deck-hands embarked on vessels of small tonnage are mostly reduced to the minimum of strict necessity, it is becoming a general habit on large vessels to embark a supplementary staff. Some vessels embark a rotatory watch (borbée roulante) which only works by day and which, in most cases, constitutes a reserve of labor which is used according to the needs of the service (washing, scaling off rust, painting, maneuvering, etc.). The "Compagnie des Chargeurs Réunis," for instance, embarks eleven or twelve deck-hands instead of nine. In the Mediterranean the deck-hands are still more numerous; they were already more numerous before the Act and the Decree of 1920. It may be considered that the following complement constitutes a typical case (from boatswain down to apprentices) for the ships of the "Compagnie des Messageries Maritimes": 1 boatswain, 2 boatswain's mates, 1 master-at-arms, 4 quartermasters, 5 baggage-masters, 4 cranemen, 1 postmaster, 1 quarter-guard, 1 storekeeper, 8 apprentices. On all vessels the duties are organized in three watches, and in the majority of cases at least in conformity with, or in a manner analogous to a table of duties drawn up by the Union of Commercial Seamen of Marseilles, which is in force on the majority of ocean-going and coasting vessels.

The table has the following advantages: (1) The institution or the "guidon" (the one-hour watch from 6 p. m. to 7 p. m.) allows the watches to be changed so that a different watch does the swabbing each day. (2) Two watches always take their meals together; from 10 a. m. to 12 noon, and from 5 p. m. to 7 p. m. the whole of the deck staff take their meals. The kitchen staff are thus enabled to take their rest more conveniently. (3) Two watches get a night's rest of nine consecutive hours; one from 7 p. m. to 4 a. m., and the other from 11 p. m. to 8 a. m. The third watch gets its rest in two periods of four and five hours each. (4) Since the beginning of the daily working day is fixed at 8 a. m., the organization of duties on board on the day of arrival in port can be carried on with greater facility. It now very rarely happens in the case of the deck staff that the hours of work at sea and the hours of work in port fall together in the same working day, since vessels usually arrive in port by day, and the hours of work at sea before 8 a. m. are not deducted from the 8 hours' work which the crew has to do after the vessel has anchored.

It should be noted that the table only provides for a period of six days and does not include Sunday. In practice, naturally, all work does not cease at sea on the weekly rest day (which appears not always to be Sunday). On this day the only work which is compulsory is work which cannot be postponed and which is necessary for the conduct and safety of the vessel.

Number of hours of overtime worked

(1) At Sea:

Whatever the kind of navigation and the type of ship, the hours of overtime worked at sea by the deck staff are very few. The deck staff works at sea, and then only on certain routes, up to forty minutes' overtime a day at most: usually, and on the majority of voyages, this maximum is not reached; this also applies to the Mediterranean.

(2) Days of sailing and anchoring:

It is especially on leaving port, and in a lesser degree on arrival in port, that usage is made of the exceptions provided for by the Act, in proportions which vary very much according to the type of ship and especially according to whether it carries cargo or not. On ships which only carry passengers, the deck-hands usually work overtime on the days of departure and of arrival, but this overtime does not normally exceed one hour a day, although quite exceptionally it may extend to four hours a day. On the other hand, on cargo boats which must arrive and leave port at fixed dates, the hours worked in excess of the eight normal daily working hours are much more numerous. Especially is this the case on boats on the Marseilles-Far East service. On these ships, the deck-hands are expected, on arrival in port and on departure, to assist in what are called "commercial operations," that is to say, in checking, supervising and handling the cargo, its disembarkation, embarkation, and storage in the hold.

The Seamen's Union of Marseilles observes on this point that except in certain special circumstances, such as salvage, accidents, etc., there is very seldom any occasion to order the deck staff to work overtime, especially when the deck staff is occupied exclusively with navigation properly so-called. The efforts of the Union are directed, in consequence, to secure that the shipping companies entrust all operations which do not concern navigation to special enterprises in order to relieve the seamen of those duties. It is in this spirit that the Union has sought and obtained the acceptation of the following provisions by the shipowners of Marseilles:

> " . . . . From 4 a. m. to 6 p. m., all work in excess of 8 hours a day shall be paid as ordinary overtime and may include such commercial operations as checking and supervising cargo. From 4 a. m. to 6 p. m., all handling of cargo or work on embarkation appliances in connection with the said cargo shall be paid as ordinary overtime if it takes place during the 8 compulsory working hours, and as double time if it takes place outside the normal working hours. The supervision of any piece of work shall be considered as of the same category as the work itself."

The Union even hopes to get the following rules adopted in the near future:

> " . . . . Whatever the hour of departure or arrival of the ship, the day shall commence at 8 a. m. and finish at the same hour on the following day. In all other cases, the day shall commence at the same time as the normal working day of European dockers begins." . . . Any sailor who handles cargo by order of the master shall have a right to the same pay per hour which is received by the dockers in the port of registry of the ship." . . . "Whenever labor is available the crew may refuse to handle the cargo in all cases except when the ship is in quarantine or riding at anchor." . . . "The supervision of a piece of work shall be considered as of the same category as the work itself. . . ."

(3) In Port:

It may be said that overtime is not very frequently worked in port: the men who are not resting work from 7 a. m. to 11 a. m. and from 1 p. m. to 5 p. m. Further, when the night guard is not entrusted to special undertakings, it is done by some of the deck staff who serve three hours during the night and work five hours during the day, or by two watchmen who divide the night duty into two periods of six hours each.

Ways in which overtime work is compensated

(1) Sunday work. On voyages of short or average duration, the weekly rest is always compensated by actual rest, either in port or at sea.

In the case of longer voyages, the weekly rest is granted or compensated in the ports of call or the ports of departure and destination, or even at sea.

(2) Hours worked in excess of the normal 8 daily working hours

(a) At sea:

The hours of overtime worked at sea are so few that they can usually be compensated without difficulty by compensatory rest in any port, or at sea.

(b) On sailing or anchoring:

On long and average voyages, when the vessel does not make many calls en route, hours of overtime worked in weighing and dropping anchor, and even to a certain degree in checking and supervising cargo, are compensated by compensatory rest. On the contrary, for short voyages and for mixed or cargo boats on long voyages which have numerous calls en route, the hours of overtime worked on arrival in, or departure from port, are compensated wholly (short voyages) or in part (long voyages) by overtime pay.

The Marseilles shipowners fairly generally compensate overtime by pay: a fairly large number of the Mediterranean seamen seem to accept this form of compensation very willingly; the Unions, however, endeavor as far as possible to introduce compensation under the form of compensatory rest, and, moreover, this form of compensation appears to be becoming more frequent in consequence of the longer stays made by vessels at Marseilles. In all the cases mentioned above, it is in general by agreement between the captain and the crew and by taking into account all the circumstances that the form of compensation for overtime work is decided upon. When compensation takes the form of compensatory rest, the seamen receive their pay regularly every Saturday, and they are authorized to sleep on board and to take their meals on board in ports of call, ports of registry and the ports of departure and destination. Apart from exceptional cases, it does not appear that the seamen have any possibility of visiting their families during their rest periods. It should also be noted that up to the present, very little has been done to enable seamen to employ their leisure at sea in a useful manner.

(B) SPECIAL CASE: LARGE TRAMP STEAMERS

At Marseilles, cargo boats such as the "Batavia" and the "Australia," belonging to the "Transit Maritime," voyage without any fixed route, and the duration of their voyages varies from fifty days to ten menths: this type of navigation, which was not practiced in France before 1917, very closely corresponds to that of the British tramp steamers. These vessels are among those to which the Eight-Hour Act can be applied with the greatest facility.

Complement. Composition and rotation of watches

The deck staff consists of from twelve to fifteen men and duties are divided into three watches, which are relieved in accordance with the time-table drawn up by the Union of Marseilles Seamen given above.

Overtime work and methods of compensation

Since these vessels have no fixed dates for arrival or departure the weekly rest can generally be compensated under the form of compensatory rest. On the other hand, as the seamen on board have but rarely occasion to handle the cargo, they do not often work overtime: from fifteen to twenty hours per man per month is the average, and the number never exceeds thirty-five hours per man per month, nor four hours per man per day. It may be said that this overtime is never worked at sea, but only when weighing or dropping anchor. Compensation takes the form of overtime pay.

III. GENERAL SERVICE STAFF

It is with regard to the personnel of this department that the methods of application of the Act seem to present the greatest variety, according to the type of navigation, the ship, the length of the voyage, and even the seasons in the case of the same ship and the same route.

Compensation for the Weekly Rest

In all classes of shipping work the weekly rest day is nearly always compensated by actual rest, granted at sea whenever the opportunity arises, but more frequently in port, i. e., in ports of call and ports of departure and arrival, in proportion as the number of passengers diminishes. During the days of rest men resting are fed and lodged on board ship.

Hours of work undertaken in excess of the normal daily eight hours and compensation for the same

The number of overtime hours worked varies naturally according to the length of the voyage, the number of passengers and the particular duty of the different members of the general service. When a ship carries numerous passengers, the majority of these members work more than eight hours. Most overtime is worked by cooks and cooks' mates, on the days of the sailing and arrival, but especially at sea. On ships which sail from Havre, the cooks work sometimes sixty overtime hours in a month. On ships and for voyages on which overtime hours are most numerous, notably on ships belonging to the shipping companies of Marseilles, one may reckon in the case of the cooks and the cooks' mates two hours' overtime on an verage per man per day, and on certain occasions four hours per man per day. Stewards and stewardesses work on the average about two hours' overtime per person per day. Bakers work less overtime. Those who work with ovens which are in good repair and modern hardly have occasion to work any overtime at all. Butchers work very little overtime, except in the case of accident to their cold storage machines.

The method of compensation for overtime hours varies considerably according to circumstances. On the Havre-New York line compensation takes, in part, the form of rest during the voyage when the passengers are not so numerous (from September to May, for example, in the case of a voyage from New York to Havre) and in part the form of an additional allowance when it is impossible to compensate by means of rest.

Contrary to what takes place in connection with duty on deck and in the engine-room, duty in the general service department is not, as a rule, carried out by successive reliefs.

If the spirit of the Constitution is to be preserved as a factor in American life, encroachments upon our freedom by despotic Court dictum must be checked. Too long have we passively submitted while our rights have been abridged by judicial decree, and our liberties suppressed without authority or law. Our duty to posterity demands that we place our heel upon the viper of tyranny.

UNEMPLOYMENT IS REWARD OF VICTORY

(By J. Ford)

It is one of the ironies of the war that two of the "victorious" nations are faced with the most urgent unemployment problems. In the United States and England there is a greater number and a far larger proportion of unemployed workmen than in the "defeated" countries. In the United States there is an army of nearly 6,000,000, in England more than 2,000,000 while in Germany there is reported to be between 700,000 and 800,000 jobless men and women.

England has attempted to solve the problem by paying the unemployed a dole. In view of the high cost of living and its insistence on remaining high, this dole is a mere pittance. Nevertheless, however small it has been, it has acted as a deterrent on the actions of the jobless, since it prevents them from seeing the real motive of the Government.

The British Government is enmeshed in manifold schemes of imperialist intrigue. To carry out these schemes it must have a free hand.

It is faced with the complicated problem of robbing the German workers of as much of their labor as possible, in the shape of indemnity—and, at the same time, of not robbing them to the extent of actually IMPOVERISHING them and provoking rebellion. It is forced to negotiate this robbery, as well as that in Upper Silesia, with the most lawless, militaristic imperialist Government in the world today, namely, France, which is exacting the pound of flesh to the very last drop of blood in a baby's body. (In this work it is receiving the aid of the German capitalists.)

The British Government has the Irish problem, India, Persia and Egypt to settle. The questions of Turkey and Asia Minor, resulting primarily from French intrigue, threaten the very life of British imperialism.

Grave Problems Confront British

In short, the external problems confronting the British Government are so serious that it is forced to achieve at least a semblance of peace at home. Otherwise, it would be compelled to deal with the labor problem in all detail, and the unemployed would not be lulled by the pound-a-week dole.

That the United States, the supposed "victor" in the war, should manifest the most widespread unemployment of any country in the world, is one of the most significant phenomena. Gold has been pouring into the country; over half of the world's supply is here. Every week brings a fresh quantum. Through war loans and supplies furnished during the war, and through the credits that the American Government and bankers have granted to Europeans, America stands as the creditor of the world—WHILE 6,000,000 MEN AND WOMEN TRAMP THE STREETS LOOKING FOR A JOB, AND MILLIONS MORE ARE WORKING ONLY PART TIME.

It is most significant, however, that the foreign trade of the United States and England has suffered a mighty relapse during the past year. Today it is only half of what it was last year in both countries. Each month witnesses a further decline. A large part of the American exports consist of raw materials and food. England has changed from an exporting to an importing country.

Germany is working at a feverish pace. Forcing long hours and low pay on the German workers, German capitalists are dumping cheap goods all over the world, thereby giving the American and British capitalists a lesson in exploitation efficiency—which they are not slow in following!

Industrial Depression Everywhere

And yet the world is very small. The purchasing power of the other countries is very low. South America is suffering from an unprecedented economic depression. Eastern and southern Europe enjoy little or no credit. Northern Europe is suffering from "overproduction." Asia is in the throes of an economic crisis. Spanish industry is at a standstill. In Belgium some of the industries are not working, even to 25 per cent of capacity.

France is slowly rebuilding her devastated departments. Her industries are reviving—France is living on the hope of obtaining the indemnity from Germany. The deficit in the French budget is about 5,000,000,000 francs.

The world of buyers is, indeed, a circumscribed one. None of them has a big purse, and none enjoys too much credit. Nevertheless, production depends on them; if export to them should cease or diminish to any more serious degree, CAPITALIST PRODUCTION WOULD BREAK DOWN COMPLETELY IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

In every country of the world, reconstruction is the demand of the hour. Even those countries that did not suffer from actual military operations await reconstruction. Thus, there is an appalling shortage in homes. The United States alone requires at least 2,000,000 homes. Yet with the excuse that the cost of labor and materials is too high, builders are undertaking no work. Rents have not declined. In places they have risen, and notices of increases are common. New buildings would be an entering wedge for a reduction in rent. Against this, the landlords, and with them, the banks, fight. Hence, the workers may go without homes—and masons, bricklayers, carpenters and plumbers may go without work.

Manufacturers Limit Production

Manufacturers, especially of the United States and England, have adopted the policy of limiting production. Thereby they maintain prices, keep the number of employes at the lowest point possible and create an army of unemployed who serve a most useful purpose.

These jobless men and women serve to bring wages down to the starvation minimum and hours up to the maximum. They help to fight the closed shop, since a man without a job generally becomes careless about his membership in a union.

Hence, improvements and repairs of every character cry out for work. While the public works wait for execution, and where an increase in production would bring about a reduction in price, by this method of decreasing the number of employes and driving them on to longer hours, and higher efficiency, CAPITALISTS ARE EARNING INCREASING DIVIDENDS — AND 6,000,000 MEN AND WOMEN, A LARGE PART OF THEM SKILLED, WITH IDLE HANDS, MARCH FROM PLACE TO PLACE, CLAMORING FOR WORK!

Products Are Destroyed

Farmers producing to obtain the highest prices on the market, and knowing and having experienced (too often to their detriment) the law of supply and demand that rules capitalist society, have limited production. Milk is dumped into the sewer in order that a better price may be obtained. Farm products are allowed to rot, in order not to "demoralize" the market. Eggs and fruit are thrown into the ocean; cargoes are destroyed at sea; the raising of cattle and swine is made unprofitable by packers and produce merchants, who control the market by a short supply, maintain or raise prices to the limit, and EXACT A TOLL IN LIFE AND HEALTH FROM EVERY MAN, WOMAN AND CHILD!

This regulation in production denotes regulation in the number of farm hands. Instead of ABUNDANT production that could utilize a large part of the unemployed, there is more than "ample farm help, wages are low, conditions are similar to those prevalent before the war—long hours, wretched housing, etc. AND 6,000,000 MEN AND WOMEN CRY OUT FOR WORK, FOOD AND SHELTER!

This is capitalism!

This is "reconstruction" in rich, "prosperous" America, creditor and purveyor of the world, in the year 1921!—Seattle Union Record.

WHAT'S THE USE?

The United States now has nearly one-half of what gold there is in the world, and more coming every day. For the last six months, the average monthly gain has been about $73,000,000.

Meanwhile the condition of international exchange has not improved; in fact, it is as bad now as it has been since the first week in January.

When we acquire the other half of the world's gold, therefore, what shall we do with our accumulation? Shall we put it on exhibition somewhere, or melt it up into gewgaws?

We shall not be able to buy anything with it, obviously, nor yet can we eat it.

Might we not, perhaps, make it into a monument to commemorate the day wherein this people of ours finally learned that payment in gold is no payment at all; that gold enters this country only as a commodity, like coal or lumber; and that goods can only be paid for in goods? —The Freeman.

The United States Bureau of Labor statistics again shatter the propaganda of cheap wage advocates that food costs are being rapidly reduced.

The bureau states that there was an increase of 2.7 per cent in the retail cost of food to the average family in July as compared with June.

During this period wholesale prices for farm products and foodstuffs also increased, the former group advancing 1¾ per cent and the latter 1½ per cent.

Pacific Coast Marine

The cod and salmon fishing fleets which left Alaska recently, loaded to the primsoll marks with the first catch of the season's fish, are due in San Francisco.

A slash of five shillings has been made by British steamers in the rate on grain from the Pacific Coast to the United Kingdom and Continental Europe. What action the Shipping Board will take to meet the foreign steamer cut has not been announced.

Having been overhauled and made ready for sea, the big liner "Great Northern" recently turned over to the Navy from the War Department, has been ordered to proceed to Bremerton, where passengers will be taken aboard for her run to the Atlantic.

Pillsbury & Curtis, marine surveyors, report that investigation has shown that salvage of the "Alaska," which is lying in twenty-four fathoms of water, will be impossible. No bodies were found by the diver who was sent down to the wreck off Blunt's Reef.

The Federal grand jury at San Francisco brought in a verdict exonerating mates Charles Ferris and Effin Dubnofsky of the schooner "Sophie Christensen" for the slaying of the Japanese cook, H. Hiyama, after he had murdered the ship's master, captain Michael McCarron.

Three more twin-screw 14,000-ton steamers have been added to the fleet of the Luckenbach Steamship Company for intercoastal service. This makes ten steamers operated by the company via the Panama Canal. The three new steamers have been transferred from the European service.

According to a notice given out by the United States Hydrographic Office, the skipper of the American steamer "Forest King" reported to the office that on August 23 at 1:28 p. m. he sighted a mooring buoy with chains attached, adrift, at latitude north 41 degrees and 25 minutes and longitude 124 degrees and 15 minutes west.

The United States coast guard cutter "Tampa," recently built at the Union Construction Company, Oakland, was given its deep sea trial last week and will go to the Atlantic Coast soon for duty. The "Tampa," built for Atlantic Coast patrol duty and for relieving ships in distress, will go into service when she takes a group of cadets to Europe on a long cruise.

Carrying about fifty thousand barrels of lubricating oil to St. Katherine point, England, the tanker "Ampullaria" sailed from here recently. This is the maiden trip of the vessel and also marked the first dispatch of lubricating oil from the Pacific Coast to England in several months. The "Ampullaria" is owned by the Anglo-Saxon Petroleum Company.

The fishing season on the Columbia river ended August 25 with the salmon pack the smallest in a decade. Sixteen million five hundred and four thousand pounds of raw fish were used in canning. The estimated pack of mild cured and cold storage salmon is 3050 tierces. This will bring the total amount of raw fish consumed to nearly twenty million pounds. The money paid to fishermen was slightly less than $1,000,000. The amount paid fishermen last year was more than $3,000,000.

The Gunman's Paradise

The United Mine Workers' Journal makes this reference to McDowell county, West Virginia, where Sid Hatfield was murdered:

"McDowell county, West Virginia, is the place where the life of a union miner is worth nothing. Thugs and gunmen, whose salaries are paid by coal companies while they serve as deputy sheriffs, run wild over this county, assaulting and murdering whom they please. They have no regard for law or common decency. Their sole mission is to fight the United Mine Workers of America."

Unemployment Grows

Figures issued by the Cleveland Trust Company show an employment shrinkage of 45 per cent in 55 plants which a year ago employed 12,262 women workers, and in June, this year, employed 6717.

Regarding men workers, the report shows that in fifty plants employing fifty thousand workers a year ago, on August 1, this year, there were only 20,950 employed. Last year the average weekly earnings of unskilled workers in these plants was $28; now it is reported as $16.80, a slash of 40 per cent.

It is interesting to note that the same authority shows that out of every thousand automobiles in the world, 843 are owned in the United States—but not, it may safely be assumed, by the workers who are subjects of the Cleveland Trust Company report.

Court Upsets Child Labor Law

The Federal Child Labor Law, which imposese a Federal tax of 10 per cent on the profits derived from products on which child labor is employed, is unconstitutional, rules Federal Judge Boyd.

The Court is shocked at this assault on the theory of State's rights, just because a lot of children are exploited in cotton mills of this State and elsewhere. He says this law "is a usurpation of authority and a violation of the sovereign rights of the State."

This is the second time that Judge Boyd has started attacks on anti-child labor laws. His first attack was sustained by the United States Supreme Court, June 3, 1918, in one of its well known 4-to-5 decisions. This law was known as the Owen-Keating Act, and debarred from interstate commerce the products of any establishment which employed children under fourteen years of age or where children under the age of sixteen years were employed more than eight hours a day.

Congress then passed another law (the one now set aside by Judge Boyd). This Act was based on the taxing power of Congress and provides that the Federal internal revenue department shall collect as a tax 10 per cent of the profits derived from products on which child labor is employed.

Judge Boyd insisted that the regulation of labor is a State function which cannot be evaded by the United States, either directly or indirectly.

Battleship to Stay

Airplanes can sink or seriously damage any vessel, but the battleship is still the backbone of the fleet and the bulk of the nation's defense.

In this connection, the board says: "Air craft carrying high capacity, high explosive bombs of sufficient size, can sink or seriously damage any naval vessel as present constructed, provided such projectiles can be placed in the water close alongside the vessel.

"Furthermore, it will be difficult, if not impossible, to build any type of vessel of sufficient strength to withstand the destructive force that can be obtained with the largest bombs that airplanes may be able to carry shore bases."

After stating that it may be "impossible" to build battleships that can withstand the airplane, the board declares that battleships are still the backbone of the fleet and the bulwark of the nation's defense.

"The airplane, like the submarine destroyer and the mine, has added to the dangers to which battleships are exposed, but these have not made the battleship obsolete," it is stated.

The report urges the highest development of anti-craft armament to offset advances by other nations in this mode of warfare.

Deflation for Workers

"In all this talk about the readjustment and reconstruction, why is it that the pressure is always brought to bear upon those whose standards of life and everyday existence would be demoralized by a reduction of wages, and why this drive to reduce wages first?" asks President Gompers, in a statement on present conditions.

"Wouldn't it be more humane," said the trade unionist, "to start with 'them as have' and whose profits or incomes derived from their surplus savings would be the only factor affected?

"There is a dangerous concept among many that automobiles and ice cream are all right for those who can't serve society and who produce nothing, but that the toilers must enjoy nothing of the good things of life.

"The women know that the cost of living has not come down. Instead, with profiteering going unchecked and unrestrained, the cost of living is going up, especially rents. Ninety per cent of the homes in the United States were built before the war, but the exorbitant rents gouged out of the tenants by the profiteering and unscrupulous landlords is blamed on the high cost of labor during the war."

TIME TO TAKE HEED

An expression frequently applied in reference to evildoers is to the effect that "if you give them rope enough they will hang themselves." A number of recent events seem to indicate that the American Legion has given substantial proof as to the truth of the proverb; at least, a few of their activities show a tendency to react.

The Congressional Record, August 15, 1921, contains a certain petition and memorial which was laid before the Senate, referred to the Committee on Judiciary; and at the instance of Mr. Borah, published in the Record. The petition is as follows:

National Headquarters,
Private Soldiers' and Sailors' Legion of the United States of America.

Washington, D. C., August 10, 1921.
Petition.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

On September 16, 1919, the Congress, by special enactment, granted a charter to a group of men and their successors, empowering them to organize an association of veterans of the World War, under the name of the American Legion.

By reason of the possession of this special charter, and because the organizers had been furnished by interests which have never been revealed with practically unlimited funds, the American Legion has come to be considered by the general public as an organization voicing the spirit and aspiration of all former service men. Ever since its organization the men in control of the American Legion have wrongfully assumed to represent the great body of veterans of the World War in matters of legislation, of public policy, and in many questions in which those leaders are personally interested, but about which the body of veterans as a whole care nothing. These leaders have become so overbearing and insolent in their assumptions that they are now, and for some time have been, presuming to give voice to the opinions of all former service men—those who do not belong to the American Legion as well as those who do. Their conduct in this regard has gone to such lengths that we feel that it [illegible] incumbent on us to acquaint you, as the directing power, with the actual facts.

The real situation is this: A group of silk-stockinged officers met in France and determined on the formation of an association of [illegible], at a time when the Army was rapidly returning to the United States, a committee of hand-picked, self-constituted former officers, carrying out the line of action which had been determined on at the preliminary meeting in France, opened offices in New York and procured from unknown sources some hundreds of thousands of dollars, to be used in furtherance of their ends. This committee prepared the constitution and by-laws for the proposed organization, which was to be known as the American Legion, and arranged for a meeting in St. Louis, at which the constitution and by-laws were to be adopted and the American Legion launched. This same New York committee supervised the selection of delegates to the St. Louis meeting by calling on the draft boards throughout the United States to hold meetings of former service men at which the delegates were to be selected. In each instance these meetings were restricted in their choice of delegates to officers of the rank specified by the New York committee.

By the terms of the charter of the American Legion and its constitution and by-laws, its first officers were selected by the organizers, and the successors of these officers are still chosen by the same self-constituted interests on a self-perpetuating basis.

We charge:

1. That the organizers and present officers of the American Legion organized it with tainted money, for the purpose of giving the men who placed themselves in its control an opportunity of misrepresenting the wishes and desires of former service men wherever such wishes and desires clashed with those of the unknown men who had furnished the money, and who are the real power behind the Legion.

2. That the present officers of the American Legion have no authority to speak for the rank and file of veterans, either within or without the Legion.

3. That the present officers of the Legion are receiving and paying out to themselves vast sums of money in salaries and expenses, ostensibly because of the services they are rendering to former service men, when, in truth, their services and activities are not in the interest of the veterans, but of the hidden group of men who furnished the secret funds for its organization.

4. That notwithstanding a clear and unequivocal provision in the law granting the American Legion its charter to the effect that a financial statement must be annually filed with Congress, no such statement has ever yet been filed.

5. That in carrying out the orders of the unknown interests who furnished the funds for its organization the present officers of the American Legion have instigated and incited lawlessness in numerous instances. An examination of the facts in the cases of Arthur Clark, Carpenteria, Calif.; Frederick Reis, Jr., Cincinnati; Kate O'Hara, Minot, N. Dak.; former Senator J. Ralph Burton and Prof. Wilson, at Ellinwood, Kan.—to mention only a few of these instances—will convince all fair-minded men that the perpetrators of these outrages should not be permitted to hide their offenses behind a Federal charter.

6. That the leaders of the American Legion have pursued the settled, uniform policy of interfering with and dictating to public schools and colleges, churches, newspapers, public meetings, political assemblies, officers charged with the preservation of the public peace and all persons and all activities which in any way threatened to endanger the interests of the secret financial backers of the Legion, and they still pursue this policy under the cloak of their Federal charter and without any authorization from the body of their members.

7. That from the day of its organization the attitude of the officers of the American Legion toward labor, and especially toward organized labor, has been so virulent and hostile as to justify the inference that the secret funds secretly furnished for its organization were contributed for the express purpose of opposing the welfare of all men who work for wages, under the specious guise of patriotism.

We have no quarrel with our buddies who were induced by false pretenses to join the Legion. Our criticism is directed solely against the men who have misrepresented and exploited not only the rank and file of the American Legion but ourselves and all other veterans as well; and we respectfully petition the Congress, in the interest of all former service men, to appoint a committe to examine into this matter, with the view of repealing the charter of the American Legion, so that it may cease to cloak the scandalous and disgraceful conduct of a small coterie of self-constituted, self-perpetuating officials.

Respectfully submitted,

NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
PRIVATE SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' LEGION.

[Seal]

MARVIN GATES SPERRY,
National Chairman.

EARL L. SEAL,
National Secretary.

As stated by Mr. Borah, the petition is of great importance and a serious matter to all concerned.

Observing from a patriotic and unbiased standpoint, these ex-service men are satisfied that the American Legion as at present constituted and operated—does not properly represent the great body of veterans of the World War. That it is detrimental to the welfare of the country at large, and especially injurious to the workers. They charge outright that the American Legion was fostered and still receives its nourishment from subtle interests antagonistic to all men who work for wages. There is no equivocation, or mincing of words, the accusations are straight and to the point.

Their sincerity is not a matter of doubt.

Never stopping to question as to reason, but ready to give their all for their country, these men relinquished their positions, prospects and business careers. They sacrificed homes, properties, health and even life in order that democracy might be secure.

It has been remarked, with a measure of truth, that one of the brightest revelations of the war was the self-sacrificing spirit of America. That quality of spirit was well represented by American toilers.

They suffered all the hardships of modern warfare, with no other reward in view than the fulfilment of an ideal.

When their task had been accomplished, and these men were no longer needed; what recognition was granted for such service? To what were they returned? Were they welcomed home with gratitude by the employers whose interests they had defended? Was there any real effort to make the infiltration into private life as easy as possible, with their rights regarded and their welfare conserved?

Not by any manner of means.

Even while they fought and the result of sacrifice was already foreshadowed, predatory interests were conniving, and preparing, a situation where the very helplessness of the returning service men could be capitalized or exploited. As if by international understanding, the machinery of commerce quickly and smoothly subsided and the wheels of industry were almost brought to a standstill throughout all the victorious industrial nations.

Therefore, after strenuous fight and superb sacrifice, while profiteers and "dollar patriots" were waxing wealthy beyond dreams, industrial conditions settled to a state that offered the fighters only prewar circumstances and forced them into desperate struggle to maintain that. While the red-blooded manhood fought, thousands of new millionaires came into existence, and with victory achieved the workers and fighters were forced into competition for the few opportunities which remain to eke out an existence, based upon the lowest possible standard of living.

With such things to be, the necessity of perfect control over both fighter and worker is apparent. However, it may be possible that in drunken arrogance, the Apostles of Greed have overstepped the bounds of discretion and safety.

While the door of the United States Treasury has been practically set ajar to the railroads, so that the diversion of coupon clipping shall be undisturbed, conditions have been created that operate to further submersion of the masses, and in the struggle many of those who saved democracy are left at a disadvantage. But this petition of the Private Soldiers and Sailors Legion is significant. The treatment to which they are subject and the privations suffered is causing them to do some tall thinking. They are just about at the end of their patience, and their ability to absorb punishment has reached the breaking point.

"It is a long lane that has no turning." There are some who have never lost faith in the intelligence embodied in our ex-service men, and they now begin to see their faith substantiated.

These men who courageously faced the horrors of war are not inclined to whimper now. They will not permit themselves to be misrepresented to their own people, and there is a peculiar revulsion revealed in the memorials to our representatives at Washington which they might do well to heed.

The average American is one of the most patient, law-abiding individuals in the universe, but once properly aroused a tiger cat is gentle in comparison.

The members of the Soldiers and Sailors Legion believe that they fought for an ideal, and in the name of humanity that belief must not be shattered, the result might be too serious.

We cannot believe that there is not sufficient of perception or patriotism to give this petition of the Private Soldiers and Sailors Legion the thorough and unprejudiced investigation that circumstances warrant. A serious problem requires solution and it must be met with all the earnestness and intelligence that the situation demands.

The cry of disloyalty cannot be hurled at the petitioners in this instance. Their patriotism, having been proven, cannot now be questioned so that the usual suggestion that the demand emanates from reckless radicals can bear no weight.

IN THE WAKE OF DISASTER

The fact has been established beyond any reasonable doubt that the long death list resulting from the wreck of the steamer "Alaska" on Blunt's Reef, August 6, 1921, was due in great part to inefficiency of the crew of strikebreakers, which constituted the largest percentage of the vessel's crew.

We have always maintained that employment of incompetent or inefficient crews by vessel owners is criminal, and reckless gambling with the lives of passengers and crew alike.

Taking into consideration the brazen manner in which vessel operators violated laws, and ignored provisions for protection of life and property at sea, during the recent lockout, it was inevitable that should emergency arise where efficiency and training were required, the situation would result in disaster. Such was the case with the steamer "Alaska."

When the disaster did occur and inquiry was forced, every possible device and subterfuge was employed by the steamship company to cover up their responsibility. In this they received considerable encouragement from the attitude of the Federal inspectors, who displayed keen desire to tangle those witnesses who gave evidence unfavorable to the steamship company.

The first hearings were held behind closed doors, neither the press nor public being admitted, and the witnesses were only allowed in one at a time. When such things are permitted and subordinate Government officials assume such peculiar attitude the public will never know what evidence is given or suppressed. As stated in the Journal issued August 10, 1921, "There is always the possibility, where some measure of blame may rest upon a Government bureau for laxity in fulfillment of its duties.

The actions of the Federal inquisitors does not suggest eagerness to drag out the whole unvarnished truth.

The first statements of unbiased and uninfluenced passengers taken at Eureka, where they were landed, have not been discredited, but rather corroborated by the evidence adduced at San Francisco, and it reveals glaringly the extent to which the vessel operators are to blame; also there is suggested criminal carelessness, or worse, upon the part of those officials entrusted with enforcement of the law.

The insidious efforts to discredit the damaging evidence of bos'un Helmer reveal to what desperate straits conspirators can be driven. A strikebreaker was induced to give testimony to the effect that there was labor trouble aboard, and that members of the "Alaska's" crew had refused to rescue survivors without extra pay; but this individual's evidence was impeached beyond question. The following documents are of great importance to the case in question, and they refute the statements of those interested persons, who sought to cover the company's responsibility by clouding the issue.

The following letter, from the master of the British steamer "Anyox" in reference to the wreck of the "Alaska" has been received by the Vancouver Agency:

(Copy.)

August 13, 1921.

Mr. R. Towsend,
Agt. Vancouver Branch,
Sailors Union of the Pacific.

Dear Sir: Seeing that my crew, when picking up the survivors of the S. S. "Alaska," were members of your organization; I feel that it is only fair to inform you that I am proud of the self-sacrifice and able way in which they carried out their various duties at a critical time, and in particular G. Campbell, No. 1745, R. Russell, No. 1662, and W. Ross, No. 1420, who so manfully upheld those traditions of the sea which belong to the race of people their names signify.

Yours very truly,
S. SNODDY,
Master S. S. "Anyox."

Affidavit in the Matter of the Loss of the Steamship "Alaska"

I, Bernard McKillop, of the City of Vancouver and the Province of British Columbia, make oath and say as follows:

(1) I am the chief officer of the Steamship "Anyox" and I have held that position when she went to the rescue of the Steamship "Alaska" when that vessel was wrecked on the coast of California.

(2) I ordered my men into the lifeboats and I was stationed at the gangway when the survivors from the "Alaska" were brought aboard the "Anyox."

(3) My men were the only ones needed to man the lifeboats and at no time were any of the survivors asked or required to man any of the lifeboats from the steamship "Anyox" although there were volunteers.

(4) At no time did I hear any of the members of the crew of the "Alaska" who had been rescued demand from the mate of the "Alaska" any extra compensation or bonus before they would perform rescue service and as a fact their services were neither needed or requested. And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true.

BERNARD MCKILLOP.

Declared before me at the City of Vancouver, Province of British Columbia, this 18th day of August A. D., 1921.

JAMES BROOKS,
A Notary Public, in and for the Province of British Columbia.

There appears to have been but little real light brought forth by inquiries into the causes for this apparently unnecessary loss of life. The whole blame for the disaster has been placed upon the captain, who died like a man at his post.

As a means of keeping clean skirts for themselves certain Government officials seem willing to permit the company to hide behind any iniquitous subterfuge. Under the circumstances we are compelled to the belief that responsibility for the untimely death of the Alaska's passengers will never be placed where it properly belongs.

News from the Atlantic Coast

VIEWS OF A LEGAL MIND

Silas B. Axtell, writing from Copenhagen, Denmark, gives several interesting sidelights on his travels. After visiting Berlin, Axtell spent a day in Hamburg with the president of the German Seamen's Union at that port. He states that "The Germans have scarcely any vessels and their seamen have disappeared."

They have six new 12,000-ton vessels, but the 3000 seamen in the port of Hamburg are all employed on small craft.

Although living generally is high and wages low—according to the present rate of exchange—a flat can be rented for 250 to 400 marks a year.

In Germany the factories are running on Sundays as well as week days. There is an eight-hour day, but stores generally remain open from 9 a. m. until 7 p. m. Wages of salesgirls range from 250 to 1000 marks per month. A mark in Germany at present will purchase the equivalent of what can be bought for 5 cents in the United States, in spite of the fact that its exchange value is only 1 1-5 cents. Crops are good, with an appearance of everybody buckling down to hard work. "With champagne at $1 a bottle, it is easy to see how American seamen miss their boats.'

"Our comrades in Denmark have been through a bad strike, which did not turn out well, but none of them have for that reason lost confidence in their union."

Many Danish vessels are laid up and their tonnage suffered from the submarine blockade; but prospects are good in the country. No unfriendly feeling for Germany is apparent, and they are ready to co-operate with German labor unions for mutual protection of seamen.

Danish seamen's wages are 316 kr. per month; other grades in the same ratio as in the States. At present rate of exchange a kroner is worth 16 cents, so an A. B. draws $50.50 per month. But you can rent a very cheerful three-room apartment for 500 kroner a year ($80), which is much less than we are compelled to pay in the United States. All things considered, the wages of Danish seamen compare very favorably with those of American seamen. The seamen of Denmark have an agreement with ship owners which expires January 1, 1922. The Danes seem to be proud of their own country, but at the same time more willing to co-operate with workers in other lands in individual strife than are the American workers.

In concluding his review of conditions, Axtell states: "In spite of the fact that this (Denmark) is a monarchy, and we and Germany are republics, I believe there is more personal liberty and state socialism practiced here than in either of said republics. As I've said before, we have much to learn from Europe."

You can not reform the physical conditions of being by means solely intellectual any more than you can appease hunger by reading a menu.

CLASS CONSCIOUS SCABS

Editor Seamen's Journal:

Will you kindly publish this little article in the Journal. It gives a first rate definition of a "Scab." Please note that these scabs enjoyed a vacation by taking the bread and butter from the mouths of their fellow-countrymen.

C. BULLOCK,
Agent, Port Arthur, Texas.

The clipping from a Texas paper follows:

Three Texas business men—young fellows, all of them—who, by way of vacation, made a voyage on the Shipping Board steamship "Tekoa," from Galveston to Germany and return, as members of the crew, came ashore from that vessel yesterday, glad to get back to the United States, yet delighted with their experiences on the high seas and in Germany.

The men were L. S. Stockton, assistant cashier of the People's Bank of Louise; P. S. Stockton, proprietor of a mercantile store in Louise; and E. R. Albaugh, clerk for the Southern Pacific Railroad at El Campo.

They were signed on as messmen when the vessel left here last June 15, according to L. S. Stockton. On the way out of the gulf they ran into the hurricane which caused such a disturbance during the latter part of June, and had five days of stormy weather, finding it necessary to run before the storm as well as they could; and the landlubbers were well satisfied when this part of their adventure had ended.

In Germany, according to Mr. Stockton, they found it possible to hire men to substitute for them on shipboard for fifty cents a day, which, he said, seemed like big wage to the Germans, for one dollar in United States money at that time would buy seventy-nine German marks. By thus hiring substitutes, they were enabled to see all of Hamburg and Bremen.

"I don't see how the people live," said Mr. Stockton. "Food is plentiful enough, but the price is high, when considered in native money, and the wages some of the workmen draw are very low in comparison with what it costs to buy things. Of course, American money being at such a premium, enabled us to get anything we desired at what seemed to us a very low price.

"We found the Germans, as a rule, very well disposed toward us and toward all Americans in general.

"The shipyards seemed to be very active. They were building new merchant ships to replace those they lost during the war or surrendered to the Allies. Some of the old battleships which they retained are being dismantled and converted into cargo carriers."

Mr. Stockton reported that the people seen on the streets, particularly in Bremen, seemed to be well dressed and that conditions of general business appeared to be much the same as they are in this country.

The three men are well pleased with their trip and its adventures and declare that it is an ideal way to spend a vacation.

Editor's Note:—The foregoing is a concrete example of class lines in the United States. It reveals the characteristics embodied in certain of our 100 per cent citizens—100 per cent class conscious. From their point of view, it is the highest quality of honor to deprive workers' families of their bread. Every passing day reveals the definition of class lines in the United States, and the workers are slow to realize the situation. We must meet solidarity of the capitalist with the solidarity of labor.

CHILD WELFARE IN BELGIUM

Through the Second International Conference on the Protection of Childhood, held at Brussels from July 18 to 21, the attention of the world has been called to the program Belgium is working out for the conservation of childhood. Of timely interest is an article by Dr. Rene Sand of the University of Brussels, recently received by the U. S. Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau. How intelligence, determination and united effort triumph over conquest, war and famine is vividly portrayed in this discussion of "Industrial Medical Reconstruction in Belgium," which appeared in Living Medicine."

Even during the years of occupation, when the Government had left the Belgian soil and the only central co-ordinating agency was the voluntary "Comité National," public health activities were started on a hitherto unknown scale, and for the first two years there was an actual decline in infant mortality. Dr. Sand accounts for this in part by the cessation of industrial work for women. The Children's Welfare League, which had begun to function to a limited extent before the war, developed in the midst of the most difficult circumstances until even the smallest village was reached.

In spite of these efforts, the average child was, at the time of the Armistice, one full year backward in normal development; the weight of the average Brussels school boy was three pounds below normal and of the average school girl, seven pounds.

The first step in the medical reconstruction of industry was the establishment of an independent Labor Medical Service, which includes in its functions the protection of expectant and nursing working women and the care of the health of working children. The service immediately formulated a constructive program which enlisted the co-operation of all agencies concerned in the promotion of public health, including the health of working mothers and their children.

In the United States, eighteen States provide for the physical examination of every child entering industry, but no State has provided for examinations of working children at regular intervals. Belgium has adopted the advanced program of a medical examination for every juvenile not later than a month after he has entered an industrial occupation, to be repeated once a year until the child reaches eighteen, and oftener in case of disease.

Belgium has realized that health protection in the community must go hand-in-hand with health protection in industry, and Dr. Sand emphasizes the following points: General public health work; child welfare; housing; the restriction of alcohol consumption; and education and recreation, both for adults and children.

A national children's board has been established, which is maintained by public and private funds, and which supervises and supports child welfare organizations meeting certain conditions. The child welfare program includes the periodical free examination of children under three years of age brought by their mothers for examination; the establishment of free medical dispensaries for expectant mothers; the diffusion of knowledge relating to infant health and maternal nursing; and the supervision of boarded-out children under seven years of age. The cost of child welfare work will be borne one-half by the State, one-fourth by the province and one-fourth by the municipality. Provincial and municipal boards are appointed by the national board, and advisory committees are provided for.

Editor Seamen's Journal:

I have spent up all my money, and have nothing now to do, but sit around the union hall, and think a thing or two. My thoughts are simply memories, and I think of nothing new, but I will write out my story and send it down to you. My writing may be very poor, and my poetry be worse; but just to pass the time away I'll try to make it verse. If you turn this paper over my tale will meet your eyes; and if you can not use it, you need not apologize:

UNDER TROPIC SKIES

The boy stood on the burning deck,
Beneath the tropic's sun;
He was thinking of home and mother,
The little son of a gun.

In fancy he saw his playmates,
Playing on the sands,
And, oh, he rued the wanderlust,
That took him to foreign lands.

He hated the burning tropic sky,
And he hated the calm, blue sea;
And how he hated the drudgery
On the good ship "Nancy Lee."

And as he stood on the burning deck,
His hand upon his chin;
The first mate chanced to spy him,
And laid hold of a belaying pin.

He chased the boy about the ship,
While the sailors laughed with glee;
He chased him onto the jiboom,
And into the glassy sea.

He hauled the boy aboard again,
And beat him till he bled;
He beat him till he fainted,
And was very nearly dead.

But he taught the lad a lesson
Not to stand still in the sun;
But to holystone the burning deck
Until the day was done.

This story isn't fiction,
It happened once to me;
And it happens far too often
To the boys that go to sea.

WORKING WOMEN TO END WAR

A world-wide demonstration for disarmament by the women of all nations, to be held on Armistice Day, when the International Disarmament Conference convenes in Washington, was initiated recently at Washington by organized American working women, through the National Women's Trade Union League. Telegrams inviting participation of a score of women's organizations of the United States and the organized women in forty-eight nations which are sending delegates to the Second International Congress of Working Women in Geneva, were sent out on behalf of the National Women's Trade Union League by Mrs. Raymond Robins, its national president, who is also president of the International Congress of Working Women.

"To strengthen the Governments in their desire to disarm, by giving unequivocal expression of the women of all the world," is the purpose of the demonstration. Plans are not yet announced as to the form the demonstration will take, but committees will at once be organized in order to put the arrangements well under way before the American delegates to the International Congress of Working Women sail for Geneva, early in September. The American demonstration will focus in Washington, where it may take the form of a parade, and it will, doubtless, be carried out locally all over the country also.

The text of the message of the National Women's Trade Union League to the women of forty-eight nations, signed by Mrs. Robins, is as follows:

"President Harding has set Armistice Day for the opening of the momentous disarmament conference at Washington. When we remember the joy that went up from the peoples of all nations in thanksgiving that peace would once more dwell on earth, no other day would lend the same significance throughout the entire world as this anniversary of November 11, 1918. Since that day the aftermath of the war with its hunger, suffering and misery has appalled the conscience and paralyzed the spirit of mankind. This is the great hour for women of the world to help lead humanity out of the darkness that overwhelmed it. The hour to liberate humanity from the crushing burden of armaments is at hand. The Government will be strengthened in their desire to disarm if the women of the nations will give unequivocal expression to their will.

"Organized effort is essential to the achievement of our purpose. American working women, through the National Women's Trade Union League, ask you to unite in making that will unequivocally express itself on Armistice Day by organizing a world-wide demonstration to be followed by constructive action."

The National Women's Trade Union League, which is a federation of trade union women and allies of the labor movement, has twenty local leagues in the United States, with an affiliated membership of about 600,000.

The foreign countries in which the organized working women have been asked to organize simultaneous demonstrations are: Argentina, Austria, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chili, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Ccechoslovakia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, Hungary, India, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Porto Rico, Portugal, Rumania, Salvador, Serbia, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Uruguay, Venezuela.

HISTORY OF LABOR DAY

Labor Day, 1921, is the twenty-seventh annual celebration of Labor Day as a legal national holiday.

The history of Labor Day is significant of the increasing strength and progress of organized labor.

Labor Day evolved from the aspiration of the labor movement; it was not handed down as a present. Its recognition as a legal holiday was won by labor; it was not given to labor.

The united voluntary efforts of the workers themselves established Labor Day as a national holiday long before any State Legislature or the National Legislature enacted the custom into statute law.

But the history of the statute law is in itself significant; it indicates the ever-increasing influence of the economic organizations of labor over the deliberations of law makers.

The Labor Day idea was originated by P. J. McGuire, for many years first vice-president of the American Federation of Labor.

At a meeting of the New York City Central Labor Union, held on May 8, 1882, McGuire urged the propriety of setting aside one day in the year as a general holiday for the laboring people. He suggested that it be called "Labor Day."

The idea was adopted by the Central Labor Union, and it staged a Labor Day parade and festival on the first Monday in September, 1882.

The A. F. of L. endorsed the national Labor Day holiday at its 1884 convention, held at Chicago. The convention unanimously adopted the following resolution, introduced by A. C. Cameron, delegate from the Chicago Trades and Labor Alliance:

"Resolved, That the first Monday in September of each year be set apart as a laborer's national holiday, and that we recommend its observance by all wage workers, irrespective of sex, calling, or nationality."

Through the activity of the State Federations of Labor and the central labor bodies the Labor Day demand spread from city to city and State to State.

Many municipal councils and State Legislatures made it a legal holiday.

Oregon was the first State to accede to labor's demand that Labor Day be made a State holiday. The Oregon Labor Day law was signed by the Governor on February 21, 1887. The Legislatures of Colorado, Massachusetts, New Jersey and New York also made Labor Day a State holiday in 1887. Connecticut, Nebraska and Pennsylvania followed in 1889; Iowa and Ohio in 1890; Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Maine, Montana, New Hampshire, South Carolina, Tennessee and Washington in 1891; Alabama, Louisiana, Utah and Virginia in 1892, and California, Delaware, Florida, Minnesota, Rhode Island, Texas and Wisconsin in 1893.

In the meantime A. F. of L. officials sought congressional legislation to make Labor Day a legal national holiday, in conformity with the resolution of the 1884 convention. The bill became a law ten years later. It passed Congress on June 28, 1894.

On June 29, 1894, President Cleveland signed the Labor Day law in the presence of Amos J. Cummings, representative in Congress from New York City. Mr. Cummings presented the pen and penholder used by President Cleveland to President Gompers.

In his annual report to the 1894 A. F. of L. convention President Gompers said:

"National Labor Day—It affords me pleasure to be able to report that the demand made by the A. F. of L. for making the first Monday in September of each year a legal holiday passed Congress and was made a law on June 29, 1894."

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Although Secretary of the Navy Davis admits that 5,735,000 workers are unemployed, and winter is approaching with little prospects for an early revival of industry, Congress has spent the last few days wrangling over the "beer bill," and finally recessed without the slightest effort to pass any measures calculated to relieve the acute distress which exists throughout the country.

It is true that pressure from the agricultural sections forced through a bill which empowers the War Finance Corporation to loan one million dollars on farm products; but Congress delayed so long over this Act that the harvest is practically over. Grains and other farm crops have now left the hands of the farmer, and country banks, grain buyers, exporters and speculators will be the chief beneficiaries of the bill. Most of the farmers already have sold their crops at prices far below the cost of production. This means that the farmers' purchasing power—40 per cent of that of the entire country—will be prostrated for at least another season.

The Harding administration has handled the existing depression with almost unparalleled stupidity. It has permitted the Federal Reserve Banking Board to continue its contraction of currency and credit and this deliberate "deflation" of the farmers and workers has just about "killed the goose that laid the golden egg." The only steps that the Administration has taken is to force, through high tariff rates, to shift some $600,000,000 in taxes from twenty thousand millionaire war profiteers to the great consuming public, and to loan the railroads half a billion dollars. All these measures have made conditions worse instead of better.

Harding regards the railroad relief bill the crowning triumph of his White House incumbency. He honestly believes it "will restore prosperity." Of course it will do no such thing. It is merely an attempt "to lift ourselves by our economic bootstraps" as a Western Congressman recently declared. What the railroads need is efficient management, unification of many competing and unnecessary branches, lower freight rates and a squeezing out of their watered stocks. The Esch-Cummins Act put a premium on graft and waste and there is little likelihood of there being conducted for the best interests of the country so long as this piece of special legislation remains on the statute books.

But Harding does not see this. He is densely ignorant of economics and blindly trustful in the little clique of wealthy advisors who surround him. Mellon and Hoover, both of them multi-millionaires, are his right-hand men on the Cabinet, and almost any big capitalist, from J. P. Morgan down, can get easy and sympathetic access to the presidential ear. These men shape his opinions, and this explains, as Representative Keller of Minnesota recently charged, why "the Administration is so busy administrating for 5000 millionaires that it has forgotten the existence of the 100,000,000 people who make up the rest of the population." This is a perfectly just indictment. But in the meantime the country drifts into increasing hardships and depression under the leadership of an easy-going, golf-playing President, very well pleased with his own lot and apparently well satisfied that we are progressing very nicely "back to normalcy."

Gompers Vague About Program

Confronted with undisputable evidence that our industrial autocrats are taking advantage of the depression to extend the open-shop campaign and to force further wage reductions, the American Federation of Labor executive committee is facing the most serious situation since 1893.

President Gompers opened the meeting with the assertion that labor intends to resist further wage cuts, but he refused to specify what steps would be taken. Later it was announced that "adoption of a new policy to serve as a guide for the labor movement of America" would be the result of the meeting. Nothing very definite about this new policy could be learned, but President Gompers intimated that a "thorough investigation had been ordered of the entire field of industry and that results of this inquiry would form the basis of the new policy."

The A. F. of L. head also gave out a vigorous interview denouncing the "economic crime" of paying workers wages below decent standards of living and pointing out that profits, rents, interest and other forms of capitalist returns ought to be deflated along with wages.

The Executive Council also scored the decision of Judge Boyd of the North Carolina Federal Court in declaring the child labor law unconstitutional for a second time. The statement asserted that "Again the judiciary has set itself up as a paramount body over the executive and legislative branches of our Government," and added that "the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor protests against the course pursued by Judge Boyd and appeals to the Congress to rectify the wrong and bring the judiciary within the folds of its component and not dominating part of the Government of our Republic."

Rail Strike Rumored

Labor leaders here report that there is growing dissatisfaction among railroad machinists over recent wage cuts and attempts on the part of carriers to evade rulings of the Railroad Labor Board by such subterfuge as the "Marion plan," where the roads turned over their shops to a privately operated company, which put in open shop rules.

As a result another "outlaw strike" is feared in some circles, and union officials here have telegraphed to various big rail centers urging the men to "sit tight" until the union executives formulate a definite policy.

The recent decision of the Railroad Labor Board on overtime and working hours is not regarded as a victory for the men when it has come to be more carefully analyzed. The shop crafts directly affected by the decision were inclined to regard it as a victory at first, but more study has resulted in their leaders declaring it an "adverse decision."

Officials Refund Salaries

Because thousands of their members are out of work and consequently drawing no wages, the salaries of all staff officers of the International Association of Machinists for the month of August will be refunded and turned over to the strike benefit fund. The total will amount to about $10,000.

The suggestion was made by President Johnston and all the salaried officials gladly joining in giving up their salaries for the month. In the meantime the officials of the organization are making active efforts to stave off unemployment by formation of a corps of "foreign trade getters." The Mexican Government, which is sympathetic with union labor, has already placed orders through the International Machinists aggregating $2,000,000. Needless to say, these orders are only given to firms friendly to labor. An effort will be made to extend this movement to other South American republics. Soviet Russia also orders machinery through organized labor channels.

Federal Classification Planned

The National Federation of Federal Employes, which holds its national convention at New Orleans next month, will concern itself primarily with ways and means to obtain legislation for a complete reclassification of the United States civil service to meet modern employment standards.

Investigation by the joint congressional commission on reclassification has shown that nearly 50,000 Federal employes are paid less than a living wage; that there are as many as twelve rates of pay for the same work; that scientists and highly trained workers often are paid less than ordinary labor; that hundreds of positions are vacant because salaries are too low to tempt applicants; that there is little future for employes appointed on merit because most of the high salaried posts are held by political appointees; and that a 40 per cent annual labor turnover costs the Government millions of dollars in decreased efficiency.

President Luther Steward of the Federal Employes' Union says that the following principles will be urged to reform the administration of civil service:

"1. A uniform employment policy affecting working conditions and salaries, determined by a central administrative agency after consultation with department heads, this agency to have power to review and to constitute a board of appeal.

"2. A standardized salary scale based on skill and training required for the work performed, with just relation to the cost of living as determined by official investigation.

"3. Appointment, allocation, promotion and removal in accordance with proved qualifications determined by the correlating agencies, i. e. the Civil Service Commission and the budget bureau in consultation with appointing officers.

"4. Equal pay for work of corresponding skill, with equal opportunity for promotion irrespective of sex."

The Labor News of Eureka remarks: "Now that the American plan is in full swing on the sea, it will be convenient to blame the Bolsheviks for the disappearance of any vessels that fail to reach port.

The most powerful influence for an active intelligence is an empty stomach.

HAWAII NEARLY HALF JAP.

According to statistics of the territorial board of health the number of Japanese in the Hawaiian Islands during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, was estimated at 114,879 out of a total estimated population of 275,884.

The justification for Hawaii's reputation as the "melting pot of the Pacific" was evidenced in the following tabulation of race populations contained in the report:

American, British, German and Russian, 37,409; Chinese, 22,378; Filipino, 23,971; Hawaiian, 21,907; Japanese, 114,879; Korean, 5327; Asiatic-Hawaiian, 6499; Caucasian-Hawaiian, 11,348; Portuguese, 25,-257; Porto Rican, 5257; Spanish, 848; all others, 570.

Japanese Births One-Half

The Japanese births during the year constituted virtually one-half of the total births of the territory, or 5001, according to figures supplied by the Japanese consul-general. The Japanese birth rate was 42.74 a thousand against the population birth rate of 36.81 a thousand.

The Japanese deaths totaled slightly more than one-third of the entire deaths of the territory. The Japanese rate was 11.45 a thousand as against the total population death rate of 13.73 a thousand.

5605 Increase

The total Japanese population of 114,879 is an increase of 5605 over the official census of 1920. The health board pointed out that this was at the rate of 56,050 for a ten-year period, compared with the increase of 29,599 Japanese in the territory during the 1910-1920 decade.

The total population of 275,884 includes the military and naval forces, numbering about 16,500. The territory's population in 1920 was 255,912, excluding the army and navy.

High Death Rates

Persons of Spanish blood hold first place in the mortality rate, suffering 38.92 deaths a thousand population. Pure blooded Hawaiians, however, led the important racial groups with a death rate of 32.55, while the rate of the Americans, British, Germans and Russians was only 5.99 a thousand.

In the birth rate also the Americans, British, Germans and Russians were last with 15.88 a thousand as compared with the Asiatic-Hawaiian group with a high birth rate of 78.63, the Caucasian-Hawaiians with a rate of 63.27; Koreans, 41.11; Portuguese, 39.99; Chinese, 32.04, and Hawaiians, 28.30.

JAPS OUTWIT SHIPPING BOARD

Every passing day adds new examples of inefficiency upon the part of Shipping Board representatives, some of which border on absolute stupidity. In view of the fact that there has been so much lack of economy in operation, the following press item is interesting:

"Outwitted by Japanese commercial strategy in the open fight to secure steamship freight business in the Pacific, the United States Shipping Board has lost several million dollars in the past month through low-quoted rates.

"Lured by extensive orders from Japanese buyers in the Orient, government-owned vessels were offered for the trade. The rate quoted by the Americans was underbid by the Japanese steamship officials. Then the Americans made a material rate cut, and the Japs shrewdly permitted them to take the bait.

"At a rate of $12.50 a thousand feet for lumber cargo the government-owned craft were unable to pay operating expenses one way across the Pacific.

"Twenty-four big freight steamers of the United States Shipping Board, which have been engaged in transporting these lumber cargoes from the Pacific Northwest to the Orient for Japanese account, have been withdrawn from service.

"This fact was revealed following the receipt of Chairman Lasker's order to restrict allocations and cut commission fees to operators in the effort to save $25,000,000 monthly now lost by the Shipping Board.

"All the twenty-four freighters have been transporting lumber at $12.50 a thousand feet from the Columbia River to Japanese ports. Each steamer has been operated at a loss of over $50,000 a voyage.

"North Pacific Japanese lines have been content to permit the American-owned vessels to handle the lumber business at the low rates and at a loss while the Jap freighters have been traveling well filled with other cargoes at a rate giving them a substantial profit."

DIRIGIBLE ZR-2 WRECKED

Sixteen officers and men of the United States navy and twenty-seven officers and men of the British navy met death in the collapse of the great dirigible ZR-2 over the city of Hull.

All but one of the Americans on board the ill-fated craft perished.

Only six men of the forty-nine who were making the trial trip in the dirigible prior to the vessel's being turned over to the United States navy are known to have been saved.

The ZR-2 had been in the air continuously for thirty-six hours, while making a trial trip, preparatory to being turned over to the Americans, when the accident occurred.

MINERS TURN BACK

The march of miners from Marmet to Mingo, in protest against martial law, came to an end when President C. F. Keeney of District 17, United Mine Workers of America, induced five or six hundred of the men to agree to return to their homes. Keeney said that special trains would be provided for the men, while the thousands along the road between Madison and Peytona had already taken the back track.

Excitement still runs high in the affected area, and a condition bordering on civil war prevails in West Virginia.

Children enjoying the benefit of school and the pleasure of the playground instead of the drudgery of the mill and factory is part of the progress made by the union label.

Labor News

Shortage of skilled help is reported in the cotton mills of eastern Connecticut. The mills are now running on a 100 per cent basis.

The Dress and Skirt Manufacturers' Association has agreed to continue its present wage and working conditions agreement with the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union for five months.

Permanent exclusion of all Orientals from Canada was urged in a resolution adopted by the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress. The congress also went on record as opposed to the renewal of the Anglo-Japanese treaty.

Organized labor of San Francisco will observe Labor Day with an entertainment and ball at the Civic Auditorium. The committees include the regular shining lights in local labor circles.

Through failure of drilling outfits in Oklahoma to pay off their men, oilworkers in that State have lost tens of thousands of dollars in wages. Actions to recover have been started through the State Labor Commissioner's office, and a great number of the oilworkers are in distress financially.

The building tie-up in San Francisco ended when the Building Trades Council unions by a vote approximately 2 to 1 decided to return to work. At the same time the unions voted 5 to 1 against acceptance of the proposals of the Chamber of Commerce Industrial Relations Committee which is based on the American Plan.

More than 2000 teamsters employed by the United States Trucking Corporation of New York checked a wage reduction that, if successful, would spread throughout the city. The corporation demanded that rates be reduced $4 a week. After a few hours' strike the corporation agreed to accept the old scale.

The American Federation of Labor seeks to abolish the practice of fixing wages solely on a basis of the cost of living. The Federation's executive council have finally decided to undertake an investigation to develop a new policy by which the workmen would also be rewarded for their social usefulness and productivity.

Twenty-one Industrial Workers of the World have won a victory before the State Supreme Court at Olympia, Washington. The Court, in a judgment handed down, sets aside the conviction imposed on these men by the Pierce County Superior Court March 2, 1920, and orders a new trial for the accused. These workers were convicted on hearsay evidence, the Supreme Court holds. The appeal has been known as the State against Alfred Pettilla and others, and has been pending for several months. The twenty-one men affected by the Supreme Court decision were arrested in Tacoma following the Centralia killings in which paraders attacked the I. W. W. hall. The conviction was registered in the lower Court on a charge of criminal syndicalism, and the trial was part of an hysterical "clean-up" campaign of I. W. W. throughout the State. Activities of the I. W. W. in disseminating their literature in cities, lumber camps and grain fields were thoroughly considered by the Supreme Court before rendering its decision.

World's Workers

Delegates from provincial labor bodies assembled at Winnipeg have decided upon creating a Labor Party to enter immediately into dominion politics.

One thousand fishermen on the coast of New South Wales have formed a fishermen's union and intend to sell their fish direct to the public of the State—in co-operation with the State trawlers.

The railway men are striking, and disturbances are increasing in the district of Posen (formerly West Prussia, now part of Poland). Several persons have been killed in political and industrial disorders.

The New South Wales Federal Basic Wage Commission recommends considerable increase in wages to an amount varying in Sydney and other capital cities from £5.17s. to £5.6s. 2d. in Brisbane. The recommendation is based on the increased cost of living, principally of house rent. If the recommendation is adopted, it is estimated that the wage bill of the Commonwealth will be increased by £100,000,000.

Significant developments mark the German workmen's campaign for nation-wide increases. An announcement has been made that the executive committee of the Miners' Federation informed the Government a general strike would be declared September 1, unless an increase of 12 marks per shift per man was granted. The State employes have refused the wage increases offered by the Government, holding out for their full demands.

The Australian Worker objects to the legal jargon and solemn nonsense raised by lawyers before the arbitration court. Recently the Bank Clerk's Union was called upon to pay $15,000 for legal expenses merely to get their claims placed before this government board. "If industrial arbitration is to be a success," says the Australian Worker, "we must get rid of the lawyers and their preposterous claim for theatrical services."

The Australian government is feeding striking copper miners, who left their work when attempts were made to lower their wages. Business in Australia is far from good, but there is a tendency toward better times. The coastwise trade is poor and as a consequence Australian coastwise shipping is tying up, with little hope of resuming operations for several months. In line with those of the United States and other industrial nations, the Australian banks are aggravating the situation, by refusing financial business backing.

British workers have won a victory over the government's proposal to treat co-operative societies as corporations and make their surplus subject to the corporations profits tax. The Government held that profits are profits, whether found in the treasury of co-operative societies or private companies organized for private profits. The workers held that profits of the co-operative societies are not profits in the ordinary sense—that profits of the private trader are made out of the consumers for the benefit of themselves, while the profits of the co-operatives are the savings of the consumers made by trading with themselves. The House of Commons accepted the worker's viewpoint.

Domestic and Naval

The steam schooner "Centralia," which was libeled at San Francisco by her crew last July, has paid off all obligations.

The American steamer "City of Brunswick," from Mobile to Antwerp, ran aground last week on Sambro Ledges, near Halifax, N. S.

A libel suit has been filed at Seattle against the motorship "Oregon." The vessel was formerly owned by the Gulf Mail Steamship Company.

Transfer of the coast guard service from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department was understood to be under consideration by President Harding.

Ratification, by the U. S. Senate and German Reichstag, of the peace treaty signed last week in Berlin, will be followed by withdrawal of American troops from the Rhine, according to Washington officials.

Remission of $17,640 fine is asked by the Toyo Kishen Kaisha in the case of the Japanese company's steamship "Tenyo Maru," in a petition filed in United States District Court. Five hundred cases of contraband opium were found hidden on the "Tenyo" last December.

The Shipping Board is experiencing a run in broken stern frames. Seven accidents of this kind have been reported in recent weeks from Puget Sound and the Columbia River. The "West Nomentum," making the eighth like accident, is in drydock at the Moore shipyards for the replacing of the lower half of her stern frame. The job will cost $18,500.

Petitions from all shipping ports are pouring in to Theodore Roosevelt, assistant secretary of the navy, asking that the Navy Department's daily bulletin be continued. The publication is issued daily and contains the movements of ships from all parts of the world, as well as aids to navigation and miscellaneous shipping notes. A notice that the publication was to be discontinued has raised a protest from the shipping fraternity of the country.

Closing of the United States Shippin Board Navigation School, located in the Ferry building, was ordered in a message from Washington. The school will cease to function on September 15. The large number of idle seamen and officers was given as the reason for the cessation of the school. Hundreds of seamen have been able to acquire their officers' tickets during the last four years through the medium of the school. Whether or not all other navigation schools throughout the country will be similarly affected was not stated.

A "lost battalion" of marines, six officers and 274 men, was formally found by the Navy Department last week. Since August, 1917, the battalion had been stationed at Camaguey, Cuba, in the very heart of the island, with no apparent reason for its being kept on such an assignment since the days of the war. The discovery of the "missing" marines was made by Assistant Secretary Roosevelt after much searching of records and inquiry among marine officers. The hunt was started as the result of the recent incident in Camaguey, when the marines kicked up some excitement in the Cuban town after Lewis Foster, an American engineer and former navy officer, had been attacked and beaten by Cubans.

The preliminary census figures show that the population of Great Britain is 42,767,530, a gain of 1,814,750 since 1911, or 4.7 per cent. The males number 20,430,623 and the females 22,336,709.

The cost of the inter-allied military occupation of Upper Silesia has reached 9,500,000,000 marks on August 1, which, according to the Versailles Treaty, must be paid by the State to which the disputed territory is annexed.

The treaty of peace between Germany and the United States was signed at Berlin August 25. The German foreign minister, in signing, expressed gratification at this act for the resumption of friendly relations between the two nations, Dresel replying with reciprocal sentiments.

The Belgian Chamber of Deputies has passed a law giving women the right to be burgomasters and aldermen, but if they are married they must have the husband's permission. However, if the husband is absent or otherwise unable to present an objection, his opinion will not be required. The bill has been passed on through to the Senate.

Unrest in India is seething. More than one thousand lives, it is feared, have been lost in the rioting in the Malbar district of British India. Anxiety is felt for the English women and children in the outlying districts. Several railway stations have been wrecked. Twenty men of the Leinster regiment at Tirunsngadi are reported to have been cut off. It is also reported that the rioting natives are working their way from the interior to Calicut, on the coast.

M. Tchitcherin, the Russian Soviet's foreign minister, has sent a note to the governments of Finland, Esthonia, Letvia, Lithuania and Poland warning them of alleged plots on the part of the Soviet's enemies to assassinate officials and prominent persons of the countries named, as well as other foreign countries. According to the note the murders were to be charged to the Bolshevists for the purpose of discrediting the present Russian regime. The note is being taken seriously by the countries concerned and is not being regarded as the usual Bolshevist propaganda.

With the Wits

Judge—Have you ever seen the prisoner at the bar before?

Witness—Yes, your Honor, that's where I met him.—Burr.

"How fast can your car go?"

"Just fast enough," replied Mr. Chuggins, "to break the road rules, and not fast enough to keep ahead of the cop."—Washington Star.

"What sort of a time is your friend having on his motor tour?"

"Great! I've had only two letters from him—one from a police station and the other from a hospital."—The Bulletin (Sydney).

"Father," said little Rollo, "what is meant by 'a Sabbath day's journey'?"

"I am afraid, my son, that in too many cases it means twice around the golf links."—Edinburgh Scotsman.

Agitated Lover—Is it true that your father has lost his fortune?

His Lady Love (sighing)—Yes—all is swept away; but you are left, Percy, dear.

Agitated Lover—Great Jupiter, I should say I am left!

"Can you suggest a good book for me to take with me when I go on my vacation?" asked the Old Fogy.

"Yes," replied the Grouch. "Be sure to take your pocketbook."

"I wonder if she does?" mused the Cheerful Idiot.

"You wonder if who does what?" asked the Wise Guy.

"Why, when a sailor dies, I wonder if his widow wears sea weeds!" replied the Cheerful Idiot.

The stingiest man was scoring a hired man for his extravagance in wanting to carry a lantern when going to call on his best girl.

"The idea!" he scoffed. "When I was courtin' I never carried no lantern; I went in the dark."

The hired man proceeded to fill the lantern. "Yes," he said sadly, "and look what you got."

"You are an hour late this morning, Sam," said an employer to his negro servant.

"Yes, sah, I know it, sah. I was kicked by a mule on my way, sah."

"That ought not to have detained you an hour, Sam."

"Well, you see, boss, it wouldn't have if he'd only kicked me in this direction, but he kicked me de other way, sah."

A mud-spattered dough-boy slouched into the "Y" hut where an entertainment was in progress and slumped into a front seat.

Firm, kindly, and efficient, a Y. M. C. A. man approached him, saying: "Sorry, buddy, but the entire front section is reserved for officers."

Wearily the youth rose.

"All right," he drawled. "But the one I just got back from wasn't."—The American Legion Weekly.

A red-headed boy applied for a job in a butcher shop. "How much will you give me?"

"Three dollars a week, but what can you do to make yourself useful around a butcher shop?"

"Anything."

"Well, in a pinch. Can you drive a chicken?"

"Not on $3 a week," said the boy.—U. S. Bulletin.

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

I have said that I would never be attorney for shipowners, until the seamen were shipowners. One of the purposes of my visit to Europe this summer is to acquire knowledge as to shipping conditions abroad and particularly to ascertain with what degree of success the seamen of Italy are operating ships.

Any seamen, who, with a view to becoming shipowners some time, are willing to form "a Seamen's Society for Savings" and will pledge to save one-fourth of their wages over their board and lodging per annum, said savings to be put in a depository that they themselves may select, please communicate with the undersigned.
